Two's Company, Three's a ?

by Bob Kemper

Before Juniata agrees on the number of new students it will accept in the upcoming year, the Institutional Research Department and the Admissions Office meet and try to predict the attrition rate among the upperclassmen; how many will be coming back next year. After they have decided on an estimate, they then determine how many freshmen will be accepted to fill classroom seats. Over the years this method has been rather successful in determining just how many students Juniata will accept. This year, however, something went wrong.

The attrition rate was considerably lower than had been predicted and a demographic survey predicted "bleak years" for college enrollment in the early and mid-1980's. This meant that even though Juniata really did not have the facilities to house all of those students already accepted, it needed them to remain financially sound through the 1980's. The college needed students, but had no room for them.

Since it was already too late to notify students that there was no longer room for them, the Administration decided to make room. The solution: Triple Occupancy. Although triple occupancy is quite common to several other colleges state-wide, it is still new to Juniata, so several other possibilities were discussed before triple occupancy was finally decided on as the best solution. Some of the other alternatives discussed were additional off-campus housing, motel rental, and the conversion of lounge space into bunkhouse-type apartments.

Because those students who had to live in triple rooms would be occupying rooms originally designed to house two people, the Housing Office offered incoming freshmen a chance to request double rooms, or pay less and live in a triple. This decision, however, had to be submitted before March 19, or the student was automatically assigned to a triple. As a result, many of those students who submitted requests for doubles are now living in triples simply because their request was not in by the deadline.

Despite the fact that many students are in triples against their will, the Housing Office

Student Government Begins Year

by Joan Gosnell

The first Student Government meeting was held last Wednesday in Lesher Lounge. The President for this year is Ken Anderson and the vice-president is Dale Wetzel. The Student Government office is in the basement of Ellis Hall.

First on the agenda was a discussion of the refrigerator problems. Treasurer Joe Orolin commented on the security problem. During this summer, many of the refrigerators had been used, two were stolen, and one was damaged. During the first week of Fall term, two more were stolen. The refrigerators were stored in the basement of the Old Gym which was not locked securely. The remaining 117 refrigerators are all rented to the student body.

Because there is a greater demand for refrigerators than the Student Government can supply, suggestions were made to see if it would be financially possible for Student Government to buy more. George Bojalad motioned for an investigation into the possibilities of buying more refrigerators.

The vending machine situation was discussed at length. Joy Sill motioned that Student Government should look into reinstating new machines in dorms where they were vandalized last year. Discussions on how to stop the vandalization of candy and soda machines were raised by Dean Tilden. Clearer information on how to receive refunds is one way discussed to prevent destruction of machines. To

U.S. Intervention Ruled Out

Late last week President Carter ruled out direct U.S. military intervention in Cuba to oust Soviet combat troops from the island, but has readied other options to deal with the problem according to White House officials.

In another move, the President ordered striking rail workers on the bankrupt Rock Island Line back to work for a 60 day cooling-off period.

The U.S. dollar tumbled to its lowest level since Nov. 1 1978 when gold soared to the $385 mark in Europe last week for the highest closing price in history.

Susan Twombly is the new Associate Dean of Student Services.

Student Services Expands

by Tammy Helwig

The opening of the 1979-1980 school year heralded many changes in the Student Services Department. Among the new personnel are Susan Twombly, Harry Crawford, and Daniel Helm.

Susan Twombly is filling the newly established position of Associate Dean of Student Services. Susan has a B.A. in history and an M.A. in counseling from SUNY at Plattsburgh. A large part of her duty centers around the supervision of the resident directors. The positions of resident directors were established on the basis of a need for more structure in the college community. The resident directors work with the resident assistants to maintain order in the dormitories.

Another new member of the Student Services Staff is Daniel Helm who will serve as athletic trainer and full time basketball coach. He holds an M.S. degree from Indiana University in physical education with emphasis on athletic training.

The new Security Director is Mr. Harry Crawford. Mr. Crawford has worked in public safety and security affairs for twenty-five years. His orientation towards the administration of his duties is humanistic and protective rather than punitive and vindictive.

The Freshmen Conference course has also been altered some this year. The course is designed

by Ima Poindexter

On September 7 and 8 the annual Juniata College Leadership Conference was held at Camp Blue Diamond. The conference, which is a leadership development exercise, was attended by 27 members of the Student Government and Center Board of Juniata College.

Dr. Ronald L. Cherry and Charles W. Wise, professor and associate professor of economics and business administration, respectively, conducted process and objective exercises and led discussions on leadership topics. These topics, coordinated by Student Government Vice-President Dale J. Wetzel '80, Center Board Chairperson Mindy Anderson '80, and Vice-Chairperson Val Vella '80, included activity and task implementation, goals and expectations, and representation through communication.

Also present at the conference were Dr. Arnold J. Tilden, dean of student services, Wayne Justham, director of programming, and Judi Gross '80, representing student members of trustee and faculty committees.

The executives of both Student Government and Center Board agreed that the Leadership Conference was an overwhelming success. Center Board Chairperson Mindy Anderson

The newly completed Humanities Center is now open for classes.

EDITORIAL:

When Upperclassmen returned to Juniata this fall several differences in the campus could be noticed immediately. Two rather obvious physical changes in the campus were the completion of the Humanities Center and the restoration of Founders Hall, which is currently underway. During the summer improvements were made inside several of the residential halls on campus. The floors in Cloister received new coats of paint and some walls within the dormitory were paneled. New curtains decorated the windows in Sherwood while bunk beds were moved into the rooms of the North Dorm complex. The bunk beds in North have proven to be a timely move in view of the large number of freshmen that now populate the college campus.

This is perhaps the most significant difference in the college this year. For the first time in many years the upperclassmen feel outnumbered.

While many of the changes caused some confusion at first, many students have adjusted and life goes on as usual. The relocation of faculty and administrative offices left many students dazed and confused during the first few days of classes, but Student Services is now considered a part of Ellis Hall, and a trip to the Registrar's Office in Good Hall is not at all disturbing.

It was the large freshman class that appeared to be the greatest threat in terms of upsetting the normal routine of the average Juniata student. Where would they house all the incoming students? How long will I have to wait in line before I sit down to eat my meal? These were questions that concerned many students over the summer months and the various Student Services Offices were doing their best to deal with the problem before the students returned in the fall.

For the most part the inconvenience that the large freshman class was capable of presenting has been kept to a minimum, if there is any real inconvenience at all. Although many freshmen found themselves living with two roommates instead of the normal number of one, according to Dr. Arnie Tilden, Dean of Student Services, his office hasn't received any complaints from students housed in triple occupancy rooms.

To the amazement of many, the lines which lead to the college dining facility are not totally unbearable. According to one upperclassman they seem to be moving at the same rate they did last year, if not faster. She was not certain however, if the speed with which the line moved could be attributed to students bypassing the daily engagement of hot dogs and meat patties, or if the freshmen just moved faster.

According to an East House resident the only thing that disturbed her on her return to school this year was the dark path to East Houses. Apparently the lights have not been working since the beginning of classes. And at the beginning of this week they were operating once again.

So far. . .So good.

Along Muddy Run

by Jeff Boulton

In retracing the past three years at Juniata, I have logically deduced that the most interesting thing about this potential Alma Mater is the people who, for whatever odd reasons, find themselves tangled up in what is unjokingly referred to as "Our Institution."

I guess it all began my first day on campus. I remember being astounded at the proportion of freshmen. There probably weren't as many as it seemed; upperclassmen don't show up until a week or so later, and the ones who were already here were merely going underground to avoid overeager, underripe whelps like me. In other words, freshmen are just no fun to party with. But I wondered why they would hide, in my naivete.

The very first freshman I was lucky enough to meet made even me want to hide. He stood about 6'4", husky, with confused, close-set eyes, a large nose, and a booming voice that seemed accustomed to the pronunciation of monosyllables. He trudged on over to me, taking leave of a conversation with someone who appeared quite anxious to run away. "Hi, I'm Tyke Boorhead! Ya wanna smoke some Columbian, some Hawaiian? Ya got any dope?"

I could hardly hear him, loud though he was, as the pain in my right hand drowned out all sound. The Tyke was shaking it. I looked for a nice wing to crawl under, but my parents had fled. I saw their car tearing down Moore St., and Mommy's door wasn't even closed yet!

Obviously, those two had much more sense than I had. The rest of the year, the Tyke had fun stealing bicycles, crashing parties, smashing doors, and injecting rubbing alcohol into leeches (that are found, incidentally, in Muddy Run) to see if they'd get drunk.

After my own escape from the Tyke, I began to wonder what to do the rest of the afternoon. Earlier, I had been joyously anticipating taking Mommy and Daddy to meet an important person in our Institution, the man whose mission it is to scrape up nickels and dimes and million-dollar grants, a man known as the Bread Finder. But people like him scared me when Mommy wasn't around, so I decided to go back to my room and blast some Kiss and Black Sabbath and act tough.

But for some reason my music didn't soothe me, and after about half an hour I realized it was because someone upstairs was blasting Queen so loud that his speakers were trying to lose their voices. Or maybe that was only Freddy Mercury? I went up to investigate.

The freshman Scaramouch in the room was Bryon the Siren Dodger, the smelly half-wit who had succeeded in driving out his roommate three days before classes could start. He was very large and smelled pretty rancid. He was drooling and his eyes were nearly bleeding. I judged this to be a result of the nearly-emptied fifth of Yankee Clipper he was cuddling and the odd smoke which rolled forth from his grimy ears. A long bong lay overturned, moistening the floor, and centerfolds papered the four walls.

As I watched, not daring to enter, an arrow vibrated rhythmically out of its perch among the antlers of a buck's head mounted above the turntable and hit the platter, point-down. The Dodger, still not seeing me, moved towards the phonograph and fell sprawling across the bong's puddle, out cold.

I figured I could talk to him some other time.

I wondered if I'd ever meet any "normal" JC students. Actually, I had already begun to do just that.

At supper I had the misfortune to meet yet another of my twisted classmates, Neil Zaney. He was a pink, corpulent, giggly idiot with a 150 IQ. His hobbies included vomiting, weeping and the murder of squirrels. Their pelts make neato book covers. Neil was considering running for Class President. He never led any campaigns, but he managed some pretty exciting things that year, such as watching late-nite cop flicks on TV, and pulling a rifle on his RA.

If you'd like to get acquainted with any of these intriguing personages, I'd advise against it. Besides they've moved on to light

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

I would like to congratulate the JC soccer team on the excellent effort shown in their first home match last Saturday. Despite the weather, quite a few students and a couple of faculty members were on hand to witness this moment in Juniata soccer history. Yet not a single administration or trustee representative deemed the occasion important enough for their presence. I can sleep easier at night knowing that the same situation will not occur at the opening of the JC swimming pool, whenever that is.

Students Speak

by Bill Fester
photographs by Robin Borthwick

This week's question was:
Do you consider the present tripling (three students to a double occupancy room) in North, Lesher, Sherwood and South Dorms, an adequate solution to the current housing shortages at Juniata?

It is a discredit to the administration that we even have a housing shortage in the first place. As far as tripling as a solution goes, I don't believe it is effective or conducive to studying.

Connie Warden ('81)

I feel that there should be adequate space available to each student who lives in a triple. Therefore, in reference to most of the rooms in the dorms in question, I think the present housing situation should be only a temporary solution and that alternative measures should be taken.

Janelle Brumbaugh ('81)

The only good thing about three people in a room, is that you meet more people. (Also the refrigerator costs less.)

Rachel Suri ('83)

I suppose it depends on whether or not you're a freshman. But I can't help but think the problem is not a shortage of housing as much as it's a case of over-enrollment. I hate to see three people cramped in one room.

Bill Kittleberger ('80)

Presently, I see few alternatives to meet the housing shortage. However for future considerations more on-campus housing is definitely needed. The administration knew well ahead of time the number of students accepted were way too many for Juniata's housing capacity. I see it as ridiculous to knowingly accept too many students for our capacity. It's unfair to incoming freshmen who should receive better treatment and facilities.

Fresh Tracks

Bob Dylan — Slow Train Coming
Columbia 36120

As always Bob Dylan changes and molds a new direction for his music, which is clearly apparent in his latest album Slow Train Coming. Although the overall tone of the LP is spiritual, the songs range from gospel-like ballads to up-tempo rock oriented selections. The lyrics combine religious inferences and beliefs, love and social commentary, and Dylan's voice seems less nasal and more energetic and expressive than on recent LP's.

The music itself is what first strikes the listener as evidence that a change has taken place. This is due in part by the Muscle Shoals Rhythm Section and Dire Straits guitarist and songwriter Mark Knopfler, whose distinct creole picking stands out. In general, the music is much simpler as it was in past Dylan albums like New Morning and John Wesley Harding.

Some of the best cuts on the album include Man Gave Names To All The Animals, Gotta Serve Somebody, When You Gonna Wake Up, and I Believe in You.

The switch to gospel/spiritual music has hurt people in the past in terms of record sales i.e. Leon Russell, but Slow Train Coming is selling just as strong as other Dylan albums. If anyone could make a drastic change such as this, Dylan could, and it's worth a listen. B plus.

Capitol 11963

Since his days with Montrose until his present solo act, Sammy Hagar has both the energy and ability to produce well rounded rock and roll. From slow ballads to frenetic rockers, Street Machine is easily his best album to date. B plus.

Offices Relocate

by Anne Mangan

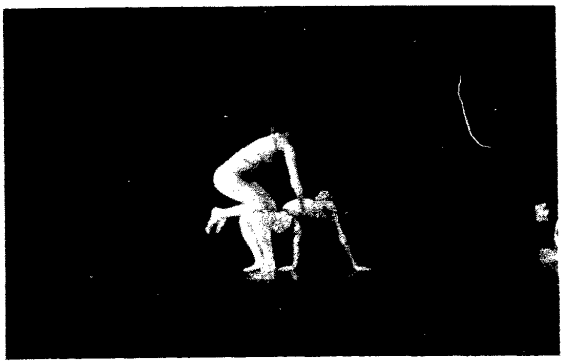
Renovations to Founders Hall, which began in June of this year, have forced the relocation of Juniata's Administrative offices to other buildings throughout the campus.

Financial Aid, Student Services and Housing Offices are temporarily located in the Gold and Green Rooms on the second floor of Ellis College Center. The Registrar's Office has settled into rooms 203 and 207 of Good Hall.

President Binder's Office is in Baker House and the Dean of Academic Affairs, Donald T. Hartman, can be found on the first floor of Quinter House.

Shoemaker Galleries currently houses Alumni and Public Relations offices in addition to Vice-president for Development, Foster Ulrich.

Tentatively, restoration of Founders Hall will be finished by December 1, allowing the Administrative offices to return to their original locations.



In the first Artist Series production of the season, The Daniel Lewis Repertory Company performed on the Oller Hall stage. (see article)

Artist Series Premiers

Last Tuesday evening the Daniel Lewis Repertory Company performed in Oller Hall. The group gave a performance lasting two hours opening with "Beethoven Trio," a light dance Mr. Lewis says was intended to create the mood. I found it rather tedious. The second number, "My Echo, My Shadow, and Me," dealt with three men in Chicago gangster suits and a lady in a glittery evening gown. The woman is abused and the story ends with her lying crumbled on the floor and the philanderer and his friends shrugging their shoulders as if to say, "What's wrong with her?"

"The Exiles" was about Adam and Eve. In the first part they are cast out of Eden and in the second they remember the "good times" they once enjoyed. "Nightspell" was a confusing piece. A man is visited in a dream by three figures wrapped in one long flowing shawl. In the end one of the figures decides to part company with his colleagues and remains with the dreamer.

My favorite piece was the last. It began with the stage totally dark and a sinister voice whispering in French. Suddenly a tall evil-looking woman clad in a stark black gown appears, her pale angry face lighted by a single light from above. She spoke in a loud, ringing voice of the murder of the angels, of knives slitting their silken throats. She vanished and lights flooded the stage. For the first time I was immersed in the production. I will not easily forget "And First They Slaughtered the Angels."

The dances portrayed the common emotional experiences of love," rejection, joy, and sorrow in a vivid manner. I was struck by the sensitivity and vitality of the dancers and the choreography in general.

claims that there have been few complaints. Those who did complain were believed to have done so without giving the lifestyle a chance. There have also been reported instances where students have "complimented" the department on its decision to have triples. These compliments have come from "creative" students who have found the best possible way to utilize the space in their rooms. When asked whether or not students were given information about how to go about filing a complaint, the Director of Housing, Mr. Jack Linetty, admitted that they had not. He added, however, that he felt it should have been obvious to students to complain to him since he is the "Director of Housing."

Although the administration is willing to admit to the shortcomings of triple occupancy, they still maintain that housing "did the best job possible to accommodate the overflow." New furniture was purchased so no student would have to do without desk or closet space, and a tuition cut was offered to all of those occupying triples. Because triple occupancy became mandatory for some this year, those living in triples will be given the option to draw either doubles or triples in the lottery next year.

CHET Opens Second Season

by Cathy Creswell

The Carriage House Experimental Theater at 613 Washington Street in Huntingdon offers students a chance to see local theater productions.

The objective of the Carriage House Experimental Theater (CHET) is to bring all types of art and cultures of art to the Huntingdon area. Their ultimate goal is to teach art and the appreciation of art in all areas to anyone interested.

The theater's season runs from March through November. The remaining productions for this season are "Company" for September, "Rumplestiltskin" for October, and "Lion in Winter" for November. The musical "Company" will be performed tonight through September 29th.

Tickets for opening night performances cost $2.50 for students and $3.50 for adults. On all other nights tickets cost $3.00 for students and $5.00 for adults. Tickets for senior citizens cost $2.50 any night.

Besides theater productions, Carriage House also holds workshops in the winter. In the past these workshops have included modern dance, jazz, rock, and open theater. Workshops for this winter have not yet been scheduled. They will be announced in November or December.

There is also an art gallery show held on the second Sunday of every month from 2:00 to 4:00 p.m. Right now oil paintings by Jim Salem are being displayed in the front windows at Carriage House. Films are also shown at Carriage House. The next film to be shown will be "The General" starring Buster Keaton on October 4. They are hoping to show some Charlie Chaplin films in the future.

And, in order to get as much use out of the building as possible, there will be small craft shows and rummage sales held there throughout the year.

The theater is always interested in having students try out for their plays or do technical work on the plays. Try-out dates are usually listed on the bulletin boards opposite the cafeteria lines. Students can also check with Mrs. Goering as to try-out schedules.

AL PACINO in DOG DAY AFTERNOON

TECHNICOLOR® From WARNER BROS. A WARNER COMMUNICATIONS COMPANY R

Out & About

by Chris Corry

Let me be honest. I know next to nothing about dance. The most I've ever seen of professional dance is two minutes worth of ballet while looking for M.A.S.H. and my personal experience consists of three weeks of square-dancing in fifth grade gym. In short, I am not knowledgable.

I attended the performance of the Daniel Lewis Dance Repertory last Tuesday with an open mind. I enjoyed myself and I was intrigued enough to overcome my personal fear of professionals and talk to the choreographer, Daniel Lewis. To my great relief I discovered that he was not in the least highbrow and he didn't even seem to mind my extreme ignorance. Daniel Lewis started dancing when he was five. Today he writes and directs because, as he says, it doesn't make your back ache. Dance is on the upswing. Recessions or depressions are always good for the arts; when the economic situation is bad, people want to see or hear something beautiful.

According to Lewis, Dance is becoming more acceptable for men, but women dancers still outnumber men dancers and the quality of women's dance is much higher. "If I hold auditions," Lewis explains, "I'll get maybe 375 women and 160 men."

Lewis never wants to give up his work. A painter can hang a painting in a museum and preserve it, but dance is different. You can choreograph a dance but there's no guarantee that it will be done the way you intended. Lewis wants to be right there to help it grow.

When he asked if I'd like to talk to the dancers I took a deep breath and said "sure." Shoving my hands down deep into my pockets for security, I followed him downstairs to the dressing room. My first thought was "They're human." I never realized that dancers even owned, much less wore, real clothes. I'd always assumed that they ate, slept, and lived in body suits and leotards. I fumbled with my notepad and threw the question: "What do you think about while you're dancing?" Eight people talked at once. I glued my eyes to the girl on my left, "It depends. Sometimes you concentrate on the steps, the count, on your performance. . ." Another girl interrupted, "It's best if you're so secure in your ability of the steps that you can concentrate on portraying the character." All of the dancers were aware of the audience and its reactions: "Oh sure you can hear people whispering, if someone coughs. . ." The energy volleying between the performers and the audience was felt to be very important.

Daniel Lewis was impressed with the performers we have lined up for the 79-80 Artist Series. They are: Oct. 13 — pianist Youri Egorov, Oct. 28 — guitarist William Mathews, Nov. 28 — The New England Brass Works, Jan. 30 — Macbeth, Feb. 10 — Connecticut Dance Theatre, March 9 — Lenox Quartet, and April 20 — folksinger Bill Crofut.

Egorov to Perform

by Spencer Steele

Youri Egorov might not be a household name, but at the rate he's going, it might not take him too long.

The twenty-five-year-old pianist began studying music at age six; after spending eleven years at the Kazan Conservatory (Kazan, U.S.S.R.), he began entering competitions — and began winning prizes. He won a prize at the Marguerite Long-Jacques Thibaud Competition in Paris at the age of seventeen. In 1974 he won a bronze medal in the Tchaikovsky International Piano Competition in Moscow.

Perhaps his most celebrated achievement, though, was in a competition where he didn't even make the finals. At the Van Cliburn Competition in Fort Worth, Texas in 1977, a year after he left Russia once and for all, Youri wasn't even named as one of the five finalists. But that didn't stop members of the audience from matching the first prize of $10,000 and giving it to Egorov to help finance his upcoming tours.

What makes Egorov any better than the dozens of excellent classical pianists in the world today? The critics agree that it is the communication with the audience that makes Egorov such a singular treat. He plays music with passion and understanding, not simply mechanical perfection. In Egorov's words, "It's my language. It's a natural way to talk to people."

By the way, in between his dates at Carnegie Hall, Egorov will be performing at Juniata on October 13 in Oller Hall. It will be the second Artist Series performance of the year and may well turn out to be the best. Tickets for the concert may be purchased at the door for $3.00, or season tickets may be bought for $5.00 at the Information desk until September 28.

Beeghly Undergoes Changes

by Lee Chottiner

The L.A. Beeghly Library has undergone some impressive changes this summer.

"This is the start of a number of changes that will occur over a period of years," states Director of Libraries Dr. David Eyman.

The most obvious change is the new floor arrangement. The book stacks have been moved around to create study areas on opposite ends of the library in order to keep the noise level down.

Along with the floor arrangement, new audio-visual equipment has been added to the library, thanks to a grant from the Pew Memorial Trust of Pittsburgh. This equipment makes it possible for students to listen to and view recorded material, something that could not be done in the library before.

The Pew Trust has also made possible the addition of a computer to the library that will improve the college computer system. It is Dr. Eyman's hope that students working with computers will now be able to complete more of their work at Beeghly.

The biggest change involves the addition of a Texas Instrument data terminal. It will be possible to dial by phone to this terminal from certain places on the campus. This terminal is experimental, but could be expanded if it proves successful.

Some minor changes include the decrease in book circulation time from the term's end to four weeks, with a three-dollar fine added to all over-due material. The periodical arrangements in both Beeghly Library and the Myer's Science Library have been changed to alphabetical order.

To keep the students updated on the changes, the library has printed a handbook, copies of which have been distributed.

Dr. Eyman is confident that these changes will greatly increase the library's usefulness, and is optimistic that the trend will continue.

Professors Added to Faculty

A number of new members have been added to the faculty, administration, and staff at Juniata College.

There are three assistant professors who are new to the scene. Kenneth O. Counselman, Assistant Professor of Education, received a B.S. degree from St. John's University and an M.A. degree from Claremont Graduate School. He is also working toward his Ph.D. at this time. James R. Donaldson, Assistant Professor of Economics and Business Administration, came to Juniata at the beginning of last year's spring term. He holds a master's degree in economics from the University of Akron. Karen Kimmel Lee, Assistant Professor of Sociology, received her master of social work degree from the Boston College Graduate School of Social Work, and a degree in sociology from Marietta College.

The new instructors are Terry A. Bahn, Mathematics and Computer Science; Thomas J. Baldino, Political Science; Janet B. Phillips, Education; and Kim Richardson, Education. All four of the new instructors are currently completing the requirements for their doctorates.

Other new administration members are: Thomas Ressler, Assistant Director of Public Relations; Michael B. Sexton, Admissions Counselor; and Donna L. Sopher, Admissions Counselor.

There are also several new part-time faculty members. Lucy Breslin and Darlene A. Lamey are instructors in Juniata's Freshman Composition program. Lois H. Thayer is an Instructional Assistant in music. Frank R. Zabriskie, an Adjunct Professor of Physics from Penn State University, is teaching Astronomy at Juniata.

The Athletics department has also received some new members. Daniel C. Helm is the Head Athletic Trainer and Assistant Basketball Coach. The three part-time assistant coaches are Jeff N. Bleamer for football, Angelo Ciarrocca for football, and Priscilla Grove Gibboney for volleyball.

The Juniata community cordially welcomes all the new faculty and administration members.

Stroman Discusses Book on the Air

HUNTINGDON — Dr. Duane F. Stroman, Juniata College professor of sociology and chairman of the department, was recently interviewed by Chicago radio station WIND about his second book, "The Quick Knife: Unnecessary Surgery U.S.A."

In his 192-page book, published this year by Kennikat Press, Dr. Stroman examines surgical practices in the United States, providing a wealth of documented and conclusive evidence that much of the surgery performed each year in America is "unnecessary."

Basing his questions on topics included in the book, WIND interviewer Gary Rowe asked Dr. Stroman how much unnecessary surgery is performed, why it is performed, what evidence there is of it being performed and how people can avoid unnecessary surgery.

Dr. Stroman observed that as much as 20 percent of all surgery conducted in the U.S. may be considered "unnecessary," with the percentage being even higher for Medicaid and Medicare patients whose hospital and doctor bills are "paid out of the public purse."

The reason, he noted, is that America is producing more surgeons than are needed — and, with American doctors making predominant use of the fee system, surgeons financially benefit by doing as much surgery as they think might be beneficial.

"Having an over-abundance of surgeons causes them to have to seek business," Dr. Stroman said, mentioning that "adding to the problem of over-supply is the fact that every American doctor is qualified to perform surgery — in theory, every U.S. doctor is a surgeon."

Another negative aspect of America's over-abundance of surgeons is that many are not able to perform operations frequently enough to keep their skills sharp, resulting in the compounded situation of "unnecessary" operations often being performed poorly, Dr. Stroman told the WIND interviewer. He added that this type of situation happens in particular with general practitioners and part-time surgeons.

"Another problem related to the over-abundance of surgeons is that doctors in America have traditionally refused regulation, with many of them even refusing to inform on other doctors' poor medical practices," the Juniata professor explained.

"Evidence of unnecessary surgery abounds, especially in the case of tonsillectomies and hysterectomies.

"Tonsillectomies and hysterectomies often can be considered 'ritual' or 'fad' operations, and as such, their value to the patient is often very questionable indeed," he continued.

Unnecessary surgery could be reduced, Dr. Stroman stressed, if patients were to take several actions, ranging from seeking second consultations to advocating that all surgeons and doctors be salaried.

New Approach to Damage Problems

by Heather MacCrindle

A new approach has been developed this past summer to help battle the problem of damage to resident halls at Juniata. Known as the "Damage Task Force" its members include Arny Tilden, Director of Student Services; Jack Linetty, Director of Housing; James Quinlin, Director of the Physical Plant; trustee Joe Good; Ken Anderson, President of Student Government; selected faculty, and concerned alumni.

Confronted with a "two prong problem" Arny Tilden confesses that the college has fallen behind in its renovation of residence halls and is now desperately trying to "catch-up." "If the dorms and lounges look like they've been improved, students will naturally respect them more."

The Task Force has implemented several revised controls of student discipline and is trying to promote attitudes and responsible behavior in new students.

Developed by the Student Affairs Council, a new policy to control vandalism is in effect. Students may be fined from $100 to $250 for the first act of damage and face possible expulsion for a second offense. In the last two years 48 students have been tried according to this policy.

This year's alcohol policy revision is also an attempt to restrict the irresponsible behavior associated with drinking. This too was originated by the Student Affairs Council and is the responsibility of the R.A.'s to impose. The basis for the restriction on kegs during the week is that bottles offer "a logical stopping point, while alcohol in kegs is always readily available," says Arny Tilden.

Because of "budget" problems, many hall lounges have not gotten new furniture for a while. However, new lounge furniture is now ordered to arrive in January that will brighten-up several lounges. This stain-proof, immobile furniture will be like that found in many other colleges and will solve the problem of "missing" lounge chairs.

A professional Security Director is also on order this year who is better trained in dealing with college campus problems and investigative tactics for vandalism control.

During Freshmen Orientation and continuing throughout the Freshmen Conference Program, student attitudes about damage control and alcohol are being explored. Realizing that 92% of all college students have decided previous to their freshman year whether to use alcohol, the conferences will center themselves around the fact that students must live up to their decisions. This program developed by CASE (Committee on Alcohol Study and Education) hopes to put incoming students in touch with their values and help them make informed decisions on the effects of alcohol socially and physiologically.

Freshmen Orientation also emphasized the college's increased concern with damage through student questionnaires. Asked to rank vandalism acts of varying severity students offered the "Damage Task Force" insights to student ideas.

One result of this survey will arrive in a week or two. That is the purchase of fire extinguisher covers to prevent the misuse of this life-saving equipment. If opened these doors respond with a loud alarm. To be installed in Cloister and North Halls this precaution will undoubtedly cut down on fire extinguisher "pranks."

receive a refund, go either to the information desk in Ellis or to the dorm senator. Both refunds will not be immediate but will be given by the next day. The machines are rented by Student Government for the students, and Student Government receives the revenues from the machines.

Rick Gibboney, the elected senator from Northeast, is now living in East and is ineligible to serve for Northeast. Doug Klepfer, who ran for East last year but is living in Northeast, was unanimously approved for senator from Northeast.

Other topics discussed at the meeting included possible bike racks near Tussey-Terrace Lounge and the lack of study space in dorms. Conversion of Tussey-Terrace mat room was mentioned as a study room. Student Government is also planning to have pictures of each senator above the post office boxes similar to the RA photos.

stated, "The conference was a very productive lesson in leadership roles and tactics. Lines of responsibility which were formerly vague are now clear and concise."

Ken Anderson '80, president of Student Government pointed out, "The ultimate goals of Center Board and Student Government are synonymous; to enhance the quality of student life. By coordinating efforts of Student Government, Center Board, resident assistants, and the newly appointed resident directors, that goal should be easily attainable."

Both Dr. Tilden and Justham also expressed satisfaction with the success of the program. Justham commented, "This conference is an excellent example of students working for the benefit of all Juniata students."

Go Take A Hike!

by Hilaire Veith

Juniata College's Outing Service, Laughing Busch Enterprises, is a non-profit organization which provides adequate means for outdoor recreation. They rent out to the entire college community. Their resources include not only equipment such as packs, tents, canoes, cross-country skis, and cookware, but valuable information on "outdoor lore."

Anything you need to know about trails, waterways, and campgrounds in the local and state-wide areas, can be found by going to the office of the Outing Service located next to the bookstore in the basement of Ellis Hall.

A great deal of effort has been put into making the Outing Service, in existence for only one year, a success. The credit for this goes to many, and especially the two present directors of Laughing Busch; Dan Brilhart and Jeff Taylor. Several students interested in the need for outdoor recreation began the service to provide the adequate equipment to suit those purposes. They felt students should take advantage of the surrounding area.

The Outing Service is hoping more people will become aware of what they have to offer, which includes the recent addition of seven new packages of Trak cross-country skis. The skis, purchased from a ski shop owned by a Juniata College alumnus, are no-wax and durable. Unlike last year, rental of these skis is not permitted to inexperienced skiers. Beginners will be required to participate in a free instruction lesson provided by members of the Outing Service. This is being done not only for the protection of their investment, but for the safety of the skiers themselves.

The money the Outing Service earns is spent solely on making it a better service by purchasing high-quality equipment, and being able to provide low-rental prices. The members also take an active hand in trying to find enjoyable methods for earning this money, one of which is coffeehouses.

The first of these will be presented September 28 at 9:30 in the Catharsis Lounge of Sherwood Hall, where the talents of Dan Brilhart, Glenn Beasley, Andy Jones, Jeff Lyons, and Marcia Rhoads will be exhibited. All are invited to attend, not only to help raise money for the Outing Service, but for their own personal enjoyment. The members of the Outing Service hope not only for the success of the coffeehouse, but for the continued success of the service. As one of its directors, Dan Brilhart stated, "We'd like to thank all the people who appreciated our service last year, and we hope that they, along with others will make use of the Outing Service again this year."

The Outing Service is there for the entire Juniata Community to take advantage of. Their existence is for your benefit, so take the time to stop down and find out what it's all about. Their sole purpose, as Jeff Taylor so aptly put it, is to provide a good time.

especially to improve the student's POE. The operation of the Self Directed Search was taught to all interested faculty members involved in teaching Freshmen Conference. A segment of the course will be devoted to alcohol education in order to help the students see their own feelings and morals concerning alcohol use. Also, Freshmen Conference leaders have the option of dealing with the resident assistants directly in order to bring students and faculty together. To add another bridge between faculty and students, the staff has developed the Hall Associates Program. This is a group of faculty members who have taken upon themselves the task of trying to improve dormitory life by promoting more programs for the students to participate in.

In conclusion, the main priority of the Juniata Student Service Department is to structure the college community in a way that is stimulating to students both mentally and physically and to promote a positive repertoire between students and faculty.

up the lives of other people in other places: The Tyke left after some problems with the Huntingdon Police; the Dodger has continued eluding the Law and is currently working on the railroads in southeast Pa.; and Zaney is now inhabiting the new wing of his parents' house, growing intoxicating plants for decoration, having flunked out of Juniata College.

But don't be bummed out! The Bread Finder's streamlined Admissions Office is busily scrounging up fresh replacements and adding their tuition fees to next year's budgets. After all, it's the INDIVIDUALS who count in our institution!

JC Potential Hiding?

by Rob Morris

Those promising pre-season predictions went up in smoke the past two weekends as Juniata football team dropped their first couple games. The home opener loss to Westminster was followed by a disappointing defeat to Albright, 10-7.

In Juniata's only night game of the year at Albright, neither team distinguished itself, and final stats showed how even the game was, on the field and scoreboard. Total offense figures for the teams were similar, but the story lies in the coaching. Albright passed only five times, playing a mistake-free, grind-'em-down game. Juniata attempted 30 passes, completing twelve, resulting in nine first downs, as many as Albright had totally. Once again the offensive leader for Juniata was Dwayne Rideout, rushing for 78 yards on 18 carries. Ed Yablonski chipped in by catching five passes for 63 yards. On defense, Larry Shepard and Dave Fahey combined for 26 tackles (15 and 11) to hold Albright to only one touchdown on their home field. Unfortunately a 36-yd. field goal in the first quarter by Albright stood up all the way and dropped JC to a 0-2 record.

The loss followed upon the heels of a 20-14 defeat at the hands of Westminster. In that game, Juniata dominated the first three quarters, building a 14-0 lead. But as the defense tired, the Titans climbed back with 20 points to upset JC in their home opener.

Next week the Indians travel to Gettysburg, always a tough opponent. However, the Bullets scored only 6 points in their first two games and could provide the turnaround Juniata obviously needs. Here's hoping that the potential on paper surfaces for Coach Rossi this coming Saturday.

Soccer Still Searching

by Cathy Oliver

Taking quick advantage of a corner-kick situation, the Lycoming soccer team scored their third goal to take a 3-2 lead, which stood up and handed Juniata its first home defeat of the season.

The victory was a result of a fast-paced game with the two teams trading off goals. Lycoming started off the scoring with a goal twelve minutes into the first half (each half being 45 minutes long). A quick ten seconds later, Juniata's Dave Mattern knotted the score with a low, hard shot from outside the 18-yard marker. As well as being their first goal of the game, this was also the first goal in Juniata varsity soccer history.

The second half started with Lycoming holding a 2-1 advantage and the Indians pushing for a goal. The scoring opportunity came when JC's Brian Bullock was tripped in Lycoming's penalty area, thus awarding a penalty shot to Juniata. Fullback Jake Sherk, chosen by Coach Jaeger to take the shot, beat the Lycoming goalie with a well-placed kick, low and in the corner. The game was tied for only a few more moments, as Lycoming scored its third goal which remained unanswered by a tired Indian team.

Outstanding play was seen on the part of fullback Jake Sherk who led the JC defense in frustrating a highly offensive-minded Lycoming team. The Warriors' offensive style of play feeding the forwards from midfield and pushing down the sidelines, was also handily thwarted by goalie Allen Schiff and his second-half replacement freshman Chris Kanaskie.

Saturday's game was the third in the season for the soccer team. In their previous game against Lebanon Valley, the Juniata squad tried out new play strategies, and suffered a 2-0 loss due to a pair of fluke goals.

This is the first year Juniata has fielded a varsity soccer team, and consists of 8 seniors, 4 juniors, 4 sophs, 8 freshmen, and a ton of motivation. The team's coach is Professor Klaus Jaeger, who teaches at Juniata, and who was the Soccer Club advisor in the past.

Now that Juniata soccer is a varsity sport, the team needs and appreciates all the support it gets from the students and fans, so come out on Wednesday, October 4, as Juniata takes on Messiah and see one of America's fastest growing sports right in your backyard.

Veterans Open Stick Season

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

A young veteran team, molded by a three-year coach, has helped the Juniata field hockey team dart out to an early 1-0-1 record for the 1979 season.

The Tribe still uses a 4-2-3-1-1 set-up, and is more comfortable with it now. They have gained the offensive punch to partner with the defense that was so impressive last season. And with 8 of 11 starters back from last year, the potential exists for a strong showing from the blue and gold of College Hill.

Wednesday, September 19 was probably a day that the Bobkittens of Frostburg will never forget. That was the day that the Indians showed their opponents how to really play field hockey. The game was perhaps the best ever played by a JC field hockey team. The girls had control throughout the contest and played well both offensively and defensively.

Lisa Masood scored the first JC goal, seventeen minutes into the first half, and that was good for a 1-0 half time lead. The offensive weapon was unleashed early after the break with Marj Porter finding the goal only two minutes into the half. Eleven minutes later, Ms. Porter scored again. Bonnie Cieslar ended the Indian attack with only eight minutes left to play. JC had their first victory by a 4-0 score.

The Tribe hit on 50% of their attempts as they managed only 8 shots on goal. The Bobkittens, however, only had 3 shots on goal. The jay-vee contest ended in a 0-0 tie. JC was held to 4 shots on goal, while their opponents had 11.

On Saturday, Western Maryland tried their luck against the plucky Indian team, but left College Hill with a 1-1 tie. Western Maryland is one of the four schools in Juniata's division; Dickinson and Gettysburg are the other two. The top team in each of the four divisions will advance to MAC championship play.

Western Maryland scored first, just three minutes into the game and that seemed to shake the JC stickwomen's confidence. Marj Porter came up with the solo Indian score midway into the second half.

Once again the Tribe only managed eight shots on goal and held Western Maryland to just four. The jay-vee team dropped their record to 0-1-1 following a 3-1 defeat. Sandy Shultz had the single goal for the Indians near the end of the first half.

Coach Nancy Latimore is quite optimistic about the season. "If we play up to our potential, as we did against Frostburg last Wednesday, we should have a victorious season. We're a veteran team with some good, young players, and more depth than we've probably ever had at Juniata." The next contest for the JC field hockey team is Saturday at Messiah.

Debbie Spillaine mixes it up as teammates watch on.

Volleyball Begins Season

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Long hours of practice, plus hard work, plus lots of talent equals success, is the formula used by "Larry's Ladies," Juniata's third year varsity volleyball team. Under Coach Larry Bock, the Tribe has achieved an enviable 31-7 record and third and second place finishes in MAC championship play.

In addition to six returning letterwomen, the Indians found plenty of talent in their new freshmen players: Claudia Tweardy from Abbotstown is a setter who was second team All State last year at Spring Grove High School; Sue Barker of Dover is a hitter with good ball handling and defensive abilities; and Sue MacLachlan from Weston, Connecticut is perhaps the hardest hitter on the team.

The Indians also acquired an assistant coach during the off-season. Former player and captain Priscilla Grove Gibboney works with the setters and is in charge of the second team.

Someone seeing this team in action, with its improved serves and scrappy back-line defense, could wonder what would hold this team down. Well, the answer is simple enough — the schedule. The College Hill Gang has 21 matches, only four of which are at home. Also there are three back-to-back matches and three tournaments: the Mansfield Invitational, the York quadrangular, and the Washington College tournament. Some of the opponents at these tournaments will be Syracuse, Army, and Cornell.

"Larry's Ladies" already have a couple of victories this season. Penn State fell victim to the powerful Indians in a scrimmage and the Bison of Bucknell were defeated on Saturday, 3-0.

Ellen Crandall, middle blocker for the Nittany Lions, was first alternate to the U.S. team at the Pan-American games. After playing in the first game, she sat out most of the match. Having dropped the first game 15-2, the Tribe regrouped to win the match by 15-7, 15-11 scores.

Bucknell didn't put up much of a fight against the Indian attack, scoring 14 points during the entire match. The serves were a major factor in the 15-4 victory. JC looked even better in the second game and emerged with a 15-2 win. After starting slowly in the third game, "Larry's Ladies" relied on good receiving and passing to win 15-8.

Over all the defensive game was excellent with Julie George standing out with her serves, spikes, and blocks. The second team played good volleyball, winning 15-0, 12-15, 18-16.

The next contest for JC is tonight at the York tournament.

'83 Elections Held

by Anne Mangan

Last Tuesday in the lobby of Ellis College Center, the class of '83 voted for freshmen Senators and Steering Committee. By 9:00 p.m., ballots were tallied and the results were final: a five member Steering Committee and three Senators were elected.

The Steering Committee includes Pete Bartels, Suk Cho, Geoffrey Lynn, Lisa Nailor and Lynanne Schaeffer. James LeDane, Dave Thornton and Paula Whetstone are freshman Senators.

Though no meeting has yet been called for the new officers, Steering Committee member Jeff Lynn is anxious to begin. Lynn "wants to get rid of the apathy at Juniata. Students complain a lot but don't want to do anything about the problems."

Pete Bartels agrees: "People sit back and complain but want someone else to do all the work. I just want to get more people involved."

Congratulations are extended to all new freshman officers, in addition to the entire freshman class who may have broken a Juniata record when over 50 percent of the class cost a ballot in the elections. This figure surpasses not only many previous freshman elections, but last year's general election which involved the entire student body.

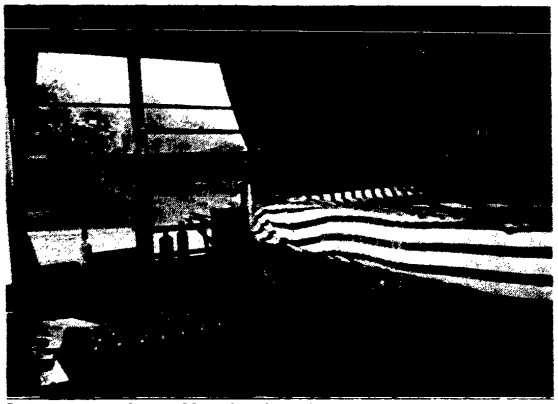
Triple Occupants Irate

by Bob Kemper

To the Admissions Office, Triple Occupancy represented the best possible solution to the housing problem: to those assigned to triples. Triple Occupancy is the housing problem. For the administration there is an allegiance to the institution: it needs more students now so that it will be able to survive the "bleak years" predicted to it in the 1980's. For students forced to live in triples, however, there is no allegiance to the school. The majority are not interested in the school's financial situation in the upcoming decade; they only care about having to live with two other people in a double room now. Many feel cheated. Some feel they have been lied to, and are not sure where to turn with their problems. "Who the h___ is Jack Linetty," some have replied when directed to the Housing Office.



Space presented a problem for those freshmen assigned to triple occupancy rooms this fall. This room is in Sherwood Hall. Photo by Tom Owen

The primary problem triple occupants have encountered is personality conflicts. It is hard enough to adjust to the habits and attitudes of one person, but many feel it is impossible to adapt to the lifestyles of two other people. Some have adjusted to one roommate, but not the other, while others find it difficult to live with either roommate. Other problems that have arisen between roommates are conflicting study habits. Again, it is easier to set up study schedules with one other individual than two.

Space is also a very big problem with students who are forced to live as triples in those rooms designed for doubles. Although extra drawer and desk space is provided, students must still share closet space, and some had to remove the third desk because

SG Endorses Proposed Sports Complex

Last March, Student Government sponsored a petition urging action for the building of a new sports-recreational complex to include a swimming pool, more raquetball courts, and a new gym. On September 26, during the Student Government meeting, this new sports center was discussed. Mr. Berrier (Athletic Director), Mr. Alexander (Business Manager), and Mr. Ulrich (Vice President in charge of Development) presented the action taken so far on the Sports Complex and answered questions.

The proposed Sports Center has not yet been approved by the Board of Trustees. Architects have been making preliminary plans as approved by the Board, however. Besides a new pool, new raquetball courts, and another full-sized varsity court, the new Sports complex will include a weight training center, centralized coaches' offices, and a first aid center. This center would be used primarily for the IM program. The Varsity basketball games will still be played in Memorial Gym.

This new Sports Complex would be built next to Memorial Gym where Cloister's parking lot is located now. This new center will be larger than Memorial Gym. Memorial Gym will be renovated also with the new building of a gym. A new parking lot to facilitate Cloister will be built next to the new gym heading towards Sherwood.

This project will cost an estimated three million dollars. The funding will come from the trustees, the alumni, and various charitable foundations. An especially large single donation would be necessary for the funding. After groundbreaking, the center would take a projected eighteen months to complete.

Jeff Keffer asked Alexander if this project would detract from the campus' usual maintenance. Alexander replied with an emphatic, "No, it won't happen." He contains that usual maintenance would go on as usual. Nothing would be neglected.

This year, Juniata experienced a large increase in the number of freshmen, but trends indicate that a decline will be found in the near future. A point that was brought up was whether the new gym space will be wasted if enrollments go down as they are expected. The answer was an emphatic "no" because athletic facilities are inadequate now and they will continue to be inadequate even if the school population drops. When compared to other small private colleges such as Bucknell, Lycoming, or Susquehanna, Juniata's recreational facilities are deficient.

Refrigerators Swiped From Gym

by Mark Coakley

Juniata's Student Government Treasurer, Joe Orolin, announced last week that four refrigerators have been stolen from the Student Government supply. Student Government has been renting refrigerators to students for quite a few years, and this is one of the few occasions in which stealing has been evident. Of the 124 refrigerators originally leased by Student Government from Collegiate Products Inc., only two were lost prior to 1979. This year, though, four of the refrigerators have disappeared.

According to Mr. Orolin, 122 units were rented out and collected again last year, and all were accounted for during a check at the end of June. But it is apparent that sometime between the June check and the next check made on September 10th, two were stolen. Also revealed on September 10th was the fact that some of the refrigerators were used over the summer. Dale Wetzel, vice-president of Student Government stated that "all the units were cleaned and stacked three high last year, but this year we found some of them stacked four high, with a number of them being dirty and not completely defrosted."

Along with the two refrigerators stolen over the summer, two more were stolen in the process of passing them out this fall. Mr. Orolin said that "although we had thirteen left on Monday, September 10th, by Thursday we only had eleven."

As to the question of who is responsible, there is apparently no answer. The college does not feel that it is their responsibility. The storage space made available in the old gym was free, and no formal agreement was ever made. Orolin said, "Mr. Alexander told us that it was a cost of doing business." The cost of the stolen refrigerators will have to be absorbed by Student Government, because the insurance coverage is $1,000 deductible.

Presently pending in Student Government is a motion to obtain more refrigerators. But according to Orolin, "it doesn't seem to make sense to order more if we can't secure the ones we have." Mr. Orolin also said, "This is an option year for the contract, and if it is evaluated by Student Government to be too much of a cost, the service may have to be discontinued."

EDITORIAL:

As high school seniors scouting about for an institution of higher education many of you were no doubt impressed with Juniata's all inclusive fee. Many friends who were already enrolled in state or private colleges throughout the Northeastern states had probably warned you about institutions that practiced an a la carte system of college payments. That is once you've paid for your room, board and tuition it's a dollar here, a dollar there and several more dollars everywhere just so you can remain enrolled in the institution long enough to receive your diploma.

Now, the "all inclusive fee" . . . that sounded very attractive. Yet, leafing through the current edition of the Juniata College Catalog we discover that the "all inclusive fee" is not all it's hyped up to be. According to the above publication the general fee is applied to "regular instructional costs; use of Juniata's Library, computer and instructional facilities, including energy costs; academic services; maintenance and other operational costs." The fee may also cover ". . . numerous campus social activities (whatever they might be) ". . . most of the admission charge to designated College-sponsored cultural programs. . ."

Other special and occasional fees one might incur during his/her four years at the institution are: Application Fee, Chemistry Lab Fees, Graduation Fee, Placement Center Credential Fee, Senior Profile Book Fee, and the Transcription Fee.

Another "special and occasional fee" that a student might pay for is the vehicle registration fee, or the fee that allows one to park his/her car on campus. This fee is not mentioned in the catalog section under "special and occasional fees." Instead this is listed under student "services:" ". . . Residents and non-resident students are permitted to maintain cars . . . on campus with proper registration . . . Parking spaces are assigned . . ." The proper registration is $5.

And what exactly does this $5 buy you? It is obvious in a Chem Lab Fee the cost covers the expense of the chemicals. However, a motor vehicle owner is not assigned a parking space (as the catalog states) and is many times left without parking facilities near the dorm (indicative of the situation in the Sherwood-North dorm area) and security is questionable, therefore, what exactly does the $5 fee cover?

Perhaps it covers painting lines on those lots that are paved every few years, or the construction cost of speed bumps, or more believably the cost of the sticker, so they do not know who has paid so they can send them lots of bills stuffed in envelopes in hopes that they will break down and pay for this "service."

Are there different personalities that are sort of affixed to each campus housing facility? Like, is Lesher different from Terrace? Is the Cloister different from Sherwood or the East Houses? Even with these new Resident Disciplinarians, I think each dorm will eventually develop its personality again this year.

The Cloister has a head start on the rest of the campus because it is the scene of the Storming of the Arch. This mentality lives on through the year in the air around the Cloister. Just walk through the building (if you dare) sometime with a clear, perky nose — it's an unforgettable array of aromas and stenches.

You know, in cold or rainy weather people will walk from room 333 Tussey the whole way around to the Sherwood Lounge without setting foot outside for more than two seconds. It's like some snazzy habitrail routine.

Not so in the CLoister. First off, people avoid the place. It's not a nice, normal Habitrail; it's more like a burrow or a den, all twisted, dirty, and smelly. Just like the creatures who live there. A different breed from the rest of the campus, yet basically the same.

Everybody in the Cloister is on drugs about 95 percent of the time. That's why I moved out of it. It's a haven for loonies. They can't handle living in the other dorms, so they hide out in the Cloister. We used to bait the real loons, get them to give us a show. It got to be contagious, and sooner or later somebody else always went wacko. By the end of the year it was sort of a competition to see who could be the most absurd, ludicrous, crass, and crude. CRUDE was the greatest.

We had a good number of snot-pukin' tequila parties. At one of these, John decided his sheets were too dirty, so he burned them. When the room got filled with smoke he dragged them down the stairs out into the snow, leaving a trail of smoldering linen behind him. Silly boy.

His drunken roommate later knocked the emergency light off the wall, smashing the wet-cell battery all over the floor. At 4:00 a.m. it is not fun to soak battery acid off the floor with a very old mop. It stings your bare feet, too, we found.

Broken windows are a drag, too, especially when it's in the hall doorway and it's the second time Byron punched through the glass and wires, leaving blood everywhere before he went into his normal drunken stupor. And when squirrels' entrails fill both sinks and clog both drains, you really get a chuckle at 7:30 a.m. It's even funnier when the squirrels were cleaned the afternoon before.

One fellow Cloisterite put his hamster Irving into his bong and had what he proclaimed to be the "World's First Rodent-Filtered Water-Pipe." Preppie bought Irving and his cage for $8.00; not because he wanted a hamster but because he was kind to animals. The next year he moved to North West, because he didn't fit in at

SG Office Hours

The Juniata College Student Government has established the following office hours: Monday through Friday, every week from 12:30 to 3:00 p.m. Students are encouraged to stop by the office located in the basement of Ellis College Center across the hall from the Outing Service Office, to discuss any concerns they might have with their student representatives.

Letters

"The Juniatian" welcomes letters from our readers. Letters should not exceed 350 words and must be received the Monday before the date of publication. All letters are subject to condensation by "The Juniatian" for space reasons. Anonymous letters will not be considered for publication.

Students Speak

This week's question was:

Should a new gymnasium be built here at Juniata, would you be in favor of compulsory physical education as is presently required at all state colleges?

No. I think that physical fitness is a responsibility of each individual and not of the school. The school should just provide adequate gymnasium facilities which the students can use as they choose.

Vicki Lynch ('81)

Yes, I feel a new gym would be beneficial to the student body although compulsory physical education is foolish because the I.M.'s are being fully utilized. Besides, those people that want to can get into a physical activity, those that don't want to don't have to.

Russ Geiger ('81)

Yes, I think a new gymnasium should be built but serious consideration about its facilities such as a swimming pool should be studied further. I also think the college should offer a physical education class worth a credit, but should not have physical education as a requirement.

Rick Schwartz ('82)

I would be in favor of compulsory physical education for everyone unless they were involved in a sport that particular term. The exercise of one's body is as important to growth as is the exercise of one's mind.

Julie George ('80)

No. By the time a student reaches college he should have the right to choose whether or not to participate in some physical activity. The intramural program provides the opportunity for interested students to participate. Compulsory phys-ed seems too much like high school.

Led Zeppelin — In Through The Out Door

Swan Song — 16002

In Through The Out Door is the much overdue ninth album released by Led Zeppelin, and it seems as though the long wait has paid off. Many changes have taken place during the three and a half years since their last album of new material, Presence, was released in 1976. Although these changes are quite obvious to the listener, they seem to have little or no effect on the album's sales. Upon release the LP started at No. 10 on Billboard's Top 100 album chart, and is continually rising.

Side one of the album begins with In The Evening, a mid-tempo song employing the best of Jimmy Page's virtuoso guitar playing. South Bound Saurez, is a more up-tempo song with Robert Plant's powerful vocals becoming apparent along with John Paul Jones' energetic keyboards. Fool In The Rain is probably the best cut on the album with forceful instrumentation and just a touch of Latin influence. Hot Dog concludes side one and exposes the influence Ragtime and Country music has had on the band.

Side two begins with Carouselambra, a bluesy piece with low droning bass riffs somewhat similar to that of What Is and What Should Never Be on their second LP. All My Love is a slower, romantically inspired tune with articulate guitar work and John Bonham's frenetic percussion. I'm Gonna Crawl, concludes the album and is probably the most powerful blues pieces the band has ever done. With an orchestrated intro, smooth-flowing rhythms and possibly Plant's most powerful vocals, it has all the impact of Dazed and Confused on their first LP.

All in all this latest Led Zep album ranks among their best. Although it will take a listen or two to become accustomed to the band's changes, it must be taken into consideration that almost four years have passed since their last new release. Led Zeppelin is one of the few all-time great rock and roll bands still withholding from the disgusting depths of disco, and there is no need to remind us that what we are listening to is truly rock and roll.

Rail Service Saved

Washington, D.C. — Widespread changes to Amtrak's nationwide rail passenger service took affect last Monday representing a major step in a route-restructuring process ordered by Congress in 1978. The revised route system Amtrak President Alan S. Boyd said, "will be leaner and more efficient, permitting better use of equipment to provide smoother more reliable service while providing a sound foundation for future growth."

The National Limited, between New York (and Washington) and Kansas City will no longer operate, although the National Limited's route between New York and Pittsburgh and between St. Louis and Kansas City, as noted, will continue to be served by other trains.

In Pennsylvania, stops at Lewistown, Huntingdon, and Greensburg, which have been served only by the National Limited, will be made by the Broadway Limited trains, which operate between New York (and Washington) and Chicago via Pittsburgh.

Detailed information on the system changes are available in a special Oct. 1 edition of Amtrak's system-wide timetables and from Amtrak's computerized, toll-free information and reservations system.

First Coffeehouse Successful

Laughing Busch Enterprises presented their first Coffeehouse of the year in the basement of Sherwood Lounge on Friday at 9:30 p.m.

Marcia Rhodes, the only female performer of the evening, led off her performance with a Jessie Winchester song. She then proceeded to do one of her favorites, "Mr. Bojangles," which was followed by a variety of other songs including one of James Taylor's songs from his new album, Flag. Her vocals combined with mellow guitar playing provided a relaxing sound, although the audience was somewhat overpowering when compared to the sound system used.

Dan Brilhart, guitarist and vocalist, offered the audience a different selection of songs, ranging from "Honky Tonk Blues," which included some finger-picking, to "Freight Train." Ed Mozer added his banjo-playing techniques and played some bluegrass tunes, such as "Mountain Dew" which produced some audience response. The combination of the banjo and guitar made an interesting sound, and Dan Brilhart's harmonica playing on Woodie Guthrie's "Ramblin' On" was an added effect.

Following the bluegrass style of music, Glenn Beasley returned to the mellow sounds of Bob Dylan's "Sara" and Joan Baez's "Diamonds and Rust." His guitar and vocal combination, as well as some harmonica playing, was different from the preceding two performers.

The last performers incited the audience, first by using electric guitars, and then by playing songs which were very much rock. Their performance included "Jazz Number," a song written by them, Eric Clapton's "Cocaine," Outlaws "Green Grass and High Tides," and Led Zeppelin's "Stairway to Heaven." Their version of each of these songs was an above par facsimile of the original artist's version.

Overall, the Coffeehouse is one way to socialize with friends and to check out the talent of fellow students.

Events Scheduled for Homecoming

by Tammy Helwig

It's Homecoming Weekend again, and there are many different events you won't want to miss. Saturday, beginning at 10:30 a.m. the annual Homecoming parade will set off from Miller's Hardware. From Miller's, the procession will go up Mifflin St. to 17th St., through the Humanities Complex to Moore St., to 18th St. through the campus, and finally to college field. The float competition was open to all classes and dorms this year, and prizes will be awarded of $100 for first, $50 for second, and $25 for third place. They will be judged by Dr. Ronald Cherry, Marsha Kyper, Pete Lehrer, Susan Twombly, and Dr. Harold Brumbaugh preceding the parade. The Grand Marshals are Dr. and Mrs. John Stauffer. All Homecoming nominees will participate in the parade and will ride in jeeps provided by Key Buick.

The Homecoming football game will begin at 1:30 p.m. with the Juniata Indians battling Susquehanna. During half-time, the Homecoming Queen will be crowned by Annalisa Mulhollen, the 1978 Homecoming Queen. The nominees this year are as follows: Freshmen — Lisa Osekowski, Elaine Gruver, Nancy Roach, and Claire Warmerdam; Sophomores — Kelly Walasik, Dana Taylor, Lori Keller, Cindy Rohm, and Connie Kilroy; Juniors — Joy Sill, Denise Pote, Betty Ann Sahlaney, and Nancy Law; Seniors — Mindy Anderson, Cindy Updegraft, Lisa Masood, Amy Bolt, and Betsy Boron.

Saturday evening, beginning at 8:15 p.m., there will be a concert in Oller Hall by Benny Benack and the Dodge Kids. The group, composed of college students, is led by trumpeter Benny Benack. The twelve instrumentalists and seven vocalists perform a wide selection of material which ranges from the jazz era to the 70's pop. You'll hear songs from the likes of Benny Goodman, Duke Ellington, the Carpenters, and the Beatles. Admission is $2.00 for all Juniata College students and $3.00 for the general public. To round off the weekend, South Dorm is sponsoring an Oktoberfest from 9:00 p.m. until 2:00 a.m. in the basement lounge. Tickets are $2.00.

News Briefs

Pope John Paul II began his Irish visit with an appeal to terrorists "to desist from hatred and violence and to repent." The Pope addressed more than 200,000 people in Drogheda, near the northern Ireland border and attempted to allay suspicions among northern Protestants of the Cathoiic church and himself.

Steps to bolster the dollar will be taken by American and West German Economic strategists. The two countries announced in Hamburg that they would intervene quickly in foreign-exchange markets to combat "unwarranted as well as erratic movements."

A House-Senate impasse jeopardized the funding of at least ten major Federal agencies as the end of the 1979 fiscal year approached. Differences between the two houses came to a head late Friday night when the Senate angrily refused 59 to 9 to ratify a House version of the appropriation bill that included restrictive abortion language and a 5.5 percent pay increase for senators, representatives, Federal judges and 21,000 senior federal officials. President Carter decided not to call the house back from a ten-day recess.

A hard-to-repair leak at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant is hindering clean-up activities and may cause a spillage of radioactive wastes Senate investigators said late last week. The staff of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) contended, however, that the radioactive water that is rapidly filling storage tanks at the plant will not be allowed to overflow.

the Cloister. What a whimp.

A couple of times I witnessed someone sneaking outside for a spew and coming back for more drinking. This was quite normal; people would brag about this.

So, why are people in the Cloister so different? Why should it be so different from the Habitrail lifestyle? Because some spirit resides there? Maybe Fred Binder has put a curse on it? Well, there's got to be something!

It has been suggested that it is because the Cloister is original in design, etc., etc. I think that's all a bunch of ca-ca. I just think Juniata wouldn't be the same without a place that's specially for the hard-core people. There's not even a real lounge there yet, so the Cloister people can only party in their rooms. It's right in the middle of campus, it's architecturally nicer, it's older and the Storming of the Arch is there, but it's still the people. I mean, if you're into "sex-and-drugs-and-rock-and-roll," have longish hair, your girlfriend has personality, you like a little privacy but you are not a Chem-nurd, and you get into being crazy sometimes, then the Cloister is the place for you.

I just hope the Cloister doesn't go downhill like the Storming of the Arch did this year. In case you didn't know, the Storming is when envious people from other dorms come over to the Cloister for a party. It had all the makings of a reasonably good Cloister party this year — plenty of eggs, tomatoes, garbage, cafeteria slop, booze, etc.; one guy was even taken to the hospital, I'll admit. And I saw one freshfool lying in an area of slop-mud, writhing and spewing. Nice show, but he wasn't even in the Storming, he just got so sick from the stench that he fell into the garbage pit with the rest of us. A good performance on his part, indeed; yet the Storming was an upsetting letdown.

Yet maybe the Cloister can get its act together again, anyway. That dorm has more personality and notoriety than any other place on campus. But if you're weak of heart, then you should not pass therein on a weekend. And if you're weak of stomach, just KEEP AWAY!!

Cloister: Dorm of the Year?

The Residential Life Committee of the Juniata College Student Government is presently preparing criteria for the newly devised "Dorm of The Year" competition. According to committee members George Bojalad, Cherise Kent and Joy Sill the competition was established in hopes of "fostering a sense of community within the confines of each dorm and at the same time increase participation in various college programs."

To date the following criteria and categories of competition have been established; points being awarded to each dormitory group in the areas of participation and if the event is a competitive one, those teams winning are awarded additional points. Categories are as follows: Mountain Day competitive games, Parent's Weekend Dorm Receptions, Christmas Decoration Contest, Bloodmobile Participation, Snow Sculpture competition, and Dorm Projects. Resident Assistants and Dorm Senators have been informed of the competition. The dormitory group with the most points at the end of the year will win an all expenses paid picnic.

The dorm groups are as follows — South, Lesher, Cloister-Mission House, Tussey-Terrace, Northeast-Northwest, Sherwood, Flory-Kline, Long-Miller.

The Cloister men have mobilized their programming forces and seem to be jumping ahead of other dorm groups for the title this year. Cloister dorm projects have included a reception for faculty and administrators last week, and a football match against Sherwood, Cloister emerging victorious. The Cloister Mummers will be marching in this weekend's Homecoming parade adding to their number of Dorm projects.

Triples

the extra chest of drawers was already taking up too much space. Space for personal belongings is also lacking in these triple rooms. Some have left behind televisions, chairs, and even some of the clothes they had planned to bring with them.

When students were informed that there would be triple occupancy they were shown a "Model room" in Lesher. The room seemed to have adequate space for two reasons. First, the rooms in Lesher are much larger than those in North and Sherwood where many were to reside, and, secondly, there was no extra chest of drawers to take up additional living space. While viewing the model students were told that triples would be set up proportionately to doubles. Many took this to mean that the individual student would have as much space to him — or herself in a triple as they would in a double. This, however, is not what the statement meant. What it did mean was that the extra student would be provided with a desk, a bed, and an extra chest of drawers — there would be no additional living space. It was under this impression that many students applied for triples.

As for the cut-off date for double occupancy, March 19, m students said they had heard a it for the first time in an ar published by the Juniatian (27). Others said that they wer told about it until they came t college for summer orienta three months after the dea expired. Still others claimed they did have their mone before the deadline and were assigned to triples. A s percentage of students were that if their money was n before the deadline they w have to live off-campus. T desiring to live off-can delayed payment and were as ed to triples on campus.

When asked if they c appreciate the school's poi view on the matter, some stu said yes, but still felt it was fair and inexcusable." Some that if they had heard the cir stances sooner they would made arrangements to a another college or unive where they would be guarant double room. When asked if felt living in a triple was wor tuition cut they were offered majority said no. Others we sure because they had noth compare their lifestyle w they only know what it is li live with three in a room.

HUNTINGDON — The circ stances climaxing in pianist Y Egorov's Oct. 13 Artist Series formance at Juniata Colleg considered to be the cult event of the season in Cer Pennsylvania — began 20 y ago in Kazan, a provincial ca in the U.S.S.R.

At that time, Egorov was years old and about to begin formal education under guidelines of the Soviet syst Unlike its American counterp the Soviet educational system tates intense specialization, for grade-schoolers, and Egor mother took him for testing a state conservatory in Kazan.

What Do You Think About?

by Rob Morris and Pat Conroy

Best of '79 baseball season — Pete Rose proved he was worth every bit of the money the Reds wouldn't pay him . . . wonder if Pete's enjoying watching them on TV now? The Expos must have forgotten to defrost their gloves committing eight errors in three games against the Pirates. By the way, when was the last time that none of the division champions repeated? The Mets and Braves ought to get together and try for fifth place next season . . . in the AL. The Dodgers and the Yankees get our votes for this year's "Fall on Your Face" award. One has to admit that the Cardinals and the Red Sox are stocked with hitters and hall-of-famers; all they have to do now is get their team ERA under 6.00.

Upcoming football season — NFL insiders say new rule change will allow Franco Harris to use a football equipped with handles. Will winning 26 in a row make up for Tampa Bay losing 26 in a row? And speaking of losers, out of the ten million people in New York City, you would think somebody told the Giants the football season started already. Did Nebraska know they were playing Penn State, not Kalamazoo, last weekend? To quelch rumors, Wayne Emerick did play against Gettysburg.

Basketball foresights — One wonders if Pat Frazier will recruit some female basketball players now that Ann Meyers broke the barrier; after all, where else but pro basketball can you make 50,000 smackers in two days. Rudy Tomjanovich makes more in the courts than on the court. Money should be collected to buy Larry O'Brien a game of monopoly, after he okayed the signing of Bill Walton to San Diego for practically the whole Southern part of California. It is an undeniable fact that last Friday night Sugar Ray Leonard did fight, and that Roberto Duran did win, and that it was not simulated animation. Our tears go off to Ernie Shavers who will have to fight some more to pay off his new $575,000 home.

HUNTINGDON — Ibrook Tower, assistant professor of music at Juniata College, served as the woodwind clinician for the recent Juniata Valley High School Band Camp, conducted in Mifflinburg.

Tower, who will be conducting one-day clinics on woodwind performance at Juniata Valley and other area high schools this year, described the experience as "very worthwhile and very rewarding."

Directing the band camp was Tim Flinchbaugh, the band director at Juniata Valley. Also participating was Juniata Valley's choral director, Sharon Sampsell, who worked with the color guard.

Ron Westbrook, drum major for the Tyrone Guards, served as the marching and show-design clinician, while the brass clinician was Larry Chauvenne, a music teacher for the Tussey Mountain School District.

The baton corps clinician for the band camp — which focused on marching and football music — was Cindee Flinchbaugh.

Hometown News

by Heather MacCrindle

Tired of writing home to Mom every week and spending 15¢ of your precious savings on stamps? Then do something special here at Juniata, something that makes you stand out from the crowd, and let Charles Pollock, Director of Public Relations know about it.

"No college does a better job than Juniata does," several large newspapers in the area are quoted as saying about the home town coverage Juniata students receive. This coverage "keeps the name of Juniata in front of the public," supports the Admissions and Development Departments, and "makes many parents and students happy."

The public relations office begins its job every year when Juniata students fill out their Student Directory card, listing their home town newspapers. Whenever a student does something newsworthy Charles Pollock rummages through huge file cabinets to find out the student's past history, accomplishments, family, and perhaps even a photo. A story is then written about the student and is sent to his home town paper which usually uses it as an example of a local student "making good."

Some students may live in a large metropolitan area and receive only a line or two in the Campus Corner section of their paper, while other student stories might be sent and published in several newspapers. The PR Department also has a Directory of Newspapers that lists the local papers and their coverage areas just in case a student did not fill this out on his Directory Card.

Stories are written about almost anything a student can do here at Juniata: make the Dean's List, be chosen as an Admissions tour guide, participate in the choir tour, have a part in a play, do independent research, or lead the Indian team in rushing.

If a group of students are involved in an event, the story will be sent to everyone's home town with red circles around only the names of whose who live there. "This, we hope, will prompt the town papers to contact Juniata for more information about a certain student to do a feature story," says Charles Pollock.

Then, in 1975, Egorov competed Belgium's Queen Elisabeth mpetition, also winning a prize. was at this time that he decided would like to leave the Soviet ion for good.

But that was not to be, at least t just then: Queen Elisabeth s preparing to visit the Soviet ion and it was decided that orov's defection at that time uld cause a personal emrrassment to her. Egorov turned, albeit reluctantly, to the pressive system of his meland.

However, Egorov's moment to fect came two years later, ile he was touring Italy. And, as ated by one of his friends, the ng pianist turned out to be te lucky.

Naively, he went to the Italian lice and asked that he be turned er to Dutch authorities for ylum, never realizing the great ssibility of being intercepted by e of Italy's many Communistrty officials. Fortunately for orov — and unfortunately for Soviets — the pianist happento encounter sympathetic lians, who escorted him safely local Dutch officials.

The Dutch granted asylum, but e Soviet Union did not give up on eir prize talent easily. Several nths after his defection, orov received a letter — in at appeared to be his mother's ndwriting — informing him t his father had died and that was needed at home. Egorov cided to ignore the letter — the ht decision, for Russian friends veling through Amsterdam er told him that his father was ve and that the family was fine. Egorov's critical acclaim in the S. began, ironically, when he led to win the 1977 Van Cliburn ernational Piano Competition, long the world's foremost nts of its kind. The dismayed dience promptly raised and arded him $10,000 — the uivalent of the top prize — and orov's free-world career began blossom.

Often compared to the young Vladimir Horowitz, Egorov made his official U.S. debut in New York City last December at Lincoln Center's Alice Tully Hall. He has been in great demand ever since.

Considered by music critics across the U.S. as "the best pianist of our time," Egorov says that he did not escape from Russia, but rather, from the Soviet system. "Individual freedom," he comments, "lets you do things that you would like to do and does not make you do only things that are required."

In Juniata's Oller Auditorium, at 8:15 p.m. on Oct. 13, Egorov will show Central Pennsylvanians why music critics are raving about his playing. Charming and individualistic, the shaggy-haired, 25-year-old defector uses music to express himself, playing in a style that is free and romantic, but always reflective of his intensive Russian technical training.

Egorov's appearance at Juniata is the second of eight 1979-80 Artist Series programs and is funded, in part, by the Ellis Humanities Series.

Other programs in the series will be presented by guitarist and lutanist William Matthews on Oct. 28; the New England Brass Works on Nov. 28; the Independent Eye's "Macbeth" on Jan. 30; the Connecticut Dance Theatre on Feb. 10; the Lenox Quartet on March 9; and folksinger Bill Crofut on April 20.

All performances will begin at 8:15 p.m. in Juniata's Oller Auditorium.

Juniata is still accepting season ticket orders for the 1979-80 Artist Series. Patron memberships, which include two reserved season tickets and a program listing, are available for contributions of $60 or more. A season ticket, priced at $20, provides general admission for one person to all programs and, for an additional $5, reserved seating (only until the 8:15 p.m. curtain time). Tickets to individual events in the series are $5 and can be purchased at the door the evening of the performance.

Ticket orders, including a return-addressed envelope and payment (checks should be made payable to Juniata College), should be sent to The Artist Series, Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Easy Money???

The Juniatian begins its football contest this week, and the Sports Editors are more than ready to take on the Juniata campus once again. The campus got the better of us last year, but there's a whole new crop of freshmen that we're ready to victimize. Here's the picks for this week: Rob Morris — Juniata, Houston, LSU, Penn State, Michigan State, Yale, Pittsburgh, San Diego, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, 31 points; Pat Conroy — Juniata, Houston, Florida, Penn State, Michigan, Yale, Cleveland, San Diego, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, 37 points.

All entries must be in by 12:00 on Saturday either in Juniatian office, or the contest box that will be placed in the foyer of Ellis Hall from Thursday on. Lotsa luck!

Football Contest Entry Form

Juniatian Football Contest Rules:

1. The object is to select the winners of the ten games to be played over the next weekend.
2. To make a selection merely circle the teams you pick to win. If you want to predict a tie circle both teams.
3. Each contestant is permitted only one entry per week.
4. The Juniatian will award a $10.00 prize. To win, a contestant must predict the highest number of winning teams, and this prediction must tie or surpass all of the Juniatian sports editors. In the event of a tie among contestants and/or sports editors for the highest winning team count, the total points estimates will be used as a tiebreaker. If a tie exists the prize money will be evenly distributed to the winners.
5. All entries must be submitted by noon Sarurday. The entry boxes are located in the hallway by the Juniatian office or in the Ellis Hall lobby.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Juniatian except those directly associated with the Juniatian.

Yablonski, Rideout Lead Indians to 28-14 win

by Doug Williams

The Juniata Indian offense that had laid dormant the past two weeks exploded last Saturday leading the football team to its first victory of the season. The Indians scored all their points in the first half and totally dominated winless Gettysburg.

On the second offensive play of the game DeWayne Rideout behind excellent blocking broke for 72 yards and a touchdown.

Before Gettysburg could regroup Mike Valdiserri made an outstanding catch off a Mike Nett pass and rambled 64 yards for another TD.

That was just the beginning as Juniata dominated on both offense and defense to breeze to the win. The offense was led by Nett who was 8 for 13 for 144 yards and 3 TDs. Ed Yablonski with 5 catches for 73 yards and 2 touchdowns, and Rideout who gained 164 yards on 23 carries with 1 TD.

Coach Rossi was surprised that the offense was able to run as effectively as they did. The key, he felt, was blocking. "They were a big strong football team, but we were blowing them off the ball. You could see that they lacked quickness." The coach was especially pleased with his fullbacks' blocking as well as the entire front line.

Once the running game proved so effective, the passing was able to open up, and everything clicked. Two more touchdowns were the result of sustained drives ending in TD passes to Yablonski.

While the offense was doing its job, the defense was forcing Gettysburg to run three plays and punt. With Larry Shepard's 21 tackles and Jim Zimmerman's 3 quarterback sacks setting the tone the defense allowed only 24 yards through the air and forced 7 punts.

Gettysburg's scores both came in the last quarter with the last one a result of a blocked punt. All in all it was total domination for Juniata.

Coach Rossi felt this win was very important. "We're banking on this game to be a turning point in the season. . . All the things we've told them (the team) they could do they finally did."

Next week the Indians meet Susquehanna in a Homecoming Game. There is a traditional rivalry between the two teams and the winner gets the Goalpost Trophy, a trophy recognized across the east, which has been in Juniata's possession for the last 7 years.

Susquehanna runs Wing-T offense and passes a lot so anything can happen. But if the offensive line blocks like they did last week Juniata's offense should continue rolling for a win.

JC Falls Against Crusaders

by Cathy Oliver

A fast-paced, high-scoring game of soccer ended with the Susquehanna Crusaders coming out on top to beat Juniata 8-3 in last Wednesday's second home game of the season. In one of their best games this year, the Indians held their own against an experienced Susquehanna team until late in the second half.

First-half play was strong on the part of both teams, with Juniata proving to be a challenge to a seasoned and confident Susquehanna squad. An impressive Juniata defense repeatedly drove back the Crusaders' talented offense. The JC offense was not idle, as they put in two goals for the Indians. Right halfback Marty Fitzpatrick was first to put the ball in the net for JC by heading a free kick past Susquehanna goalie Bob Otten. The next Juniata goal came from the foot of Captain Jim Angstadt who blasted a shot the goalie never even saw from outside the 18-yard marker.

Trailing 4-2 at the start of the second half, the Juniata team returned to the field ready to score some goals. The opening play found the Crusaders being outplayed by the Indians, until Susquehanna rallied to put in another Crusader goal. Juniata answered with one more goal that began with fullback John Andrews driving the ball up the left sideline. Carrying it all the way into Crusader territory, Andrews passed to JC's Brian Bullock who found the top righthand corner of the opponent's net with a perfect shot.

The Juniata team's strong performance was highlighted by exceptional play from Indians Ed Trowbridge and Dan "Hutch" Hutchinson. Freshman fullback Trowbridge was outstanding on defense as he consistently pushed the play back up the field. Playing near-perfect soccer, Soph Hutchinson was excellent in the defensive "sweeper" position and repeatedly provided the spark for the Juniata squad. The Indian net, although well tended by goalkeepers Kanaskie, Schiff and Infanti, could not slow the onslaught.

Every game this season has seen improvement in the game of the Juniata team. With hard practice and a determined style of play, the team has become a formidable opponent on the soccer field. If they continue to improve as they have been, their next game against Dickinson, at home on Oct. 8, should see a superior JC squad take the field.

JC fullback Jake Sherk intercepts Crusader pass in last Wednesday's game.

Stickwomen even

The Juniata field hockey team travelled to Messiah last Saturday and left with a disappointing 3-1 loss that evened their record at 1-1-1.

The Indians grabbed an early lead four minutes into the game when Marj Porter took a shot on goal from the left side and Lisa Masood rushed in from the right to score the goal. But from that point, the Messiah team dominated the game, largely due to their speed.

Seventeen minutes later, Messiah scored and the 1-1 tie stood until late in the second half. The last two Messiah goals came with 26 minutes gone and then with only one minute left to play.

There was a lot of pressure on the JC defense throughout the contest as Messiah was in scoring range during most of the game. Three Indian players can be credited with keeping the score as close as it was — Shawn Hansen, Barb Pearson, and Nanci Young. These stickwomen shut down the Messiah offense time after time and kept their opponents to just six shots on goal.

Spikers win, Now at 4-1

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Juniata's volleyball team is back on the winning track after dropping a match at the York quadrangular meet. The Indians record now stands at 4-1.

Susquehanna was the first team to venture into Memorial Gym this year and left College Hill with a 3-0 loss. The Crusaders never really challenged "Larry's Ladies" as they fell by 15-2, 15-2, 15-7 scores.

The Tribe left the following day for the four team meet at York College. York was the first opponent and the only spoiler. The match was characterized by bad serves, sets, and poor coverage by the lady Indians. JC didn't seem mentally prepared and lost 15-7, 15-9.

"Larry's Ladies" next faces tough competition at the Washington College tournament tomorrow and Saturday. Besides Washington, Juniata will face Franklin & Marshall, Essex, and Gauludet. Essex finished in the top ten in nationals for small schools last year, while Gauludet, a school for the deaf, beat Washington twice last year.

The Indians return home on Tuesday when they face the Red Flash of St. Francis in Memorial Gym at 8:00.

Events Set for Parents' Weekend

by Dale Wetzel

Close to 800 parents are expected to participate in Parents Weekend activities at Juniata College this Friday, Saturday and Sunday, October 19-21.

On Friday, visiting parents are invited to attend classes with their sons or daughters and to meet individual faculty members.

The Juniata College Band will offer a special Parents Weekend Concert on both Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall. The concert, entitled "Golden Trumpets, Slide Trombones, and Licorice Sticks," is directed by Professor Ibrook Tower and will feature such musical favorites as "Stars and Stripes Forever," "Strauss Waltz," "Lassus Trombones," and "The Sandpaper Ballet."

Registration for parents will be conducted from 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m. on Friday in the Shoemaker Galleries and 5 p.m.-8 p.m. in the Main Lobby of Ellis College Center. Registration on Saturday will also be conducted in the Main Lobby from 8 a.m.-8 p.m.

The Fine Arts committee of The Center Board will sponsor the third annual "Artists On The Hill" arts and crafts festival on Saturday. The festival will feature handicraft artists from Central Pennsylvania, as well as students and faculty, displaying their creations

Dana Challenge Met by Juniata

by Mike Ford

On September 26, 1978 Juniata College received a challenge from the Charles A. Dana Foundation, under the terms of which Juniata could receive a maximum grant of $50,000.

The main provisions of the challenge were as follows:

1) The Dana Foundation would match an increase in alumni gifts of $25,000 in 1978-79 (from 109,000 to 134,000) and dollar for dollar all additional gifts up to $13,000 for a maximum challenge of $38,000 (from 109,000 to 147,000).

2) The Dana Foundation would award Juniata College $2,000 per percent point of increase of alumni contributors in 1978-79 up to 6 percentage points for a maximum of $12,000. In 1977-78 44% (3010) the alumni solicited (6940) made gifts. 50% (3510) of those solicited (7020) in 1978-79 was the goal of the challenge.

3. The period of the challenge ended June 30, 1979.

With the goal to achieve this challenge, Juniata's Development Office set out to make the past year their best ever. Clay Pheasant, director of development, outlined their strategy as two-fold. First of all, they needed alumni gifts to receive the $8,000, and attempted to achieve this through mailing campaigners, visiting alumni, and increasing the membership of the Founder's Club to 1000 members. This club is made up of alumni who donate $100 or more, and Pheasant was happy to say that they were successful in increasing the club's membership from 922 to 1072 members. Secondly, to increase the percentage of alumni who never made a contribution, the Development Office conducted an extensive telephone campaign, enlisting the help of

by Jane Carothers

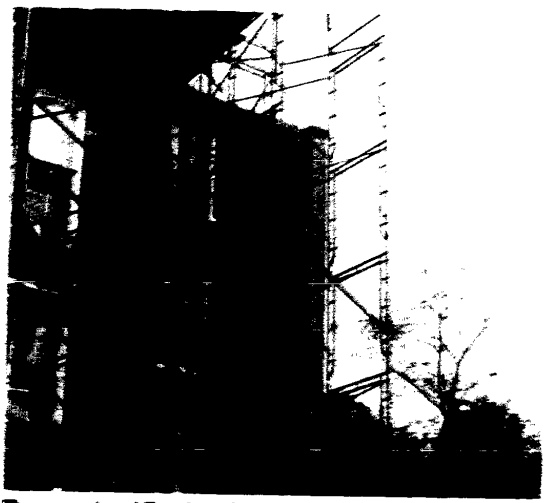
As a result of unexpected delays, the renovation of Founders' Hall will not be completed until the end of the year.

Begun in June, the work was scheduled to be completed by September 28. However, according to Bill Alexander, Business Manager, "For all practical purposes, we are not anticipating actually moving in until January." Alexander stated that the biggest "hold-up" involves the heat exchanger, an integral part of the new heating system which is being installed in the building. Unlike the old "live steam" system, in which the steam actually circulated through the radiators, the new system utilizes steam generated by the central boilers to heat water circulating through the radiators.

Structural work on the building has been basically completed. Alexander said, with the exception of the work on the roof, which is almost done. The plumbing and electrical systems in Founders' were redone; the pipes are insulated and metal conduits have been installed to protect the wiring. Ceilings on the main floor were lowered 2½ feet, and are protected by a 3-inch layer of insulation. Alexander feels that these measures, coupled with the closing off of the third and fourth floors in the building and the probable installation of storm windows, will result in "considerable savings energy-wise," although he was unable to estimate the cost or amount of these savings.

On the exterior of Founders', the bricks will be cleaned by a mixture of water and chemicals rather than sandblasting. Silicone will be applied to the bricks to make them more watertight and to prevent the absorption of moisture. Since the silicone treatment is not permanent, the process must be repeated every 4-5 years.

Alexander estimated that the total cost of the project will be between $350,000 and $395,000. The estimated figure includes architects' fees, and the cost of cleaning and treating the bricks and painting. According to Alexander, "The money to pay for Founders' Hall will be raised through a fund-raising effort — it will not be paid for out of students' funds." He stated further that some monies have been received from persons who were aware of the project, but that no specific fund-raising campaign had yet been launched.



The renovation of Founders' Hall began last June and will not be completed until the end of the year. (See article, page 1).

Pope Concludes Journey

Pope John Paul II concluded his pilgrimage of peace to the United States and Ireland and flew back to Rome last Sunday. His nine-day journey took him from bloody Ulster to the squalid ghetto of Harlem and to the Oval Office of the White House. To every stop he carried his supplications for love and peace and begged America to improve the lives of mankind's wretched. It is estimated that more than 8 million flocked to see him during his American visit.

A torrent of oil is still pouring into the Gulf of Mexico four months after an oil well in the Gulf blew out its fittings. Attempts by Mexican authorities and American contractors to cap the well appear to be foundering.

President Carter will announce his candidacy for a second term on December 4 and set off the following morning on a four-day nationwide fund-raising tour that is expected to yield some $2 million, campaign officials stated.

The nation's unemployment rate fell unexpectedly in September from 6 to 5.8 percent, giving Americans a reprieve from lay-offs that are still predicted to result from a weak economy.

EDITORIAL:

One of the nice aspects of Juniata's Homecoming Weekend is the returning alumni who visit campus. It's nice to see old friends and talk about old times.

One of the more distressing features of the weekend is to know that the college Center Board and the Office of Alumni Affairs sponsored a concert featuring Benny Benack and the Dodge Kids and very few alumni and students attended. The cost of the concert was approximately $2500, according to the Director of Alumni Affairs, David Kreider. While the cost of the concert is not extravagant it does become very costly when very few people are in attendance. As a matter of fact the sponsors lose money, as was the case with this production.

Perhaps the circumstances which surround the Homecoming concert should be examined to avert a similar situation in the future. There is some questions regarding the publicity of the event. To spend so much money on an event and then neglect to publicize it seems somewhat ludicrous. Although there was some advertising it did not appear until the week before the concert, and the bulk of the publicity did not materialize until a few days preceding the performance. When that kind of money is involved, and arrangements having taken place during the summer to stage the concert, lack of publicity appears to be sheer negligence on the part of the college Center Board.

It is always easy to point the finger of blame to some person or some organization, but perhaps the problem should be attacked from another angle. Maybe Homecoming entertainment should not be scheduled. It seems as if it is difficult, if not next to impossible to cater to the tastes of older alumni, younger alumni, and the students. No matter how you look at it the older alumni are not going to attend a concert featuring Pure Prairie League and students, no matter how much coaxing or advertising, will not be in the audience when the Johnny Mann Singers are on stage.

In the future the sponsors of such "risky" investments should think twice before they commit themselves. But if they do commit themselves they should follow through by at least publicizing the event in order to protect their investments.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Jeff Boulton

We all know that the Cloister is the most radical place on campus. This has been proven because there are no good, responsible Cloister druggies who can deny that everything printed about them was completely true. Actually, i only wrote about a fifth of it. (I'll drink to that!) Not only was it all true fact, but it continues on a daily basis, and the abuse we give them for doing those crude and contemptible things is heavily outweighed by the fun they have in doing them.

Cloisterites can take a good beating and still come out of it with the same confused grins they had to start with.

However, there are some people on this campus who can not take abuse. Freshmen and Cloister people have no choice; others aren't worth getting down on; still others hate abuse enough to endanger your life if you would dare to insult them.

I mean East Houses people, in particular.

I would never get down on the East society even if you paid me. First of all, they are a very tight, closed society that flaunts the fact that they are in a class apart from everyone else here. I did not say in a better class, just in a separate one. Of course, there may be some people at Juniata who would say that East people are a bunch of snobs and brown-nosers; some may even go so far as to say that they think Easterners like having mirrors in every corner of their cliqued-out little fantasy world to admire their always recently-styled hair and how their disco suits flatter their nearly flawless physiques. I certainly wouldn't even think such things — my survival instincts are too strong.

I could never think along those lines because in the East Houses, they are practicing for the Big Game, the Real World. They are always running. They flit. They get scheduled up so tightly that they need to buy a new datebook for every week, and a separate one for weekends. Like Cloisterites, they are distinct from the rest of Juniata, but they're totally the opposite from Cloister people, who usually don't even remember what time their

Letters to the Editor

"Cloister Pride"

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to a situation arising mainly from the reaction of some freshman, and parents, to the Along Muddy Run article of last week. There are only a few points that need to be clarified. It was unfortunate that some members of campus misunderstood Boulton's satire for current conditions in the Cloister. Many 'Cloisterites' were offended by what appeared to be character slurs. We wish to emphasize that the article was referring to conditions three years ago. It might also be interesting to note that those gentlemen Mr. Boulton wrote of have since left our community. It was indeed an unfortunate mistake that the objects of that satire were not more clearly defined. Most 'Cloisterites' have been working hard to improve our image and get this place back into its once esteemed position on campus. We have our pride. We didn't need what appeared to be vicious, anachronistic assault upon our place of residence. Its our home and we are not likely to take perceived abuse lightly. Satire can be dangerous. It must therefore be used responsibly and not slung about without forethought and intelligence. We at Cloister trust such ambiguity will not be so recklessly displayed in our direction again.

Sincerely,
Phil Jones

Trees Damaged

Dear Editor:

With all those bats flying around, the path to East Houses can seem pretty frightening, especially after a late-night party on the other side of campus. But that doesn't explain why limbs were broken from at least three of the trees planted along the path. Whoever did it, I hope you feel safer now.

Cloister Speaks

Dear Editor:

Being the famed bastion of freedom and individuality on campus I find Boulton's article about me highly uncalled for. I reside here in the middle of campus and I've seen 'em come and go but I'm still standing and I'm healthier than hell. I saw Boulton and his crowd go. For awhile I got alot of abuse from my inhabitors but now I feel great, best in years!

I am the most unique and classy dorm in this campus and still I get abuse. You won't find any sterile cinderblock walls in me. We don't go in for conformity and mediocrity. Just quality. Cubicles are for the lesser types. Each of my dorm rooms are tailored special, won't find any like 'em in the world. Stately and impressive is what I am. Where else do you have a patio like mine? Those guys have the best place to relax and enjoy on campus.

Think I boast? Just come over and take a look. Look good and hard...I can stand it and so can the men that live here. They know what they want and I provide it for them. I was built when they knew how to do it right. Habit trails indeed! Satire turned into slander sometimes and I'm too proud to let myself be put down like that. The guys put in a load of time getting me into the best shape ever, so that I am the greatest. I won't let 'em down cause they haven't let me down...well...with the exception of a few and they're gone...or should be.

Anyway, I want anyone who thinks I'm not the greatest to stop by and check me out. I'm in a class above 'em all...a class above 'em all.

Sincerely,
The Cloister

This message heard by Phil Jones late Thursday night not totally unlike The Amityville Horror.

Fresh Tracks

The Who - Soundtrack From The Film Quadrophenia

Polydor-26235

It seems that every time a Who project hits the screen, both the film and the accompanying soundtrack enjoy success. This phenomena is clearly evident in Tommy, and to a much lesser extent in The Kids Are Alright, and although it is considered true in most instances that listening to a movie's soundtrack is a much more enjoyable experience if one has already seen the movie, the point of this column is to review the music as a separate entity, without the aid of celluloid. Hence the title is Fresh Tracks (as in recording tracks) and not Fresh Film.

The impressively packaged two-record set is the epic Who tale of England's "mod" era. The first two sides are remixes of selections from the original Quadrophenia released in 1973 and although the difference is noticed immediately, the songs still reflect the Who's genius in songwriting.

Side three offers three new Who songs: Get Out And Stay Out, Four Faces, and Joker James, and in spite of being chronologically inconsistent, they fit in well with the rest of the set and possess all the characteristics and quality of the band's best material.

Side four seems to be the album's only downfall consisting of oldies which are to give the listener some background into other types of music popular during the "mod" era. The Kingsmen's, Louie Louie, (recently heard in the National Lampoon film Animal House) and the Crystals', Da Doo Ron Ron, (also performed by the completely mortal Shaun Cassidy) are just two of the oldies heard on side four. These songs may have been quite appropriate in the movie, but on the album they seem repititious and redundant and lack the originality of the rest of the set.

Once again the Who have released an album of unmatched musical quality. The band is in excellent form, and aside from the fateful side four, the album is an immensely enjoyable experience. B plus P.S. Last week's Fresh Tracks album, In Through The Out Door by Led Zeppelin was graded A.

Benny Benack Dodged

by Tammy Helwig

The concert presented by Benny Benack and the Dodge Kids was highly enjoyable, although attendance was poor. The group was composed of high school and college students from the tri-state area. The twelve instrumentalists and seven vocalists were led by trumpeter Benny Benack. The group's program covered a wide range of musical interests — from jazz to country-western to pop. Their vocals were full of life, and the catchy, instrumental background lent an air of smooth tranquility to the atmosphere in Oller auditorium.

The concert began by a gospel song entitled 'Save the Country' which was a high energy, finger-snapping number. From that point, the repertoire catered to interests of all ages despite the fact that the concert was mostly attended by alumni. One of the more impressive numbers was 'What I Did for Love' from A Chorus Line. It was done by a talented female vocalist accompanied by a smooth, mellow style from the band.

The program consisted of medleys from the likes of such varied artists as Neil Diamond and George Gershwin. Also, they did an oldies-but-goodies review and a country-western collection. Another excellent song was 'Charley Brown' which was a saxophone solo. The soloist was absolutely fantastic and forced the audience into inspired hand clapping. The most outstanding part of the evening came from the Broadway review. It included songs from Cabaret, Mame, Hello Dolly, Camelot, and many more. The band was continually strong; they never missed a beat.

Some other songs included Melissa Manchester's 'Don't Cry Out Loud', Debbie Boone's 'You Light Up My Life', and Englebert Humperdink's 'After the Loving.'

On the whole, the evening was characterized by songs from the easy-listening spectrum of music. It would be safe to say the concert was successful by the fact that the entertainment was enjoyable, even though the attendance could have been better as far as the student body was concerned. But the alumni in attendance seemed thoroughly pleased with the evening.

Musicians Invited

Three top-notch musicians — guitarist Ed McGuire, percussionist Loy Appleman and brass player Nick Coumos — will conduct a one-day "Jazz Improvisation Workshop" at Juniata College on Saturday, Oct. 27.

McGuire, a prominent musician who has played with stars such as Stan Kenton and Tommy Newsom, describes the workshop as "an attempt to deal concretely with some very important musical concepts."

Offered through Juniata's Continuing Education Program, the workshop is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Ballroom of Ellis College Center. It is intended for any instrumentalist interested in jazz improvisation, but especially for high school music teachers and students who would like to become more familiar with jazz and the techniques of playing it.

A special feature of the workshop will be a participatory concert in Juniata's Oller Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Open to the public, the concert will provide workshop participants with the opportunity to play with the three accomplished musicians.

Stressing that the workshop is intended to be a "participative" experience, McGuire urges all participants "to bring their instruments, but to leave their inhibitions at home."

The accomplished musician adds that "a very important part of the learning process is to actually try the techniques that will be demonstrated. In other words, we want to functionally demonstrate the techniques, and not just discuss them."

Out & About

Looking for a place to impress a date or entertain friends but finding the local restaurants and fast food chains undesirable? The Train Station in State College offers good food, interesting decor and reasonable prices.

Upon entering the restaurant you will see the Caboose Bar. The bar serves various mixed drinks, beer and ale. Adjacent to the Caboose Bar is the Cattle Car, where they serve a wide variety of hoagies, cheesesteaks and other sandwiches. In the rear is the outdoor dining area, The Train Yard. The main dining area is upstairs. Its mood is set with antique railroad memorabilia, plants, soft lights, music and quite a lot of noise. Along with the switch-lights and handlanterns which decorate the railroading restaurant, there are many old prints, pictures, and illustrations. The atmosphere was lively and was enjoyed by me and my guests.

We began our meal with their classic french onion soup au gratin. One of the party commented that it could be a meal in itself with its thick cheese topping. We were soon served our main courses, enchilladas de Montery, charbroiled chopped steak (The John Henry) and quiche lorraine. The food was enjoyable although the Mexican food lacked spices and the quiche was a bit dry. Although the selection of desserts looked appealing, we found the meal to be filling enough. A glance at the menu would tell you that the Train Staion tried to be all things to all people. Pecan pie, chocolate moose, and cheesecake are among the desserts listed. There are many international dishes including chicken divan, mousakka (a Greek casserole) and a few Italian dishes such as veal and eggplant parmesiana, lasagne, and spaghetti. The seafood menu consists of Chesapeake crabcakes, seafood quiche and stuffed shrimp. There is also a variety of soups salads and burgers. All of the food is made in the Station's own kitchen.

The Train Station is located on East College Avenue and is open 11 a.m. to 2 a.m. daily. I would recommend it to anyone looking for an evening of fun and relaxation, especially those of you who are train buffs.

Youri Egorov, the 25-year-old Soviet defector who is being critically acclaimed as "the best pianist of our times" performs this Saturday, Oct. 13 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

Homecoming '79

by Cherise Kent

Alumni returned to College Hill for Juniata's 1979 Homecoming last weekend. The festivities began on Saturday morning with the annual Homecoming Parade and the day closed with an evening concert featuring Benny Benack and the Dodge Kids (see article, page 3).

While the Juniata Indians were on their way to a 21-6 win over the Susquehanna Crusaders, the half-time Homecoming ceremonies included a pageant of floats and the coronation of the 1979 Homecoming Queen and introduction of her court.

The Juniata College Band, under the direction of Ibrook Tower (above, left) appeared in the parade and provided music throughout the football game and during the half-time program.

from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. on the lawn in front of Beeghly Library and Oller Hall.

Another highlight of Saturday morning will be four Mini-Series presentations, scheduled for both 10 and 11 a.m.

In Ellis Ballroom, "Along Muddy Run," by Kathleen Pacca and Sheri Matheson is a colorful slide show account of the "life, love, and laughter that exists on the Juniata campus."

"What You Are Is Where You Were When . . .", scheduled in room 234 of Alumni Hall is a videotape presentation of Dr. Morris E. Massey's lecture on circumstances that influenced you (history, morality, values) and shaped you to what you are today.

"Looking Both Ways" is scheduled in the Blue Room of Ellis College Center. The Career Planning and Placement office, in cooperation with faculty members and alumni, will lead a panel discussion of the offerings of Juniata, both academically and career-wise, to the young adult. Further discussion will focus on what it is like after graduation and the impact which Juniata has on her students.

For the last Mini-Series presentation, Dr. Ralph Church of Juniata's English Department will present a reading of selected poems which he has authored, in room 102 of the new Humanities Center.

Home athletic events on Saturday include football versus Upsala at 1:30 p.m. on College Field and Alumni versus Varsity volleyball at 6:15 in the Memorial Gym.

Other Saturday activities are: a bookstore open house; campus tours at 10, 10:30, and 11 a.m., departing from the registration desk in Ellis College Center; a reception for parents, students, faculty and guests hosted by students in designated areas in each of the residence halls.

On Sunday, the Juniata Parents Association will hold its annual breakfast meeting at 8:30 a.m. in Baker Refectory, Ellis College Center. The Rev. M. Andrew Murray, campus minister, and Father Timothy J. Swope will conduct an all-campus worship service at 10 a.m. in Oller Auditorium. During the afternoon a Raystown Lake excursion from the Seven Points Marina will be offered at 1:30 p.m.

Mountain Day On the Way

by Cherise Kent

Mountain Day, Juniata's annual all-campus affair is scheduled for Wednesday, Oct. 17. A college tradition, the day is characterized by the entire college community "heading for the hills" for an afternoon of picnicking and competitive games. This year Lake Raystown has been selected as the site of the event.

There will be the traditional Tug-of-War, Egg Toss, and Faculty-Senior Football game. This year an inter-dorm games competition has been added to the agenda. The competition is part of the "Dorm of the Year" contest. Students may sign-up to compete on their dorm teams by contacting their dorm senators.

Events scheduled for the Mountain Day dorm competition are: 10:00-11:00 — Sack Race, Frisbee Toss, Frisbee Throw, Badminton, Pyramid Building, Pass the Orange: 11:00-12:00 — Volleyball, Three-legged Race, Clothes Relay, Horseshoes, Spoon on a string Race and Ping Pong Ball in spoon relay. Individuals will not participate in more than two competition.

Buses will be leaving Ellis College Center for Lake Raystown every half-hour beginning at 8 a.m. a.m. Laughing Bush Enterprises, the college's outing service will provide canoe rentals for interested individuals.

alumni, faculty, and students, to reach new donors for the campaign. Pheasant noted that though visiting alumni is the best way to communicate with them, it was talking with them on the phone that was a big factor in gaining many new contributors. Director Pheasant especially wished to recognize Charlie Brown, the Annual Support Fund Chairperson, who wrote letters, conducted telephone campaigns, and was a hard-working motivator in the campaign.

In spite of these efforts, by April 1979 the Development Office was still 200 donors behind their projected goal at that time, and had only until June 30 to meet the challenge. "We were worried!" stated Pheasant, "It's what makes Development people grow grey hairs." But with continued efforts, they were able to obtain 1400 donors in the last two months and met the Dana Challenge. Therefore, in addition to the large amount of alumni gifts received the College also received $50,000 from the Dana Foundation. When asked what the money would be used for, Pheasant stated that it was an unrestricted grant to be used as the College wishes to use it. Accordingly, it has already been deposited in the College budget for use in the many facets of the system.

Several records were set in the process of meeting the challenge, one being a new high 52.2% of alumni participation in the Annual Support Fund, and another being a record amount of giving- $167,700- to the ASF. According to national statistics, Juniata ranks 12th in the nation with its 52.2% of alumni participation.

Pheasant was very happy that so many people pitched in to help, and felt that the challenge was met because "everybody did their part" to achieve it. As for this years' outlook, Pheasant hopes to "maintain, and, if possible, improve alumni participation, and achieve an overall goal of $241,000 for the ASF." Monies raised this year by the Development Office will help fund the restoration of Founders' Hall, which is currently in process.

SG Approves Student Reps

by Cherise Kent

The Juniata College Student Government recently appointed student representatives to the standing Trustee and Faculty committees.

Student Government President Ken Anderson appoints the various students with the approval of the College Senate.

Student appointed to the Trustee Committees are as follows: Buildings and Grounds, Trudy Rhodes and Doug Wood; Academic Affairs, Kathy Splane and George Meyer; Finance and Investment, Joe Orolin and Todd Kulp; Budget, Jane Carothers and Denise Steele; Resource Development, Judy Gross and Cindy Sill, Executive, Ken Anderson and Todd Kulp; Student Services (ad hoc) Joy Sill.

The following students are appointed to Faculty Committees with Senate Approval: Curriculum, Karen Snyder and Mike Dennely; Personnel, Julie George, Doreen Yatko, and Dan Cox; Judicial Board, Lynn Goodale, Mark Hyssong, Tom Drizewiecki, and Dennis Engle; Library Advisory, Michele Singel and Dan Bigelow; Executive, Kristen Storms and Susan Telmanik; Computer Center Advisory, Barry Kline.

Students are still needed to serve on the Curriculum and Computer Advisory Committees. Those students who are interested in serving should contact Ken Anderson, Student Government, Box 995 or stop by the Student Government office between 12:30 and 3:00 Monday thru Friday.

Soccer Luck Stays Sour

by Cathy Oliver

Scoring two quick goals in the opening ten minutes of the first half of play set the Messiah Falcons on course to a 6-1 win over Juniata in soccer action here last Wednesday. Despite the one-sided scoring, the Indians showed good team effort and determination against a tough Messiah squad.

Recovering from the quick Falcon attack, Juniata came back to put in a goal of their own. With a shot just inside the corner post, Indian lineman DAVE MATTERN beat Messiah goalie ED YOUNG for his second goal of the season. Juniata's brief surge was not enough as the relentless Messiah offense scored two more goals to open up a commanding 4-1 lead by the end of the half.

Second half play found a trailing J.C. team still hustling and trying, but unable to stop the Falcons as they put in two more goals for a game total of six.

The Juniata nets were filled by goalies, Allen Schiff, Chris Kanaskie and Mark Infanti who together stopped a total of 37 shots on goal. Good aggressive play was seen on the part of Midfielder Brian Bullock who played one of his best games so far.

When later asked about the game, Coach Jaeger commented 'It was one of our better games,' praising the team's hustle and spirit.

Optimistic Jaeger was hopeful that with work on coordinating efforts and playing position, the team will soon experience a win.

The next game, however, did nothing to prove that Juniata was ready to hit the victory trail. Facing Dickinson at home, the team only got the offense generated a few times during the whole game. Much of the game was a midfield battle, and a tired Indian team went down to defeat once again 5-1.

Dickinson took the lead early, applying pressure with the wings, and began coasting with a 2-0 lead. Alertly Dan Hutchinson picked off an errant pass, and Dave Mattern with some nifty ball-handling converted his third goal of the season to make the score 2-1. Just before half ended, a fluke shot by the Red Devils hit the far post and bounced over the line before goalie Chris Kanaskie could pick it up. Or so the referee said, as the Indian defenders and Kanaskie argue vehemently.

The second half saw Juniata miss some golden opportunities and eventually tire out. Dickinson banged two more goals into the net past a helpless Kanaskie to close the scoring at 5-1 and hand Juniata another loss.

Coach Jaeger commented after the game that the team had played well, despite falling behind on a pair of miscues. He also noted that, 'the game being physical, Juniata had played an aggressive, open style, but just could not capitalize.' Captain Jim Angstadt noted from his viewpoint on the field that, 'the team could not seem to coordinate its attack.' Ed Trowbridge was cited for strong defensive play, and it was found later that goalie Mark Infanti took 8 stitches for an injury received early in the first half.

Juniata takes on Wilkes on the road Oct. 10 and here's hoping they can turn their luck.

Musicians

During the program, the three musicians will discuss career opportunities in jazz, as well as the study requirements for becoming a jazz musician. To facilitate the learning experience, McGuire notes that participants should bring "any questions they may have regarding the improvisation process, or any other aspects of jazz music."

McGuire says that he and the other workshop leaders will deal directly with the jazz process and elements of jazz music, presenting demonstration examples as a trio.

Discussion will center on many topics, including, among others: scale study and the use of modes; the psychology of "time" and its relevance to all players; free improvisation — using the tritone; fusion, crossover and other variants to the jazz experience; and the positive effects of rock on jazz.

In addition to having appeared with Kenton and Newsom (the co-leader of the "Tonight Show" band), McGuire also has performed with Les Paul, Joe Farrell, the Arthur Godfrey Troupe, the Jon Eardley Quartet, the Paul Winter Consort, the Four Freshman, Frankie Fontaine and the Hi-Lo's.

McGuire also is a prolific composer and arranger, and he plays several instruments, including guitar, keyboards, mallets and bass.

All persons interested in expressing themselves through speech are welcome to attend an organizational meeting of the newly-proposed Speech and Debate Club. The meeting will be held on Tuesday, October 16, at 7:30 p.m. in the Blue Room in Ellis. Anyone wishing to be a member but unable to attend should see Professor Briggs.

classes meet, let alone what classes they have. In the Cloister, the people are totally irresponsible; over in East you'll find a group of people who want the responsibility for as much as possible, as soon as possible.

Those people are never bored, because the moment they find they don't need to run around for an hour or so, they go jogging. The real hard-cores are on a different organized Varsity running-around squad each term. This gives them the opportunity to take more than one shower per day, which is good because of the short endurance period of a good hairstyling job.

Some Fun Facts about East Houses:

1) Highest per capita blow dryers (4.37); 2) Highest per capita spending on clothing, jewelry, and makeup; 3) Lowest beer consumption and highest mixed-drinks consumption; 4) Fewest bongs; 5) More Porsches, BMW's, Volvos, and Mercedes—Benz than the rest of JC, all of Penn State and our Administration combined.

To live in the East Houses, you must pass some basic requirements. I've been told that these include tests in Personality (shallowness), Hygiene, Social Awareness, Financial Ability, and Photogenic Prowess. After these tests you must jog with some Easterners, mix drinks for them, take them to State College, find them a cocaine connection, and then pass their vote on your acceptability. If you fail any of these, you're in for another year at Sherwood.

The question has popped up occasionally as to whether it would be a good idea to have fraternities and sororities here at Juniata. The answer is generally negative, because it would serve to fractionalise the campus. Nobody would like to break up a campus as integrated as ours, now, would they? But i don't think fraternities could do as good a job of it as the combination of geography, people, and disco vs. Rock'n'Roll.

I would never get down on the people over in East — they're not the same as the people in the Cloister!

Centerboard to Buy Video Equipment

by Cherise Kent

The Juniata College Center Board recently approved plans to purchase a large screen television and a video cassette recorder. At a meeting held on Wednesday, Oct. 3 the Board also approved the funding for a lighting system which will be used for Coffeehouses and other campus activities taking place outside of Oller Hall and requiring a lighting system.

According to Wayne Justham, director of college programming, the video equipment will be purchased to afford the College the ability to record television programs and air the programs at a time that is convenient to the student. Justham cited the example of television programs that are assigned by professors as part of the course cirriculum. If the program is aired at a time that is inconvenient for many students, the program can be taped and played back at designated times.

The video is flexible enough to offer a wide range of programming to the student. Justham explained that the Board can purchase films, concerts, and lectures for the video set and present these programs as often as they like, when they like. Popular films, for example, can be purchased and will then become property of the College Center Board. The film can then be shown to college audiences on a repetitive basis. The Center Board Film Committee now rents films from film companies and can show these films only at times agreed to by these companies.

Justham stated that a tape of Fleetwood Mac in concert has already been purchased by the Center Board.

The equipment will be placed in what is now the Games Room and the game equipment will be relocated to the Green Room, which is now occupied by Student Services.

In another move, the Board approved the purchase of a transportable lighting system that will be utilized for Coffeehouses in the Catharsis Lounge and other college activities that require additional light sources.

Stickwomen Stop Lycoming

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Juniata field hockey team easily defeated the Warriors of Lycoming College, 3-0, in the traditional Homecoming match-up Saturday. It was especially gratifying in that Debbie Spillaine was able to capture the elusive hat trick.

The first half almost ended in a 0-0 deadlock, but with 27 minutes gone, Ms. Spillaine scored her first goal of the game. JC managed nine shots on goal during the initial period, one less than the total amount for their last two contests. Lycoming had two shots on goal, half of their total for the day.

With almost thirteen minutes elapsed in the second half, Debbie Spillaine found the goal again, to put the Indians up 2-0. Eight minutes later, Ms. Spillaine scored her third goal and captured the hat trick (scoring three goals in one game). The Tribe had another 14 shots on goal in the second half, for a game high of 23.

Marj Porter was awarded an assist on one of the goals, while Nancy Young was credited with one save. JC managed 14 corners to Lycoming's ten.

The Indian stickwomen put a lot of pressure on their opponent throughout the game. They were able to control the contest by maneuvering well both offensively and defensively.

Coach Nancy Latimore feels that the team "did a lot of things well that we had trouble with last week against Messiah — we made the needed adjustment. The defense is playing outstanding field hockey, and the offense is beginning to play up to their potential."

The College Hill Gang has the next week off and then travels to the field of Lycoming College on Saturday, where the Warriors will try to even the score.

Indians Defeat Crusaders

by Doug Williams

The Juniata Indians led by a strong defense and good special team-work shut down Susquehanna 21-6 before a chilly Homecoming crowd last Saturday.

The win evened the Indian's record to 2-2. It also put them at 1-1 in the MAC Northern Division.

The special teams were instrumental in the first two Juniata scores and the defense contributed to the last touchdown.

Susquehanna came right back when quarterback O'Neill faked a pitchout and cut upfield untouched for a 90 yard TD romp. The extra point failed, however, and the defense didn't allow another score.

In the third quarter Miles again took over returning the Susquehanna kick for 43 yards. From there the offense pushed the ball over with Eric Biddle scoring from one yard out.

The final score of the game occurred when the defense forced a fumble and the offense punched it in on a Jim Jones three yard run.

The entire defense, which hasn't allowed an opponent score in the second or third quarter all season, blended well. They caused five deflected passes and Susquehanna lost four out of five fumbles.

Hanging on to the ball seemed to be the problem of the day as there were 11 fumbles between the two teams. Perhaps the teams weren't ready for the sudden chill of autumn. Whatever the reason, several drives for both clubs were halted by turnovers.

The first serious injury of the season occurred when senior defensive end Jim Zimmerman went down in the first quarter with a knee injury. Bob Edwards filled in admirably, but the absence of Zimmerman will be felt. It isn't known how serious the injury is or how long he'll be out.

JC Spikers Finish Second at Tournament

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Juniata College volleyball team upped their season record to 8-2 and captured a second place finish by going 3-1 at the Washington College Invitational Tournament. The Indians defeated Essex, Gauludet, and Washington before losing to Franklin & Marshall in the finals.

Larry's Ladies played perhaps their best match of the tournament Friday night against Essex. JC easily handled one of last year's top ten finishers in the nationals (for small school) by scores of 15-2, 15-7.

Gauludet, a school for the deaf located in Washington, was the other opponent that first night. After winning the first game 15-6, things began to go wrong. There was a breakdown in the serve and serve receiving network, which lead to a lack of opportunity for good sets and hits. The latter is the strength of the team.

The blue and gold of college Hill lead 13-9 in the second game before dropping it, 15-13. Larry's Ladies then rallied from a 13-14 score, to take the match 2-1 by a 16-14 score.

The ladies from Gauludet were well coached and used a sophisticated offense. Their only means of communication, however, was with hand signals.

Washington College was the first competition for the Indians on Saturday. They were a scrappy team and didn't give up even though they lost 15-11, 15-4. When the setters got a chance to perform, JC's sets and hits were tremendous. Unfortunately, with the weakness in the serving aspects, the rest of the offense suffered.

The Tribe then faced the Diplomats of Franklin & Marshall in the finals. F&M is a good serving team, and that, coupled with the deficit in Juniata's serve receiving, was their downfall. Larry's Ladies lost 15-9, 15-11 and ended in second place for the tournament.

Coach Larry Bock feels that at times the team "tries too hard — we are too intense. When their confidence ebbs, the serves go, as serving is a matter of confidence. It is a snowball effect as then they lose more confidence. The team always plays with full effort, and high emotional level. It's just that they try too hard."

Larry's Ladies are almost assured of an invitation to the MAC championships and still retain a chance for an invitation to the eastern regionals. It is therefore crucial that the team win its remaining matches.

The next match for the lady Indians is tomorrow night at Gettysburg College. JC returns home on Oct. 23 against Penn State-Altoona after a three-game road trip.

J Board Reconvenes

The Juniata College Judicial Board has reconvened for the 1979-80 school year with Mark Hyssong, a senior, as Chairman.

The "J-Board", says Hyssong, exists as one step in the College's disciplinary procedure. The Board's jurisdiction is that of non-academic misbehavior, or as the current "Pathfinder" states, is applicable to violations of non-academic College policies and generally to behavior on campus which violates the rights, privileges, or safety of persons or property."

The "Pathfinder" goes on to explain that a student facing a charge of non-academic misbehavior first undergoes an informal hearing with a Student Services staff member. After this hearing the student may opt for an administrative hearing, or may go before the Judicial Board. A student may also appear before the Board if he feels that the results of an administrative hearing were not satisfactory.

"If students feel that they have gotten a raw deal I want them to know that there's another step," explains Hyssong. In a typical Judicial Board session the charge and supporting evidence are presented by Student Services. After this the student is granted time to produce evidence in his defense. Then, after a period during which Board members ask specific questions of both parties, the J-Board goes behind closed doors to reach a recommendation as to how the case should be dealt with.

Hyssong stresses that since five votes are needed to pass a

Donations Exceed $1 Million

For the sixth year in a row, Juniata College has received more than $1 million in gifts and grants from private and competitive sources.

The 1978-79 results, announced last week by Juniata President Frederick M. Binder, stand at $1,013,288. Dr. Binder further observed that overall gifts and grants received by Juniata — including federal and state grants and state scholarships — totaled $1,997,205.

Of the slightly more than $1 million contributed by private sources, the largest total, $2-96,734, was provided by the college's alumni. In fact, 52 percent of Juniata's alumni made gifts to the college, placing the small liberal arts institution in the top 1 or 2 percent of all American colleges and universities in the category of percentage of alumni contributing in one year.

12.3% Tuition Hike Proposed

by Joan Gosnell

A new tuition proposal will be set before the Board of Trustees during Trustees' Weekend. This proposal will be an increase of 12.3% in costs for the school year of 1980-81 bringing the total costs to $5910. The bulk of this increase is in the tuition. This increase must be stressed as a proposed one and must be approved by the Trustees before it can be enacted. Arnold J. Tilden, dean of student services, presented these figures and the reasonings to the Senate.

There are several reasons behind this 12.3% increase. One of the main reasonings is inflation. Even with this increase, the tuition rate is still not equal to the inflation rate. Because of inflation, heating costs have risen 40%, and food costs have risen 18%. This 12.3% increase has not begun to reach the inflation costs involved in running a college.

Another main reason behind the tuition increase is to increase the faculty and administrators' salaries. The salaries at Juniata are among the lowest of private colleges in the state. It is not unusual for a graduating senior to make more money than his professors. Tilden also argued that since students believe that they have quality professors (as was shown by last year's marketing study), the professors should receive quality salaries. Professors' salaries, at this time, can hardly keep up with inflation.

Another reason for this proposed tuition increase involves the need for better programming at Juniata. Juniata is geographically isolated and needs more social and recreational activities. Although this year Center Board received a substantial increase in their budget, they still can make no real changes in programming. With an increased tuition, however, it may be possible for students to get the activities that they want.

Tilden commented that this proposed budget is not at all excessive especially in comparison to similar four-year colleges and in comparison to the inflation rate. Juniata's increases have been remarkably low.

Tilden also stressed that this tuition increase should be passed through to financial aid. That is, financial aid to the individual student should be increased to approximately that of the increase in tuition.

The Senate moved to take the tuition rates to the dorms and hear the student body's comments.

Band Featured This Weekend

by Neeta Moonka

The Juniata College Band will perform its first concert of the year this Friday and Saturday night at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium. The concert, called Golden Trumpets, Slide Trombones and Licorice Sticks, is based on the theme of a summer band outside in the park. Fashioned after the professional bands of the late nineteenth century, the program will feature encore marches such as "Glory of the Trumpets," "Lassus Trombone," and "Clarinet Polka." The diversified program will include some opera, the Prelude to Act 1, La Traviata by Guiseppe Verdi and the Overture to Die Fledermaus by Strauss, as well as songs from Broadway shows which will be presented in the "Star Spangled Spectacular."

The band, which consists of forty students, seventeen of which are freshmen, and their director, Ibrook Tower, has been rehearsing two nights a week, two hours each night in preparation for the concert. The band also performs at home football games, although

Starvation Feared in Cambodia

Earlier this week aid was flown into Cambodia by international agencies in an effort to ease the threat of starvation in the southeast Asian nation. Fifty-five tons of rice, fuel and other supplies were flown from Bangkok to Phenom Penh. A U.N. official estimated that Cambodia will need 165,000 tons of food in the next six months.

President Fidel Castro returned to Cuba Sunday after a three-day visit to New York. In a U.N. address last Friday he called for industrialized nations to join in a $25 billion-a-year program to help developing countries.

South Korean opposition forces appear headed for a confrontation with President Park Chung Hee. Sixty-nine opposition members of the National Assembly have submitted their resignations to protest the expulsion of their leader, Kim Young Sam.

Juniata's annual Parent's Weekend is scheduled for this weekend. Saturday's highlights include artists displaying their wares on the Oller lawn, an afternoon football game, and an evening performance of the Juniata College Concert Band. (see article, this page)

EDITORIAL:

On October 10, Dr. Arnold Tilden, dean of student services presented the rationale behind the proposed tuition hike of 12.3% to the Juniata Student Government. According to Tilden, the said proposal is to cover three areas of priority within the general college budget; inflation, a raise in the salaries of faculty and college administrators, and an increase in the budget for the college Center Board. Tilden stressed that the increase in tuition was proposed and would be set before the Board of Trustees later this month.

Compared to sixteen similar four year institutions in Pennsylvania, Juniata has suffered only a modest increase in the cost of tuition in the past. In a study supplied by Dr. Tilden, compared to its competitors, Juniata has managed to keep its increase in tuition the lowest in the past seven years.

In 1973-74 tuition at Juniata was $2420; in 1979-80 the tuition stands at $3630, an increase of 50%. At Albright the 1973-74 tuition was $2325; in 1979-80 the tuition is $3795, an increase of 63.2%. The tuition at Lebanon Valley College jumped from $2220 in 1973-74 to $3720 in 1979-80, an increase of 69.1%. Susquehanna's tuition rose from $2240 in 1973-74 to $3820 in 1979-80, a 65.1% jump. While Juniata's increase in tuition has been the lowest according to the study, compared to the same sixteen institutions, Juniata's increase from 1978-79 to 1979-80 also remained the lowest.

Due to the conservative increases in tuition over the past seven years Juniata has fallen behind its competitors in several areas. According to Tilden, these areas include college programming and salaries for the faculty and administrators.

Tilden stated that salaries for Juniata professors are "among the lowest in the state." Ursinus College is the sole institution that can boast of paying its faculty lower wages. It was brought to the attention of the senate last week that it is not unusual for a graduating senior to make more money than his professors.

The area of college programming was also cited by Tilden as a priority. Any Juniata student can tell you that in order to attend a major concert you have to leave campus and travel to Albright, Dickinson, or Bucknell. The quality of college programming at Juniata has also fallen behind its competitors. It is obvious that students want such programming if they are willing to travel to other campuses on weekends for it.

While the proposed increase certainly won't be a popular topic among most students and their parents, following Tilden's presentation it became evident that the reasons for the proposed increase are sound ones and that the increase is needed to satisfy the needs of students, faculty, administration, and the college in general. So Juniata will now make-up for lost time and propose a tuition hike of 12.3% that is seemingly long overdue.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

"Oh dear, Mildred; would you look at that!" whined Elmer, Juniata class of '43. He and his wife (class of '44) had come back for their first weekend since 1945, when they realized that all of their friends had graduated and very few of them had the urge or audacity to return.

"Now, what on Earth do you suppose it could be?" offered Mildred, following the direction of Elmer's gawk. She knew very well that it was the Brumbaugh Science Center, because she always read the alumni news bulletins that the College sent them. Mildred had been leading a very bored life. But she always humored Elmer — he'd aged much faster than she had.

"That's the Science Center, Daddy!" chirped their younger son, Percy, '83. Elmer winced as Percy talked. He hated his son's voice. "He reminds me of an Osmond Brother," Elmer had once complained.

"But it looks as though a UFO had landed right in the middle of it," grumbled Elmer. His first impressions of his Alma Mater were evidently less than inspired.

"Now, Elmer! That's just its modern design," reasoned Mildred.

"Yes, Daddy! See how they put a cage around the outside of the glass? Even if you break a windowpane, you can't get out! Really neat, huh?"

"Do you really believe that, Percy?"

"Gosh yes! People study in there in the daytime, and do experiments in the labs at nights! They live in there!"

Elmer almost displayed his meal across the dashboard of his '79 Lincoln Continental, but then he remembered they hadn't yet eaten. "What have they done to the Brumbaugh House?" he ejaculated instead.

"He means the building that used to stand where this parking lot is now," explained Mildred, detecting some undisguised bewilderedness on Percy's face.

"Oh, the N.J. House!" beamed Percy knowingly. "I've heard all about that!"

"That's N.J. Brumbaugh, Percy," explained an exasperated Elmer.

"Golly, i always thought it stood for New Jersey!"

Elmer wanted to crush the calculator that hung from Percy's belt. Not only was the N.J. House gone, but Founders Hall was deserted, some other houses had been razed, and there were multitudes of shoeboxes disguised as living quarters scattered everywhere. Elmer felt even worse after a fair fare at the Ellis Regurgitory. Even Mildred's digestive tract was the worse for wear. "Where's Steve, your older brother?" she asked Percy after she had taken some digestive

Founders incensed

Dear Sirs:

Please! You have to help me before it's too late! Something's happened to Cloister, I mean she's not the same building anymore. And I should know she's been my best friend for the past fifty years.

It all started at the beginning of last summer. At first I thought it was a dream, but now I realize that this nightmare is real. At the end of last spring after all the students had gone I thought I saw a giant flower spore land beside her. A few days later there was a giant pod next to Cloister. In the fall when I woke back up, everything seemed normal again. I mean Cloister was there and this pod was gone.

It wasn't until recently that I realized my mistake. I mean this building looks like Cloister and all, but I can tell it isn't her! Sure seems like that same building, but she just doesn't feel the same. She doesn't have any emotions anymore and all her feelings seem to have disappeared. She just doesn't have any character anymore!

And the students, they all have the same faces and names, but they just don't act the same. You've got to do something. Cloister and I were the only buildings left on this campus with any feelings. Now I'm all alone and I don't know what they've done with poor Cloister!

I mean I just don't know what to do. These things from another world destroy our buildings and leave their unfeeling imitations in their place, and . . . Oh No!

Two bills on the drafting of women into the armed forces are presently waiting legislation in the U.S. Congress. These are H R. 1901, introduced by Rep. G.V. Montgomery (D-Ms) and H.R. 2206, introduced by Rep. Paul McCloskey (R-Ca.).

Many Americans view the inclusion of women into the military as a feminist issue. Some argue that women wouldn't be expected to join the army if there had never been a women's lib, while others say that women should be in the army, since psychological and physical tests have shown that women perform as well as or better than men in the same stress situations. Still others believe that a woman's country means as much to her as it does to any man and therefore she should be as willing to fight for it.

Anyone who has given the future any serious thought must have some opinion concerning women and the armed forces, as well as women and the draft. It is surprising how few high schools and colleges are advising their female students that enlistment, while now an option, may soon become mandatory.

If any of these draft bills should resolve themselves and become law, what preparation would become available to women who have never given the military a second thought? Many young men have fathers or brothers or friends who were in the service. True, most of the time the only stories shared are those with a comic twist or those which display heroism, but a wise father and a true friend is willing to share the ugly and tormented times, and willing to expose psychological wounds which are sometimes much longer in the healing than physical wounds. But how many young women can turn to their mothers or friends for experience? Where will they find the truths?

Egorov Captures Audience

by Spencer

You had your chance. If you missed the Artist Series' performance by Youri Egorov, you have no one to blame but yourself. From the moment he played the first few notes of Bach's Partita in E minor, the audience was his.

The twenty-five-year-old Russian began playing at age six, and in nearly twenty years it appears as though technical perfection has become second nature. But the story doesn't end there.

Egorov has the uncanny ability to get inside the music he plays. To him music is not black dots on a piece of paper; it is an extension of himself, his way to communicate with others. In my discussions with him he showed a definite preference for playing before an audience, confessing that the microphone in the studio often makes him nervous. Perhaps this is because a live performance allows Egorov to make musical conversation with the audience, while the studio confines him to a monologue. In either case, however, the music is technically flawless — in fact, Youri is planning to return to the studio next month to make a new album, and in December might be making his second live album from Carnegie Hall.

As for his performance at Juniata, it was flawless, as usual. More than that, though, it was personal. Although only the Chopin was titled fantasy, all the pieces were played with such emotion that the listener's imagination was free to roam.

Egorov's career is just beginning. It promises to be long and rewarding, for he is an artist in every sense of the word.

In addition to alumni giving, other major sources of private gifts included those of foundations, corporations and industry, $251,886; bequests, $119,969; and government (competitive) grants for research, equipment and programs, $126,185.

Completing the total gifts from private sources were: gift annuity and life income agreements, $8,435; friends, $44,145; gift-in-kind, $27,454; Church of the Brethren, $28,148; Foundations for Independent Colleges, Inc., $20,831; and the Juniata Parents Association, $10,502.

Of the $938,917 contributed from state and federal sources, the breakdown was: state scholarships (PHEAA), $465,233; federal grants (aid), $307,471; and state institutional assistance grants, $211,213.

Talking Heads — Fear Of Music — Sire 6076

This is the third Talking Heads album to be released in less than three years and Frar of Music seems to be more advant-garde than any of their other work. It seems that this band is one that will not stagnate, for each album is another change in another direction.

The four member band consists of Martina Weymouth, bass, Jerry Harrison, guitars and keyboards, David Byrne, guitar and vocals, Chris Frantz, percussion, all of which seem to retain remarkably tight instrumentation. The songs themselves are well written with catchy lyrics and incredibly smooth melodies revealing David Byrnes master of song writing skills.

Some of the best cuts on the album include Drugs, a slow space-rock song depicting a mind expanding experience thru music. The use of synthesizers and distortion devices add to the frenetic eerieness and mystery of the tune.

Heaven is another cut that easily ranks among the best on the album. The slow methodic instrumentation matches exactly with the sharp, biting lyrics. Heaven is equated with a bar where nothing happens but everyone is trying to get in. Byrne finds it hard to imagine this place being "exciting or fun."

Life During Wartime is a tune depicting what it is like to live in a war torn area. The sporatic yet articulate instrumentation sounds like a musical war and the lyrics keep that same feeling.

Mind is a strange tune that tries to explore the unknown recesses of the you know what. This song sounds like the musical accompaniment to a get to know your body film, but all together it comes off pretty well.

All in all this latest album by the Talking Heads is not a disappointment. Listening to Fear of Music might be said to be an acquired taste, but one well worth it.

drugs in the WC and finally felt firm enough to talk.

"Gee willikers, Mamma! Maybe he's . . . uh . . . at the game!" Percy knew very well that his derelict sibling would not be in any condition to converse with Elmer or Mildred even if he were able to find the football field. He always had too good a time to go to the football games. "Let's go watch JC whump . . . uh . . . Lycoming? Or is it Susquehanna?" Percy was confused again.

"Upsala," snorted Elmer.

"Amos Alonzo Stagg used to coach for Susquehanna," added Mildred. That was one of the few Football Fun Facts she knew.

"Who?" peeped Percy, perhaps perplexed.

The game was mighty close. Someone dropped his program and a few of his neighbors woke up and blinked. An anxious parent craned his sunburned neck for a better view. Of the rest of the stands, of course. He wanted to see if there were any other parental alumni around; he wanted to get away from his kid.

Steve staggered through the stands and stood before his parents. Percy prepared to puke Pepsi. Steve was followed by two of his cronies who were apparently apprehensive. "High, ol' man! You 'n' yer lady wanna (hic) joint us fer a party over inna Cloisser affer de game?"

Elmer got a gleam in his eye. He grinned for the first time all day. "Is the Cloister still . . . ?"

"Yeah!" agreed Steve. "An' ya bedder take me up on it, 'cause if not, i'll lose the twenny bucks i bet those two fellas," slurred Steve, indicating his pair of pals.

"Well, Mildred, what do you think about that idea?" said Elmer.

"Elmer, you know you always overdo it and wind up staring at the American Standard logo all night at wild parties!"

"Uh, Daddy, i . . . uh. . . . " explained Percy.

"Would you just shut the . . . All right, it's settled. Thank you for the reminder, Mildred. I'd nearly forgotten how much fun it used to be. Here's the keys, dear. You can come collect me tomorrow afternoon!" Elmer joined his elder son with a sneer of anticipation.

"Oh, Mamma! Is Daddy going to be all right? Does he know what is going to happen to him over there?"

"I'm afraid so," muttered Mildred enviously.

"Huh?" blurted Percy.

"Steve's a senior, and i think he can take care of your father. Besides, the Cloister has more washrooms per capita than any other dorm. By the way, what's going on with you tonight, Percy?" That Elmer always knows how to have a good time and leave me to take up his slack, thought Mildred.

"Well, let me see," said Percy, warming to the subject and smiling stupidly again. "There's a band performance in Oller Hall, but i hope it ends early because there's a worship service there tomorrow."

"I see," mumbled Mildred.

"I thought maybe we could go out for breakfast with my roomie's folks. They sure set up a fun weekend for us, huh?"

"Just marvelous," she intoned. "But don't you have any plans with your friends tonight?" she queried, hopefully. She wanted to dump Percy and go in search of Elmer (That pig!).

"Oh golly no, Mamma! They'll all be at the band concert! I do so want for you to meet Hollingworth and Gaylord and . . . "

At 3:00 Sunday afternoon, Elmer and Mildred were bouncing merrily homeward in their little Lincoln. Mildred was driving — Elmer had complained that his eyesight was bad. He was squinting and rubbing his eyes under his sunglasses. He cursed the rainy weather. He looked like hell.

"You still haven't told me about your evening, Elmer."

"What's to tell? It was just a normal weekend. Steve told me the parties were so quiet because of the darned parents. Why did we pick such a bad weekend, anyway?"

"Don't you dare complain to me about bad weekends! Do you know what Percy had planned for us? He's such a little nurd!! He made me go to church with him! And that's only the beginning! What were you doing at seven o'clock this morning, Elmer? Elmer? ELMER!!"

But he was wheezing his way through some well-deserved snores, with a self-explanatory smile on his face.

"Party pooper," sighed Mildred, and drove on.

On The Couch

On The Couch, a bi-weekly column by Amy Powell will examine familiar situations on campus from a psychologist's standpoint.
— editor.

There seems to be a very strange phenomenon occurring on the Juniata campus which needs to be brought to everyone's attention. It seems that there is an undercover movement of individuals suffering from an anal retentive complex who are serving to disrupt mealtime activity.

Freud defined this complex as an affliction plaguing those people who never got over the fact that Mom and Dad would tell them when and where to go to the bathroom. So, in retaliation, years later these people turn into absolute slobs, finally releasing aggression in a socially acceptable manner. Hey! Are we going to let them get away with it?! Heck no! But the problem lies in the question, "How do you know who's a member of this undercover group of 'A.R.'s'?"

Start with the person sitting next to you at mealtime. Look at his plate. Notice any tell-tale signs of an anal retentive? Any cigarette butts smashed in the pudding? (Take that, Mom and Dad!) Does the food on the plate look like it has been subjected to a trash compactor? Or better yet, is a napkin crammed sadistically down into his milk glass? (Stuff it, Mom and Dad!)

Nothing strikes a bell yet, huh? Well, it's time to look for the more subtle A.R.'s. These are the characters who are still under their parents' thumbs and show their agressiveness in more timid ways. This group includes those who turn their milk glasses, salad bowls, and dessert dishes upside down. (Tell me what to do, will you ?!) But the classic of this type of anal retentive is the person who, after total mutilation of his dinner, neatly unfolds his napkin and places it over the entire tray. Oh come now. How dumb do you think we are?

It's time now for it all to come out of the closet. Those of you who once felt safe in releasing aggressions during mealtime can do so no longer because the Juniata campus is on to you. Grow up! But don't worry; although the road may be long and hard (even frustrating at times), soon you will begin to shed your need to exhibit such incipient behavior. Just think; you will no longer have anything to say to those anal retentives who tear up dorms! Freud has a lot to say about them too . . .

"Black On Broadway"

The Philadelphia Academy of Vocal Arts will present "Black on Broadway" and conduct a "Vocal Workshop" at Juniata College on Tuesday, Oct. 23.

The concert is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Juniata's Oller Auditorium, while the workshop is set for 4:30 p.m. in Swigart Hall. Both are made possible by grants from ARA Services, Inc., the Presser Foundation of Philadelphia and Juniata's Edith B. Wertz Endowment for the Support of Cultural Events.

Both are open to the public and because of the above-mentioned support, there is no charge for admission to either.

During the evening presentation of "Black on Broadway," three talented vocalists, accompanied by an accomplished pianist, will perform a wide selection of tunes from popular Broadway shows written and made famous by Black writers and companies.

A highlight of the program will be selections from "The Wiz," which is the Black adaptation of "The Wonderful World of Oz." As a result of its successful 1975 Broadway run, "The Wiz" monopolized that year's Tony Awards by capturing seven, including "Best Musical" and "Best Musical Score."

In addition to selections from "The Wiz" — which will feature the popular "Ease on Down the Road" — the group will perform selections from numerous other Black Broadway shows, including those from "Porgy and Bess"; "Jamaica"; "Purlie"; "Cabin in the Sky"; "St. Louis Woman"; "Treemonisha"; "House of Flowers"; and "Carmen Jones."

Well-received on a recent statewide tour of Pennsylvania's state college campuses, "Black on Broadway" also was enthusiastically received by an audience in The Pennsylvania State University's Schwab Auditorium this past September.

Cassandra Hayes, soprano, will sing the part of Bess in "Porgy and Bess" at an upcoming concert of the Rochester (N.Y.) Philharmonic Orchestra, and later this season, she will sing the title role in "Arabella" with the Academy of Vocal Arts (AVA) Theatre

Marla McDaniels, mezzo, is presently a member of The AVA Opera Theatre. She previously served two apprenticeships with the Santa Fe Opera, where she received the 1977 "Outstanding Apprentice Award."

Rounding out the vocalists is tenor Michael Austin, who also is a member of The AVA Opera Theatre. In addition, he has performed at the Brevard Opera Center as a soloist with Robert Shaw.

Jeffrey Eschelman will accompany the trio on piano.

The "Vocal Workshop," scheduled to last about one hour after its 4:30 p.m. start, is open to all area singers, including members of choirs, ensembles, bands and orchestras.

"This workshop will offer area vocalists the opportunity to work with expert singers," observes Mrs. Mary Ruth Linton, chairperson of Juniata's music department.

William Matthews, guitarist and lutanist will be featured in the third Artist Series of the year, October 28, 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

Matthews To Perform

by Spencer

With only a few weeks gone in the first term of the year, the third Artist Series' production is already at hand. On October 28, William Matthews, guitarist and lutanist, will be performing in Oller Hall.

Born in Brooklyn, New York, Matthews began playing guitar at thirteen and was influenced greatly by the music of Andres Segovia (without a doubt the greatest classical guitarist in the world today). While Matthews does play established classical pieces, he is also dedicated to modern music, playing works written for him by others.

Matthews is a member of the music faculties of Hunter and Queens Colleges in New York, and has done graduate work in Elizabethan literature. He tours worldwide on an annual basis and has most notably toured extensively in India. He performed the soundtrack to Elia Kazan's film "The Visitors," has performed with the Metropolitan opera, and has appeared on CBS-TV's Camera Three.

they have decided not to put on any halftime shows on the field.

Ibrook Tower, whose enthusiasm for the band is evident, feels that the band has the components to be very successful. He believes that the presence of the freshmen in the band, who exhibit a lot of enthusiasm, helps to build the enthusiasm of the entire band. This trait is demonstrated in the willingness of members to do more than just attend rehearsals. Along with this willingness to extend themselves for the band, the members, according to Ibrook Tower, are also very talented. He commented that the band is able to sight-read material that took hours to learn last year.

The band also has plans for later in the year including a band coffeehouse in January which will feature small groups from the band. Ibrook Tower also plans to organize a jazz ensemble from members presently playing in the band. A spring concert will be performed on the 29th of April which will be more serious than the concert to be presented this Friday and Saturday.

Year Abroad Affords Student Insight

by Brenda Geiger

A year abroad can be a very enlightening and maturing process. Being thrust into the midst of another culture one quickly learns to adapt traditional modes to this new way of thinking. Living in Europe provides insights that tourism can never allow. It is quite an experience to learn how to make yourself three meals a day on the top of a hot plate with only a small pot and perhaps a frying pan as utensils. Many times the exact ingredients necessary for your concoction were unavailble and improvisation was needed. One learns to budget time and money when shopping also. There are certain places to go to buy the fruit, certain places to buy your favorite bread, and certain supermarkets that carry various products at cheaper prices. One of the greatest accomplishments was the feeling that you knew the city well enough to find anything at the cheapest price and the best way to get there.

In many ways, you are very much alone and on your own during the year. There are no rigorous assignments nor numerous tests to gauge your progression. Self-discipline becomes an element of survival. Travel is enticing and it is up to the individual to balance his/her time between classes and side trips. Due to the excellent mass transit systems in Europe one can travel vast distances rather efficiently and, for students, relatively inexpensively. Inter-Rail passes provide unlimited railfare in second-class compartments in participating countries for one month. The price is only $200.

Dorm life in France was very different from Juniata. Practically all the rooms were singles and every room had its own sink and cabinet. The French in Alsace and the girls in the dorms were helpful but maintained a polite distance. The barriers between us seemed at times insurmountable, but, when overcome, it was always well worth the extra time and patience required. The exchange of ideas and different perspectives widen your outlook. You begin to see your life style and your country more clearly. Perhaps it is that going away from the familiar and secure makes you value that security, those traditions more highly.

"Lightning Rod" Premieres

by Steve Elek

The Juniata College Players will be staging the premiere performance of "Lightning Rod" by Dan Meckes on November 8 and 9 in Oller Auditorium. Dan Meckes, a new playright on the scene, is thankfully given a first opportunity to air a play of his that has finally reached a stage after about twenty attempts. Meckes is a graduate of the Pennsylvania State University with a Bachelor of Arts in English and education courses required of teachers and took a Master's degree work in English at the University of Colorado.

Meckes hopes that his work "Lightning Rod" may eventually play in New York and maybe even break onto the big stage. Three people from New York have shown interest in the play and one person is travelling to Juniata College to view a performance. The "Whole Theatre Company" of Montclair, N.J. has already shown a fair amount of interest in the play.

The play itself is in the third version and Meckes hopes that by performing the play here he will be able to make the play work. There is quite a step from written script to an actual production. A major reshaping will occur until the curtain raises on opening night.

Even if the play isn't a success after its Juniata performance, Meckes says the experience will have been worth the work. He will realize what the play still needs to make it a success, the actors will gain the experience of working with a new play that offers considerable leeway and the director too will gain from molding a new play.

What are some of the problems a woman might face in the military? Can they be anticipated? Would they differ from those experienced by men? As far as I know, no study has been formed to consider these questions, yet any day women might be called up to swear allegiance to Uncle Sam.

As a woman, I wonder how other women felt about this issue. I believe that one of the benefits of being raised female in our society, in our culture, is that we are nonverbally taught to handle differences of opinion with little violence as possible. It seems unfortunate that instead of sharing with men what we've learned, that we're willing to subjugate to their rules and their games.

Most women in America today have been sheltered from active participation in war. For many, the losses they suffered were more painful than if they had been personally attacked. Yet, women who spend great amounts of time in a kitchen preparing nutritional meals have been spared the horror of seeing small children starve. Women who proudly care for the sick and the elderly were not forced to witness inhumane torture of people of all ages. Women who teach teenagers beyond reading and writing to respect their classmates and friends were never asked to include instruction with firearms in their classroom exercises.

I think of my mother, my sister, myself and wonder if we would be any better a person, any stronger a person, if we had graduated from basic training or had lived in a war. Maybe our empathy levels would be altered, but for better or worse?

I am not advocating complete pacifism. If a woman feels her life threatened or senses harm approaching those she loves or those she sees as helpless, I wish her all the strength she needs to conquer. But defeat is not destruction.

I equate war with destruction and therefore have difficulty understanding how women can perceive participation in the military as an honor? How can they view it as an advanced step for our society? It's sad enough that men choose to establish armies. I think a woman should be proud that she is as sensitive to suffering as she is. How can it be a feminist or femininity issue to want to alleviate as much suffering as we can during our lifetime instead of desiring to create more?

It's my hope that women all over the world will show their strength by refusing to fight in wars, by refusing to kill each other, by not thinking of each other as enemies. Of course that is my hope for men too.

I realize this is an ideal — my ideal and although shared by some it is viewed by many as impractical. It is difficult for me to determine feasible or unrealistic when dealing with the future. What is unlived seems to be full of potential.

But I concede other viewpoints. And although I seek converts, the least I want is that those who soft sell the military life, especially high school guidance counselors and college placement and guidance offices, will seek out information from those disillusioned with the service and from organizations working with conscientious objection and military counseling.

This information should be available in every school in the country. If we, as a country, are going to be a people who pride ourselves on freedom of choice, at least let us make known what choices are available and as much as possible about the choices which we make.

recommendation, the student members of the Board cannot be completely overridden by faculty or staff. He went on to add that quite often dissenting opinions are voiced within the Board.

The "Pathfinder" and Hyssong concur in the belief that the Judicial Board should not be subject to "excessive legalism", but rather should operate on the basis of "common sense". The Board, states the chairman, is willing to take as long as necessary to review the facts. In Hyssong's experience the procedure can take anywhere from forty-five minutes to five hours. He believes that the Board should be "thorough and fair".

The other Student Representatives for this year are Lynne Goodale, Tom Drzwiecki, and Dennis Engle. The Student Services Representative is Mr. Bill Martin, Placement Director.

Volleyball Wins Two

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Larry's Ladies have streaked to a 10-2 record after defeating their latest opponents, The Red Flash of St. Francis and the Bullets of Gettysburg.

JC easily handled St. Francis, 3-0, in their third home match this year. They played hard in spite of the fact that they were playing a weak team, and won by 15-3, 15-4, 15-7 scores. The team's passing improved greatly from the tournament, a sign that the Indians were playing with more confidence and concentration.

The Bullets gave the Tribe some stiff competition, but fell to defeat 3-1. The hitting and blocking were good, and the passing and setting improved significantly. The low point of the team is still the serving — the girls missed about 15 serves during the match.

According to Coach Larry Bock, "Watching JC action, one could sense that they started to feel how good they actually are — they started to believe in themselves." This came through in the scores — 15-12, 14-16, 16-14, 15-3. Larry's Ladies played with poise and managed to keep control of the contest.

Coach Bock also felt that Nancy Zinkham played the best match of her career against Gettysburg. He also said that Claudia Tweardy is beginning to look quite impressive as a setter, having changed from being a hitter.

This week the Indians face two tough teams that have solid programs and scrappy players. The College Hill Gang travelled to Altoona to face the Penn State branch campus team (currently 9-0) on Tuesday. They will be at Messiah tonight before returning to Memorial Gym for the last home match of the season on Tuesday.

Administration Intervenes and. . . .

Dear Editor,

The inept intrusion by top administration into the arrangements for the visit of Youri Egorov this past weekend was both an affront to Mr. Egorov and to the college community.

All accomodations, dinners, transportations, etc. for the visiting artist are to be arranged by the Fine Arts Committee. Certain key members of the administration, however, obviously want to belong to the Committee, for this past weekend they saw fit to make (and then to foul up) their own arrangements for Mr. Egorov. All of this was done without consultation with the Fine Arts Committee.

The resultant situation was a disgrace for Juniata College. The next time the administration wants to help out the Series or any other student-run affair (a strange situation indeed) I recommend that they first check with the people responsible for the affair. Public relations start at home.

Sincerely,
Jerry Keenan

Apologies In Order?

To the Editor:

The highest levels of administration here at JC, which a few weeks ago decided that the first home soccer match in JC history was not important, decided last weekend that the appearance of pianist Youri Egorov was important enough to merit their interference. Historically, the Fine Arts Committee has taken responsibility for the Artist Series and all appropriate arrangements. But this time it was decided on high that this was not just an artist, but an opportunity which justified the unannounced takeover of committee duties. What was the net result of this uninvited intrusion? The artist received his post-performance meal at Perkin's, after the student-sponsored reception in Lesher. Those who are charged with the job of enhancing Juniata's image and reputation managed to find a way to do just the opposite. Perhaps apologies are in order, but certainly not anticipated.

Sincerely,
Mark Hyssong

No Hat Tricks!

For the second consecutive week, a perfect score won the football poll. Last week's perfectionist was William Shawley, whose nine correct answers won him $10. This week we hope to ruin that streak and maybe even defeat the campus for once. The picks are tough, so do a little research before you circle. Roh Morris's picks are: Juniata, USC, Penn State, Clemson, Missouri, Washington, Kansas City, New England, Tampa Bay, Chicago, 36 total points; Pat Conroy — Juniata, USC, Penn State, Duke, Missouri, Philadelphia, Giants, Miami, Tampa Bay, Chicago, 37 total points.

Football Contest Entry Form

Juniatian Football Contest Rules:

1. The object is to select the winners of the ten games to be played over the next weekend.
2. To make a selection merely circle the teams you pick to win. If you want to predict a tie circle both teams.
3. Each contestant is permitted only one entry per week.
4. The Juniatian will award a $10.00 prize. To win, a contestant must predict the highest number of winning teams, and this prediction must tie or surpass all of the Juniatian sports editors. In the event of a tie among contestants and/or sports editors for the highest winning team count, the total points estimates will be used as a tiebreaker. If a tie exists the prize money will be evenly distributed to the winners.
5. All entries must be submitted by noon Sarurday. The entry boxes are located in the hallway by the Juniatian office or in the Ellis Hall lobby.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Juniatian except those directly associated with the Juniatian.

Indians Open Cage Drills

With the highest-scoring two-man combo in school history gone, the newest Juniata College basketball team feels it has something to prove.

Frazier referred to the "Twistin' Twins," 6-1 seniors Roger Galo and Bob Musser, who together averaged 46.5 points per game last year. Galo, a Division III All-East pick, and Musser, an Academic All-American selection, led the Indians to a 9-3 finish (a 9-12 mark overall).

"Instead of trying to replace Galo and Musser," Frazier says, "we will simply alter our style. We have good height and aggressiveness up front, plus excellent quickness in the backcourt, so we'll try to run every time we get the ball."

Frazier welcomed just five lettermen Monday, including but one guard, but expects big things from his one transfer student, several of his 12 freshmen, and several upperclassmen who did not play last season, to total 28 hopefuls.

Up front, the leading veteran is 6-5 sophomore Joe Chuba (Johnstown), who averaged 7.1 points and 7.3 rebounds per game last year. One of the top rookies in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division, he led the league in field goal percentage at .637.

Also back underneath are a trio of senior lettermen: 6-7 Roger Arnold (Bedford), 6-4 Dave Bizousky (Punxsutawney) and 6-6 Andy Dwyer (Beaver Brook). Arnold (2.1 ppg and 3.0 rebounds), was a part-time starter last season, while Dwyer, who was plagued by injuries last year, averaged 11.4 points and 7.5 rebounds as a sophomore.

The lone letterman at guard is 5-11 senior David Bender (Grantsville Md.), but 6-1 sophomore Scott Lehigh (Hanover) and 6-2 junior Kerry Walsh (Phoenixville), both of whom sat out last year to devote more time to the books, are also expected to step in for Galo, Musser and Bob McNelly.

Among newcomers, Frazier speaks highly of swingman Tom Deep (Bridgeville), a 6-4 transfer from Clarion State, and 5-11 guard Chet Sowal, an honorable mention All-Stater at Shamokin Lourdes last winter.

The Indians will open their 21-game schedule Nov. 24, hosting Ursinus in one of three afternoon contests this year, though their only matinee at home. They will play 13 games in the MAC North: two each against their four West Section foes, and one apiece with the five East Section entries.

Indians Downed by Lycoming

by Doug Williams

The Juniata Indians lost to undefeated Lycoming 21-0 last Saturday to ruin any hopes for a MAC championship this year.

After squandering several early scoring opportunities, the Indians appeared to give up the idea of scoring, and Lycoming coasted to victory.

Three times in the first half the offense had the ball around the 20-yard line, but all three times they were shut down and forced to attempt a field goal. After the last try failed, the offense seemed to stop and that was the ball game.

While the offense was floundering, the defense was having trouble with Lycoming's passing attack. The secondary was covering well, but quarterback Burd was getting all day to look for recievers. The result was three touchdowns.

Coach Rossi tried to explain the reason why the team, particularly the offense, seemed to give up after the missed field goals. "The misses took away our momentum and put doubt as to our ability. This has happened before (at Westminster and Albright). There seems to be a lack of intensity."

Rossie went on to say that the team seemed to lack a "killer instinct" especially when they approached the goal line. He explained, "There really isn't a catalyst to motivate the players. In a large school the students, alumni, and media can do it, but here I guess it has to come from the coach. I guess I haven't done that."

The coach also felt that this loss in particular would make the rest of the season a struggle. He felt that the motivation to play would be greatly diminished, and excuses would begin to appear.

The only goal left for the team is to have a winning season. Juniata hasn't had a losing effort in seven years and if the players can take enough pride in themselves and their team it is quite possible to reach that goal.

Further dampening the Indian's outlook was the unfortunate injury to all-MAC center Todd Blankenstein who was hurt in a motor vehicle accident last Saturday night. Todd was hit by a truck in Coledale, Pennsylvania, while crossing the street. He suffered a separated shoulder and is in intensive care for observation. Although the truck also ran over his legs there were no broken bones and it looks like he'll be all right. Good luck, Todd.

IM's Flying High

By Mark Infanti

The intramural program at Juniata is a smashing success. Approximately 80% of the students participate in I.M. to some degree, many in more than one sport

The program encompasses individual and team competition at several levels and degrees of play. Three catagories allow maximum participation by the whole college community. Men's, women's, and Co-Ed programs offer everyone a chance to participate.

Co-Ed sports are designed to promote "low-key competition, and social participation" in volleyball, softball, and tennis. All students, including varsity athletes, are permitted to participate in the Co-Ed program.

Men's and Women's eligibility requirements are somewhat more stringent, and are designed to promote healthy competition outside of the varsity level. Eligibility requirements can be found in the Intramural Handbook pulished by Co-Directors Tom Rogish and Nancy Latimore.

According to Coach Rogish, participation is up 50% over last year. Approximately 580 members of the Juniata community are presently participating in the fall I.M. program.

The recent success has been complicated by a few problems. Scheduling is difficult in view of the large number of teams and the limited field space, and, with decreasing daylight, the 6:30 games had to be eliminated.

Softball is by far the most popular fall sport, with teams in all categories of participation and a long, tough 14 game schedule.

In the winter, basketball dominates. Three levels of play, each with two divisions, battle it out for separate league championships.

The popularity of volleyball has prompted coaches Rogish and Latimore to initiate separate men's, and women's teams in addition to the popular Co-Ed games.

By moving floor-hockey games to the main gym Coach Rogish hopes to attract more teams, and promote a better level of play. The ever-popular team handball competition will also resume this winter.

Several Individual tournaments have also been added in a variety of sports. Handball, paddleball, table tennis and pocket billiards are a few of the individual sports that will have tournament competition this winter.

A new addition to the I.M. winter schedule is swim team competition held at Huntingdon High School. A team composed of at least five swimmers will compete in five separate events.

In all, the coming year in I.M. sports promises to be the best in Juniata history.

Stickwomen Strike Again

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

For the second time this season, the Juniata Indians scalped the Lycoming Warriors. In a rematch of the Homecoming Classic, JC's field hockey team easily handled their opponents, 2-0.

Just four minutes into the first half, Debbie Spillaine scored on an assist from Marj Porter. Seventeen minutes later, Ms. Porter set up Lisa Masood to make the score 2-0.

The Tribe outplayed the Warriors throughout the contest, but particularly in the first half. Due to muddy field conditions and poor footing on the sloping field, JC didn't execute as well during the second period.

The Indians had 14 shots on goal (8 the first half) to Lycoming's 6. The Warriors did have more corners than the visitors, 18-10.

According to Coach Nancy Latimore, "The season has been very successful, which was what I anticipated during pre-season practices. The true quality of the team, however, will come through in the next couple of matches."

Having played Gettysburg this past Tuesday, the Juniata stickwomen will have only one more division contest, with Dickinson next Tuesday. The outcome of those two games will determine if Juniata will be involved in championship play.

The next home matches for the Indians are Shippensburg on Friday at 3:00 and a scrimmage with the State College Club on Saturday at 10:30. Both contests are scheduled for Langdon Field.

BULLETIN

The Indians came out on the short end of a closely fought game to be defeated 3-1 by Wilkes on their home field. The only Juniata goal was put in by Freshman Ken McWharter, and was his first for the season. The next Indian soccer challenge comes this Saturday Oct. 20, away at Albright.

DeWalt Questioned

by Cherise Kent

On Tuesday, Oct. 16, members of the Juniata College Student Government met with Jeff DeWalt, director of the Hallmark Food Service, to discuss various student grievances concerning the college food service.

The 21 meal-per-week plan, the quality of the food, variety of the menu, preparation of food and other issues were discussed at the meeting. Members of Student Government who participate were: Julie George, chairperson, student concerns committee; Dennis Hart, Cloister senator; Cherise Kent, chairperson, residential life committee; Ruth-Ellen Klinger, Lesher Senator; Dave Thornton, Freshman senator; Dale Wetzel, Vice-president, student government; and Paula Whetstone, Freshmen senator. Klinger, Thornton, and Whetstone are also members of the student concerns committee.

Dale Wetzel brought to DeWalt's attention the possibility of introducing another type of

by Lee Chottiner

The J.C. Political Science Department has experienced a string of problems over the past few years which have served to hinder the department's growth and operations.

"The department has been in turmoil for four years now," explained William Vocke, the new head of the poli-sci department, while discussing the constant changes in instructors that the department has undergone in recent years.

Vocke explained that since 1974, when there were three professors in the department, there has been a series of resignations that culminated with the recent resignation of Dr. Da Silva who had been at J.C. for many years.

The department's troubles seem to stem from the fact that there are only two professors to handle a department that normally has a high enrollment among the student body.

"Ever since I've been here, I've done an overload," Vocke said; he then added that "everyone at Juniata does . . ." He considers work overload a problem, but a problem not limited to the Political Science department only.

Still the question of whether the poli-sci department should have another faculty member or not remains.

"I'd like to see a third professor," Vocke stated. He explained that with a third professor, existing departmental programs such as its legal and public administration internships could be greatly enhanced, along with the department's work in political theory. They could also be more involved in computer

Three Mile Island Actions Under Investigation

Some supervisors at Three Mile Island fully understood that the implications of the accident there last March were more serious than the information granted to the Government had suggested. Federal Investigators are attempting to determine whether the actions by officials at Three Mile Island might have violated an ambigious Federal requirement that states dangerous conditions be reported to the Government 24 hours after they are noted.

The clean-up began Monday at Three Mile Island. The first step involves removing radioactive particles from the 400,000 gallons of stored water at the site.

Moshe Dayan has quit as Israel's foreign minister citing the Palestinian issue. In his resignation, Dayan commented he had "expressed his reservations" about the Government's handling of the negotiations with Egypt on Palestinian autonomy. Regarded by his Government as a critic of what he saw as Prime Minister Begin's inflexibility on the issue, Dayan was excluded from the Israeli negotiating team. Dayan also made clear his opposition to Israeli land expropriations on the West Bank. Viewed as an obstacle to peace both the U.S. and Egypt have denounced Israeli settlement on the West Bank.

South Korea's army took control of the industrial cities of Masan and Changwon, 35 miles from the nation's capital of Pusan, which had been put under martial law following anti-Government demonstrations led by students late last week. Oller in Ruins?

by Mark Coakley

Oller Hall, Juniata's stage, theatre, and auditorium, has recently been reported to be deteriorating. The hall is a multipurpose hall which takes quite a bit of abuse, but apparently receives very little attention.

Shared by such things as the Music Department, Speech and Theatre Department, Artist Series, lectures, all campus convocations, organ and piano students, movies, and educational films, the building is very versatile.

But according to Mrs. Doris Goehring, who is in charge of theatrical events and the use of the hall, "A lot of equipment is deteriorating with almost forty years' use on it." Cited by Mrs. Goehring as some of the major problems are: "The peeling interior paint, leaking roof, deteriorated stage floor, badly worn seats and carpeting, unmaintained organ and piano, bad sound system, and a major heating valve that keeps blowing." Dave Brady (82), head of the stage crew, also has concerns about "fire hazards such as faulty wiring and bad lighting equipment."

Although private concerns were, at one time, allowed to rent out the hall, it is now considered to be no longer adequate for school purposes, let alone outsiders. "Right now it is in a deplorable kind of condition; we have a lot of good artists coming, and we do not have a hall that looks presentable," says Goehring.

Mr. William Alexander, Business Manager of Juniata College, said that "In the '79-'80 budget, nothing in Oller is scheduled for refurbishing." But he did say that "The President and Foster Ulrich have prepared a proposal to be presented to the trustees on the next fund-raising campaign." No details on this proposal were attained except that it will extend through 1986, and its main priorities are a new sports complex, campus development, and educational advance. According to Mr. Alexander, Oller Hall fits in under campus development, but again, no details were given.

Except for some rewiring and an outside painting, the school itself has done very little to the Hall in the past years. A recent improvement, new stage curtains, came by way of the Women's League of Juniata College.

According to Alexander, "There is a system of preventative maintenance," but when asked for records and bills verifying what had been maintained, he said "there probably aren't any records on file."

When asked about the future of Oller Hall, Alexander said, "The new fund raising campaign strategy should have something for everyone," and as to the immediate future, he said, "You can't do everything."

New Security Director Hired

by Chris Corry

Harry W. Crawford, hired as the new campus Security Director, will be responsible for training the security staff, as well as planning, managing, and budgeting the school security force. He hopes to professionalize the system by restructuring the duties of his men, since the present system of patrol "leaves them no flexibility whatsoever." The new director says that it is much better to "let him (the officer) roam at will to the areas with a high level of activity," instead of keeping him on a precisely timed round. "We want to be where the action is," Crawford concluded.

Crawford has had 26 years' experience in security and law enforcement. He has an A.B. in Economics and Foreign Affairs from the University of Pittsburgh, and attended the Military Police School and a Traffic Institute at Northwestern University. Most recently he has been teaching business management, business law, and military science in North Carolina. "The college is delighted to welcome a security director with the experience, knowledge, and ability that Mr. Crawford brings to the demanding position," said President Binder.

Crawford believes that Juniata has fewer security problems than most colleges, and that those which do exist are caused by a very small percentage of the Parent's Weekend has finally ended and its "festivities and gala events" will not occur for another full year. Unfortunately the grilled ham and cheese sandwiches with authentic melted cheese and the cut-to-order roast beef and baked ham served for Saturday's lunch and dinner are also gone for another full year. But one item that will remain with us either in theory or in actuality is the proposed sports complex of which Student Government President Ken Anderson reported to the crowd at the Parents Association breakfast last Sunday.

An article in the Oct. 4 issue of the Juniatian revealed that the proposed sports complex would cost an estimated three million dollars. Bill Alexander, business manager "guaranteed" that the money for this would not be taken from the student's tuition, but rather what Foster Ulrich, vice president for development termed the "Second Century Development Plan".

Another article in the Oct. 11 issue revealed that $385,000 is being spent to renovate Founders Hall. Alexander stated that specific fund raising programs have not yet been started to pay for this renovation.

It seems as though the administration is quite optimistic about obtaining money for these projects, and at the same time keeping the rest of the college in order. At the Student Government meeting where the proposal was discussed, Senator Jeff Keffer was told that this sports complex would not deter from the "usual maintenance" of other buildings and grounds of the college. But this usual maintenance seems non-existent when one looks at Oller Hall.

The building as it is now will not hold all of the students, let alone any visitors, parents, alumni, as was quite evident at last year's All Class Night and Rocky Horror movie showing. In terms of maintenance, the paint is peeling pathetically, bare wires of the stage lights are a fire and safety hazard, and the stage needs to be replaced because the numerous standings of the floor have left it too thin to be repaired. The bellows of the famed organ are dry-rotted along with the side curtains, and the upholstery of the seats has seen its better days. The inadequate and outdated stage facilities themselves need attention, and all this is under a leaky roof.

All of these items need attention, whether to be repaired or replaced, and although this is part of Ulrich's Second Century Development Plan to take care of these things, it falls miserably under the top-priority sports complex. Surely Oller Hall should be one of the top priorities simply by the amount of use it gets. All band and choir productions, Artist's Series, concerts, movies, speech and theatre classes, lectures, and all campus convocations are held there.

Why have these things in Oller Hall been left deteriorate so long? Certainly it could not be sheer neglect on the part of the administration. But maybe financial reasons could be holding them back. If this s the case it would seem ridiculous to start a "Taj Mahal" sports complex if money to renovate Oller and Founders Hall are not yet available. It seems as though the administration wants to buy a Cadillac when they can't afford to fix their Rambler.

Even if Ulrich's fund raising campaign brings in a lot of money for the school, a better sense of priorities is in itself top priority in terms of where the money should be spent. Wouldn't it be better to upgrade our present campus buildings to the level of adequacy rather than leave them as they are and start a three million dollar project?

If the administration would take reasonable measures to update and upgrade Oller Hall and other buildings on campus BEFORE starting the sports complex, it would receive full support from The Juniatian. Hopefully the administration will see it this way, but if not The Juniatian gives an emphatic NO toward the sports complex proposal.

Letters to the Editor

Fire is a hazard

Dear Editor:

Yes, I know, fires are things which other people are involved in. You will never be in a burning building, it's always someone else. I have been in burning buildings twice, and closely witnessed a third, but I'm someone else.

I am alarmed at the attitude that Juniata's students take concerning fire. Living in a dorm for only six weeks I have seen one fire extinguisher emptied, and witnessed a false fire alarm. Abuse of this equipment can have serious consequences.

While in junior high I was involved in my first fire. A locker caught on fire during sixth period. A quick thinking teacher grabbed a fire extinguisher; it was already empty due to the prank of some student. Spotting the difficulties of this teacher, another pulled the alarm. Finding other extinguishers empty, their concerns turned to evacuation as the fire was spreading rapidly. The fire alarm had been ignored by students and teachers; pulling the alarm was another popular prank. Someone ran to the office and had the fire announced over the public address system. The public address was out of order in my sixth period classroom. We were informed that the school was on fire by two firemen who barged in our room and escorted us out.

The second fire I was involved in was only three years later in a different school. I was doing my homework in a school hall while waiting for the bus when I noticed smoke coming from a room down the hall. My companion also spotted it, grabbed an extinguisher and ran down the hall. The fire, which was feeding on an extremely flammable wall covering, was put out in only seconds.

On the campus of the same school I witnessed the burning of the largest wood barn in Ohio. The fire spread to the houses several hundred yards away where teachers lived. The school's extinguishers were used by students to stop these fires. The barn burned, but because of the extinguishers, as many as five additional houses may have been saved.

But, go ahead, abuse the equipment. You will never be in a burning building. It will be someone else.

To me, ~~you~~ are someone else.

Sincerely yours,
Barbara Parks

There is a group of people living on this campus whom nobody sees very often, if at all. According to some students, these "others" have perfected a scientific process which enables them to be invisible. According to other students, the Unseen Ones are paranoid and hide all the time. But the majority of Juniata students have only heard an infrequent rumor of these amazing entities, and (save for the occasional short-term roommate syndrome) have no contact with them at all.

I am one of the fortunate few who have actually seen some of the workings of these nearly unknown people. We were getting ice over at the Science Center one evening, and one of my friends fell into the machine. This requires extreme uncoordination and a bit of pedal insecurity, not to mention a complete ignorance of safety factors. Anyway, he fell into the ice machine and accidentally hit a knob which opened a secret panel in the rear of the compartment. There we saw a small elevator. Being both curious and careless, we entered the elevator and descended. There were seven subbasements in the Science Center, and on each level we found evidence of a very secret and closed society of science, including chemical reproduction of the self, know as "auto-cloning."

These people are actually quite humanoid, except for the complete lack of creativity that they have. They've all incorporated themselves into the National Unseen Research and Drool Society (N.U.R.D.S.). To become a member, you must be heavily into either researching or drooling, although naturally you can be an apprentice if you merely want to learn either or both of these antisocial behavior patterns.

Of course, to hold an elected office or to gain prestige within this highly-structured organization, you must develop a proficiency in

Dr. Arnold Tilden, dean of student services, will be available to answer questions that students might have concerning the proposed tuition hike on Monday, Oct. 29 at 7 p.m. in Alumni Hall of the Brumbaugh Science Center. The tuition increase goes before the Board of Trustees this weekend for approval.

This week's question was:

What do you think about the proposed 12.3% raise on the tuition at Juniata?

I agree that we do need to expand our academic, social, and recreational curriculum. However, a 12.3% tuition hike is too much of an increase. I think we need to take more gradual steps for families to adjust financially.

Dan Hutchinson (82)

An increase of 12.3% is too much. I can understand with inflation that tuition will be increased, but 12.3% seems ridiculous. How can they justify such a large increase.

Sandy Savidge (83)

I can understand the growing rate of inflation causing an increased cost of education, but isn't a 12.3% increase going to put the price of Juniata out of reach of many middle income families? Are we going to have a school made up only of students from wealthy families and students eligible for large sums of financial aid? Seems a little fishy to me that Juniata would attract its largest freshman class and half way through the first term tell them they're going to have to pay 12.3% more the following year. Its kind of like an insect being attracted to a venus-flytrap, the only difference being the unfortunate bug loses his life while the lucky middle income student gets away with only losing an arm and a leg.

Band Received Enthusiastically

by Heather MacCrindle

Parent's Weekend was hot, but the Juniata College Band was even hotter as they performed before a large crowd of proud parents and enthusiastic students in Oller Auditorium. Band director Ibrook Tower's enthusiasm was easy to see as he urged the music from his talented group of over forty musicians with his quick, sharp directions.

Pesenting their concert, "Golden Trumpets, Slide Trombones, and Licorice Sticks" they captured the mood of an outdoor bandstand as they began with the patriotic strains of a "Star Spangled Spectacular." The concert offered something for everyone, featuring twelve diverse selections ranging from polkas, operetta overtures, and ragtime to Sousa marches.

Willing to put his musicians on the line, Ibrook Tower featured each section of the band alone at least once during the performance in selections like, "Clarinet Polka," "Glory of the Trumpets," and "Lassus Trombone."

As the night wore on the musicians responded to the audience's applause and returned from a brief intermission to play their best. The Cole Porter medley was done with skillful emotion, especially the trumpet solo.

Solos seemed the event of the evening, for after the director's all-out advertisement for more drummers, Freshman John Farrugia, the lone percussionist accused of playing at least 35 different instruments, showed them exactly what they'd be up against.

Soloist in the "Sandpaper Ballet," John played of all things — sandblocks. In an interview afterwards, John said he liked the piece, "It was unique, a definite crowd pleaser." When asked about his ability to play so many percussion parts he replied, "that's the difference between just a drummer and a percussionist."

This number which brought whistles from the crowd was highlighted also by the soft-shoe dancing of Craig Greusel and Alecia Masood, whose straw hats, Varsity sweaters, and canes added the perfect "Band in the park" atmosphere.

Hard to top, this number was dramatically followed by a smashing rendition of "The Stars and Stripes Forever", as the trilling flutes and pounding trombones brought down the curtain on a very enjoyable concert.

Viewpoint

Just before term ended, I tried to "spark the spirit" of some of the students at Juniata College. I felt (and still feel) that the unity and togetherness of brothers and sisters of the sixties far surpassed that of the brothers and sisters of today. This is obvious by the many attempts made in the sixties to make right some of the wrongs that were going on all across the country. The student power of the sixties demanded answers to questions that went unanswered for far too long a time. They got out and did something to better not only themselves or the school, . . . but to better the country in general.

Since that time, I've noticed that there has been born into Juniata an oganization now working to initiate plans to involve themselves in such areas as recycling, highway clean-up, as well as those relating to energy use and production and strip mining control. The students involved with this project definitely reflect the concern of many others, (many who are not even students). This group, or organization, should be praised for the work they are doing to help "keep America beautiful". The two leading students in this group, Hattie Braun and Claire LaNoue, show what can be accomplished when serious minded students get together to do something.

Well, now it's time for a few others to put away their dancing shoes, and set aside the parties in order that they may concern themselves with some of the problems facing the community as a whole. There's a time for work, and a time for play, and everyone on campus should set aside a little time to "do something" instead of just setting around after class trying to get a party together. Sure, it's nice to set around with friends "burning the midnight magic oil", while the stereo blasts out a beat that you're probably lost in anyway, but . . . you can't just continue to totaly ignore whats going on all around you. Let's face it, when the keg is empty, and there's nothing left to fill the bowl, and all the drunken smoke is cleared from the room, you're right back in reality. That reality isn't gonna change unless you as an individual "do something" to make it change. And you can, you're somebody important too!

Too many are just setting around waiting for someone else to come to them with an idea. Too many feel that they themselves can't really do anything. However, it only takes a single spark to start a prairie fire. No one has to tell you or show you what needs to be done or what the concerns of the community are. Like Dylan said many years ago, "you don't need a weatherman, to tell which way the wind blows."

Hopefully this year there will be more students concerned with the issues and problems of today, than there was last year.

Just remember, the sister or brother next to you right now is probably aware of the same problems you are. But if neither one takes the initiative to stand up and do something, then neither one has the right to expect someone else to do it. So do something . . . do it now!

THE MOTELS Capitol 11996

The Motels are probably the most ambitious new wave band to emerge in months. It is a freshly done debut album with a punk/50's composition that is extremely catching. The lyrics are full of cutting sneers and jilts that dramatize even the most simple matter. These biting lyrics combined with the forceful percussion and articulate instrumentation show that the band is serious about their music, and spared nothing in preparation of their first album.

The five-member band consists of Martha Davis-vocalist, guitarist and chief songwriter, Jeff Jourard-guitars, Martin Life Jourard-keyboards and sax, Michael Goodroe-bass, and Brian Glascock-drums.

Some of the best cuts on the album include Porn Reggae, a song with a reggae beat telling of fantasies and pornography.

Anticipating is another song telling of the predictability of the bar scene. Every move is stated ahead of time and the song pleads for some originality.

Celia is probably the best song on the album depicting feelings of two people involved in a now broken love affair and the guilt-ridden initiator of it.

All in all, The Motels are one of the better new wave bands to come forth. The complex melodies loaded lyrics pull them into the top of the new wave category. The Motels receive a B PLUS.

Noll Reads Poetry

Bink Noll, a widely-published and internationally-acclaimed poet, will read his poems at Juniata College tonight, Thursday evening, Oct. 25.

Currently poet-in-residence and professor of English at Beloit College (Wisconsin), Noll will read in the lounge of Juniata's recently-completed Humanities Center at 8:15 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Noll's reading is the first of three events comprising the fall series of "Masks and Mirrors," coordinated by Juniata's Department of English. The public is cordially invited to attend and there is no charge for admission.

The famed poet's appearance at Juniata is something of a "homecoming" for him, as he was the college's artist-in-residence during the 1970 spring term.

He has published three volumes of poetry, the first of which — 1962's "The Center of the Circle" — drew considerable critical praise. He published "The Feast" in 1967 and recently finished his third volume, "The House," a collection of poems unified by their domestic theme.

Also widely-published in leading periodicals, Noll's poems have appeared in "The Atlantic"; "Saturday Review"; "Poetry"; the "Yale Review"; "The Nation"; and "The Chicago Tribune."

A graduate of Princeton University, Noll received his M.A. degree from the Johns Hopkins University and his Ph.D. from the University of Colorado.

A frequent lecturer about poetry before college and university audiences across the nation, Noll also made a 1967-68 return-visit to Princeton, where he served as the Resident Fellow in Creative Writing.

William L. Hofelt, Jr., assistant professor of English and "Masks and Mirrors" coordinator, says that "Mr. Noll loves returning to Huntingdon, an indication that his Oct. 25 reading will be very special, indeed."

These students, members of Mrs. Goehring's Play Production class, are performing the classic children's story "The Ant and the Grasshopper" this week and next at various area elementary schools. The actors are: (rear) Elyce Eisele, Pat Conroy, (middle) Cindy McNight, Kate Graeff, Rick Mayher, Ken Long, Amy Gruen. and (seated on ground) Karen Snyder. (Photo by Jerry Keenan)

College Arranges Internships

Reflecting its continuing commitment to provide its students with practical, career-related educational experiences, Juniata College has arranged several internship opportunities in Washington, D.C.

According to William C. Vocke, chairman of the political science department and project coordinator, internships are available during the 1980 spring semester in Congressional offices, Executive and Judicial agencies, private organizations and businesses, public interest groups and national associations.

The internships focus on many areas of interest, including international affairs, the environment, energy, consumer affairs, journalism, legal services, communications, health, the arts, urban affairs and business.

"Internships have become an increasingly popular component of students' curricula, for they provide students with the opportunity to integrate academic theory with practice in an applied situation," Vocke explained.

In addition, he added, internships enable students to develop professional skills, to explore career options, to participate in professional work experiences, and to discover strengths and weaknesses in their academic backgrounds so that they may better prepare for a career. "The internships in Washington D.C., also provide students with an extraordinary opportunity for personal development, as they experience the wealth of political, historical and cultural attractions available in the nation's capital," Vocke commented.

The internships have been developed in conjunction with the Washington (D.C.) Center for Learning Alternatives (WCLA), a non-profit educational agency which develops the individual placements. The agency also provides internship placement, supervision, evaluation, academic courses, seminars, housing and other support services for students from colleges and universities throughout the country.

During the internship — which lasts for a full term — participating students remain enrolled at Juniata, receiving academic credit based on evaluations performed by the WCLA staff and faculty and facilitated by Juniata's liaison with WCLA.

Most interns are juniors, seniors or graduate students, but some sophomores also have participated in the WCLA program. Placements are available in a wide-range of interests and are appropriate for majors in any discipline.

Vocke noted that students interested in pursuing the possibility of an internship in Washington, D.C., should contact him at 643-4310, extension 11, for more information.

The deadline for the return of applications for the 1980 spring term program is Jan. 11, 1980.

meal plan to the college. Wetzel stated that many students had approached him regarding a meal plan that would offer the student the option to eat 21 or 14 meals each week. According to Wetzel many students who eat less than 21 meals per week feel "cheated"; as though they were subsidizing another student's eating habits.

DeWalt explained that the current meal plan is ordered by the college administration. As a caterer DeWalt is given instructions from the school which determine the type of meal plan offered.

The food service director added that if a 14 meal per week plan is offered to the student the difference in cost would be marginal.

Wetzel also questioned DeWalt regarding the variations from the printed menu that the food service distributes to the campus.

"There have been more changes from the original menu this year than there were last year," admitted DeWalt. He attributes this to the fact that the food service attempts to keep the food used in its menu as fresh as possible. Therefore, produce is not delivered weeks in advance but instead only days before the needed date. If a delivery is late for any reason, the kitchen must go with another menu.

In order to avoid confusion in the future, DeWalt is in the process of working with WKVR-FM so the daily food menus can be announced.

Cloister senator Dennis Hart asked DeWalt what the "all-purpose meat patty" actually consists of.

"The country fried steak, the grilled dinner patty and swiss steak are all the same fabricated beef patty but they are all prepared in a different manner," responded DeWalt.

He went on to explain that "The veal patty is veal and the salisbury steak is a different item which is prepared from bulk ground beef and seasonings by the food service."

When the dinner patty is run against other items it is consumed by the students at a ratio of 2-1 to all other entrees.

Julie George asked if the variety of the food differed this year from last. DeWalt commented that the variety is the same this year. "In fact," he explained, "we are using the same cycle menu from last year this year. It is exactly the same menu." DeWalt added that no changes or cutbacks on particular food items have occurred.

DeWalt explained that the biggest problem the food service faces is waste — not waste of prepared food but waste that results from "lazy" students. "I'm talking about the lazy student who, instead of making three separate trips to the milk dispenser returns to his seat with three glasses and then decides not to drink it," DeWalt stated. The problem also exists with butter patties, condiments, fruit (according to DeWalt some fruit is returned to the dish room untouched) and desserts.

"If the problem of waste could be controlled," stressed DeWalt, "we could offer a better food service to the student."

The lack of ice in the dining hall was also discussed. DeWalt explained that the three ice machines the college owns are constantly breaking down. Parts are presently on order to repair the machines. Until the machines are repaired DeWalt must purchase ice. He commented that while the machines are the property of the college and not Hallmark Food Service, the caterer must absorb the costs of purchasing ice while the machines are out of order. This added expense naturally cuts into his food budget.

DeWalt concluded by stating he relies on the suggestion board outside of the dining hall as a vehicle for students to voice concern over any food service matter. The possibility of forming a Food Service Committee that would work with DeWalt was discussed. The suggestion will be brought before the Senate at their next meeting.

by Jerry Keenan

She may be hard-hatted, but she sure isn't hard-hearted.

Mrs. Carolyn English, the college's PBX operator, is presently the only college employee working in Founders Hall. When Founders was vacated late last Spring for renovation, Mrs. English was required to remain due to the impossibility of moving the switchboard.

"It's been the longest summer of my life," says Mrs. English. "I get very lonely. The only ones in here are the construction workers and me." She says that, although the workers are very friendly and talk to her on occasion, she misses the students. "I get desperate for people."

The switchboard was moved to the back hallway of the first floor from its usual location in the middle of the building. Mrs. English must therefore work in the confines of the rear entrance hallway. In addition, she is supposed to wear a hard hat.

"I have claustrophobia," laughs the operator, "I can't sit here and work with a hard hat on." She says that the only time that the helmet would have been necessary was when a construction worker dropped a screwdriver near her while installing the ceiling. "I kiddingly accused him of trying to get me because he dropped it again later in the day!"

Another disadvantage of the switchboard's present location is dirt. Upon returning from lunch one day Mrs. English found her stand-in cowering outside the door. "I don't think you want to go in there, Mrs. English," said the frightened girl. With a certain degree of trepidation the operator went in, only to find the room covered with plaster dust. Mrs. English went home, changed into jeans, and went back to work.

Mrs. English tries to look on the bright side. She says that the maintenance people have been very good to her during the times that she has been without heat, light, or electricity. Plus, the back hallway affords a beautiful view of the surrounding hills. "I'm looking forward to the day when everyone is back in their little corners."

In the meantime the operator welcomes anybody who wants to visit her. She believes that the block lettered "No Trespassing" signs on the doors of Founders may figure in her lack of visitors. She insists, however, that it's all right for people to enter the building to see her; nobody will object. An occasional student does come by, but not often enough to keep Mrs. English from getting lonely.

"People that care . . . that makes my day; lifts my spirit," says Mrs. English with a smile before turning back to the switchboard.

"Good morning, Juniata College. . . ."

Field Goal Upends Indians

by Doug Williams

Juniata dropped to 2-4 last Saturday losing 10-7 to Upsala before their largest crowd of the season. Upsala's winning tally was a 40-yard field goal two minutes into the fourth quarter. The lead stood up despite some good offensive series by the Indians.

Juniata showed some imaginative play calling especially in the first half. In fact they had more first downs and total offense than Upsala, but the Viking defense came up with the big play and held Juniata to a third quarter touchdown by DeWayne Rideout.

Untimely turnovers helped slow the Indians on several drives, and in the fourth quarter a fourth and inches run was halted a breath away from the first-down marker to stop a good drive.

While the offense was having trouble with Upsala's defense, the Juniata defense was making life tough for the Vikings. Out of nine attempted passes only three were completed and two were intercepted. Shepard, Ford, Smith, and Blauch all were in double figures in tackles, and the entire secondary played well.

A good game on offense was turned in by Tom Bell who had 66 yards in 12 carries (5.5 yard average), Rideout who had 19 carries for 77 yards, and Jim Jones who had five receptions for 58 yards. However, a 33% completion rate, no thanks to countless dropped passes, and three interceptions by quarterback Mike Nett and some good kicking by Upsala hampered Juniata's performance.

Tom Bell runs ball against Upsala for gainer. The Indians came up on the short end, 10-7.

The World Series is over and we can all finally start breathing again. It was a true classic or as classic as any World Series that goes seven games could be.

However I wonder what odds Jimmy the Greek would put on these two teams if it was April again. Putting favorites aside, what pair of teams provided as much surprise as the Pirates and the Orioles did in winning their respective pennants. When the season started, Pete Rose got more ink than the Pirates, and the invincibility of the Yankees was more deserving of newsprint than those no-name Baltimore Orioles. The Pirates made believers in their non-family members by showing the Folis' and Madlocks' and Morenos' were just as importnat as the Parkers' and Stargells'. And one has to give Earl Weaver credit for proving that no-names don't necessarily have no-talent.

Then after each team proved convincingly in the playoffs that this matchup was destined, they exhibited the World Series as the baseball showcase it was designed to be. And they did it despite ABC and the weather.

From Game 1 it promised to be an extraordinary Series. The Orioles scored five in their first chance at plate, putting Baltimore fans in ecstasy and giving Roone Arledge ulcers. It turned out Baltimore just barely hung on and then Pittsburgh returned the favor the next night.

The next two games had to be embarrassing for Pittsburgh and exhilarating for Baltimore. Unpredictability was the theme for this year's Series and both games were true to form. Down three games to one, Willie Stargell remarked with casual eloquence, "I don't think anybody has seen the real Pittsburgh Pirates yet." What a comeback, and to take nothing away from the Orioles, they did it in mind-numbing fashion.

The final score showed Pittsburgh Pirates to be the World Champions and they deservedly were, but no one was there to declare the Orioles a lesser team for it.

Vocke, however, was very frank in stating that he does not believe a third professor is even being considered by the school. He pointed out that the administration is unsure how many students a new three-man department would have, nor how well the student body outlook would be. They, therefore, decided to keep the space open, save some money, and see how a two-man department would work out. So far, the lack of a third professor has forced the department to drop a few courses from its curriculum, but the remaining courses have been placed on an alternate basis in order to stop any more from being dropped.

As department head, Vocke was against the move. "I don't approve of it in terms of the department," he said. He did go on to state that he understood the school's need for "long range planning."

Vocke made it clear that in order for a third professor to be hired, certain requirements would have to be met such as: Vocke and Mr. Baldino, the instructor who replaced Dr. Da Silva, must earn their PhD's. They must demonstrate that there is enough student interest in Political Science. They must show that they have the capability to use a third professor.

It seems as though the latter of these two requirements have already been met.

"Thanks"

Dear Editor,

This is just a short letter to convey my deepest and sincerest thanks to the Juniata Campus for making Parent's Weekend a success. The cooperation and support I found in setting up the overall program was very gratifying and it was a great source of satisfaction to know that there are people who care enough to devote their time and energy toward a project as involved as this one was. All I can say is "thank you".

Wise Resigns

by Mark Infanti

Students and faculty alike have expressed great concern over the departure of Professor Charles W. Wise, who is leaving Juniata to pursue a career with Pittsburgh Plate Glass.

Currently employed as an Associate Professor of Economics and Business Administration, Wise will fulfill his obligation to the college for the fall term, and then assume the position of "Manager, Training — Coating and Resin Division, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Industries."

After seven years with Juniata, Wise was offered a position which he termed "a chance to pursue a challenging new career in an industry with which I am familiar."

In an interview, Wise expressed regret at having to leave the college with which he has developed strong ties. He wished to express that he felt no dissatisfaction with the school; rather, the prospect of a new career in a city of which he is very fond, simply held a stronger allure.

Another good place is in any dorm room that has no name or other adornment on the door. Nurds don't like to be known by name; most of them are clones or at least wish to be. Nurds can always find each other by means of homing devices contained in the battery packs of their belt-loop calculators, so they don't need to look for names on doors. Besides, they've all memorized the housing list by now.

Nurds take showers at 4:00 a.m. so nobody can see how they've mutated. And if you see a light on in the Science Center late at night, it's probably either a horny security guard gazing at Intro. to Anatomy texts or else a nurd doing his lab assignments two weeks in advance so that none of us can see his sophisticated techniques in practice.

Or if you hear a party going on where they're playing a lot of Barry Manilow, Neil Sedaka, the Carpenters or the Osmonds, you might just find a nurd or two in there, although i wouldn't count on it. Nurds don't listen to music too much, let alone go to parties.

Just one word of warning: Don't EVER call anyone you don't know a "nurd" because if the accusation is actually accurate, you may end up being the subject ot some suspicious scientific experimentation, which should be avoided at all cost!

both practices, preferably performed simultaneously. When an acceptable level of prestige is acquired, you are allowed to clone yourself.

The president of the Juniata College Chapter of N.U.R.D.S. has not been seen in public since last April when he devised a renegade computer terminal in the third sub-basement of the Science Center and began calculating the exact value of pi. So far he has met with little success except in an increasing number of decimal digits. He has survived down there so long by preserving and processing his bodily wastes and eating megavitamin marshmallows which, according to one reliable N.U.R.D.S. source, are quite effective in inducing saliva streams. He has eleven clones of himself, all of which are still infants. Although young, these predesigned prodigies are proficient in the programming of previously perplexing computer problems, and have already succeeded in planning space-ships and planetary colonisation techniques. The secret is to suppress all superfluous imagination in the young clones' mind. The results of such ventures are extremely rewarding to people like our College's N.U.R.D.S. prez.

But such dedicated member of N.U.R.D.S. are few and far between. Many apprentice nurds are forced to leave the organization because of their inability to disengage their attentions from social situations. (The colloquial term "nurd" was first introduced into the popular idiom by a converted former N.U.R.D.S. member. It refers to any member of the N.U.R.D.S. organization.)

For example, i have a friend who left not only the ranks of the N.U.R.D.S., but also Juniata College when the hard-core nurds made life miserable for him because of his lack of antisocial ability. The week before a Chemistry final, he asked a nurd from his class to let him look at her notes for two or three minutes because he had missed class one time that term. She replied "I'm sorry, i can't do that! It might wreck the curve!" Then, at the last lab session, my friend was smashing his leftover glass tubing, which is expected to be broken and therefore included in the lab fees. He was a little bummed out and frustrated from the course. The same nurdette shrieked and leaped across the room, shouting, "Don't break those! Give them to me, for my little sisters' chemistry sets!" My friend knew she was actually talking about her young clones, so he slowly crushed every last one of his tubes, even the un-bent ones, into a small pile of glass slivers. The nurd almost had a nervous breakdown, and my friend knew that his days as an apprentice nurd were numbered. He is now studying Physical Education at West Chester State.

There are a couple of places where you can catch a glimpse of a nurd, if you really feel like it. Try the science library. You'll have to peer over a wall of books to see any nurd in his native cubicle environment. They always leave books, and sometimes house plants, in their personally reserved library space.

Female Wins!

The Football contest was won by Connie Warden, the first female to win it this year. Connie got 9 out of 10 right. The sports editors are hoping that more females will follow in her footsteps and start participating, as well as the rest of the campus. Our picks for this week are: Rob Morris — Houston, Ball State, Georgia Tech, Georgia, Syracuse, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, St. Louis, Miami, Pittsburgh, 42 total points; Pat Conroy — Arkansas, Bowling Green, Georgia Tech, Georgia, Syracuse, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, St. Louis, Miami, Dallas, 38 total points.

Football Contest Entry Form

Juniatian Football Contest Rules:

1. The object is to select the winners of the ten games to be played over the next weekend.
2. To make a selection merely circle the teams you pick to win. If you want to predict a tie circle both teams.
3. Each contestant is permitted only one entry per week.
4. The Juniatian will award a $10.00 prize. To win, a contestant must predict the highest number of winning teams, and this prediction must tie or surpass all of the Juniatian sports editors. In the event of a tie among contestants and/or sports editors for the highest winning team count, the total points estimates will be used as a tiebreaker. If a tie exists the prize money will be evenly distributed to the winners.
5. All entries must be submitted by noon Sarurday. The entry boxes are located in the hallway by the Juniatian office or in the Ellis Hall lobby.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Juniatian except those directly associated with the Juniatian.

Circle the winners:		Home Team
Houston	vs	Arkansas
Bowling Green	vs	Ball State
Georgia Tech	vs	Tulane
Kentucky	vs	Georgia
Miami (Fla.)	vs	Syracuse
Navy	vs	Pittsburgh
Buffalo	vs	Detroit
Cleveland	vs	St. Louis
Green Bay	vs	Miami
Pittsburgh	vs	Dallas

Tiebreaker: Total points of the Pittsburgh-Dallas game. _____

Volleyball Ups Record

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Juniata's volleyball team had another good week, winning two matches on the road and stretching their record to 12-2.

October 16 found Larry's Ladies travelling to Altoona to face the branch campus of Penn State. Prior to this match-up, the home team was undefeated with a 11-0 record. The Indians easily broke that streak with 15-2, 15-2, 15-7 scores.

Messiah College was the twelfth team to fall victim to the tough JC spikers. With the serving leading the way, the Tribe beat their opponents 15-6, 15-9, 15-8.

Throughout both matches, JC was able to remain on the offensive and kept their opponents from attacking the ball. Julie George did an excellent job tying up the middle, allowing the outside hitters, Amy Bowser and Sue Barker, to go one on one on the sides.

Larry's Ladies faced Penn State-Altoona on Tuesday and St. Francis tonight — two teams that they easily beat already this season. This makes it difficult for the College Hill Gang to be psychologically prepared not only for the matches, but for the Mansfield Tournament tomorrow and Saturday.

The twelve teams entered in the competition are Syracuse, Army, Cornell, Hofstra, Rochester Institute of Technology, Allegheny College, Grove City, Western Maryland, U.P.J., Gettysburg, Juniata, and Mansfield State. The Tribe will have matches with some of these teams, but it will be a mixture of play between division 1, 2, & 3 schools.

The seeding for the tournament as well as order of play won't be announced until early tomorrow. It will be based on scores from matches already played.

Coach Larry Bock feels that "this team is getting better all the time. As long as our passing and serving holds up, anybody will have a tough time beating us. We will be strong if we pass well. Few teams can play offense with Juniata; the trouble is getting us on offense."

If Juniata does well at Mansfield, they will have a good chance of being invited to easterns.

Stickwomen Drop Record

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The powerful Juniata field hockey team appears to have run into a brick wall. Both Gettysburg a Shippensburg were able to completely shut down the offensive machine.

The Indians lost to Gettysburg 2-0. The Bullets scored both goals early in the game; the first, six minutes into the half and the second, three minutes later. JC managed only three shots on goal while their opponents had twenty. The defensive unit played a great game — Nanci Young was credited with 15 saves.

Gettysburg jay-vees also were victorious. They easily handled the Indian stickwomen, 4-0.

Shippensburg visited College Hill on Friday and left with a 2-0 win. Despite their seventeen shots on goal during the first half, Shippensburg was unable to score against JC's strong defense. However, after the intermission, the visitors quickly scored their two goals — 25 seconds into the half and the other, eight minutes later. The Indians managed only one shot on goal during the contest, while their opponents ended up with 28. Nanci Young was credited with 16 saves.

Juniata scrimmaged the Statewood Field Hockey Club from State College for a Parent's Weekend exhibition. It is a team made up of former high school and some college players. The tribe fared much better, as they walked away with a 3-0 victory.

Bonnie Cieslar scored the first goal seven minutes into the game and Debbie Spillaine made it 2-0 on her score just four minutes later. Marj Porter finished the scoring on a Lisa Masood assisted goal with 27 minutes gone in the half.

With the loss to Gettysburg, the Indian hopes for post season play at the MAC championships ended. However, on November 3 & 4, the Blue & Gold of College Hill will be entered in the Susquehanna Field Hockey Association Tournament. The girls will play as a team, but individuals as well as teams can advance to sectionals.

The last regular season match for the Indian stickwomen is Saturday on Langdon Field. JC will be trying for its first winning season in four years (the last three seasons ended with .500 records). Face-off with the Crusaders of Susquehanna is 1 p.m.

JC Kicked Around

by Cathy Oliver

Coming out of a scoreless first half, the York Spartans put away five goals in the second half to hand the Indians a 5-0 defeat in soccer action on College field last Wednesday.

First half action saw both the Indians and Spartans playing well. Holding each other at bay, the half ended with neither team getting up on the scoreboard.

The start of the second half was marked by a quick goal by the Spartan offense. Trailing 1-0, the Indians began to take control of the ball and play, but were still unable to get the ball into the Spartan net. As the half went on, the Spartans opened up their offensive attack and lead for a final score of 5-0. The York attack was built around forward Hans Kayser, who put in four goals for his team.

Despite losing, Marty Fitzpatrick of the Indians has to be cited for his determined brand of play, which consistently posed an offensive and defensive threat.

The Indians also saw action this past Saturday as they took a disappointing 2-0 loss at Albright. Many Indians felt the team played their best game of the year and should have come away with a win. Their next chance for a win comes this Saturday on College Field against Lock Haven.

Campaign Launched

Voting unanimously, the Juniata College Board of Trustees elected Saturday (Oct. 27) to launch a $13 million development program and to plan the construction of a multi-million dollar Sports + Recreation Center and other campus recreational improvements.

Divided into six parts, the 10-year program will be highlighted by construction of the new recreation center. The proposed 55,000 square-foot structure, to be annexed to the present Memorial gymnasium, racquetball and handball courts, and equal locker facilities for men and women.

It will also contain a large multi-purpose room, a wrestling-judo-gymnastics room, a weight-training room, as first aid-training room, and coaches' offices. Additional locker facilities and new spectator seating at College Field are planned as part of the project.

Charles C. Ellis, RCA vice president-finance and chairman of Juniata's board, observed that other objectives of the development program are: $1.5 million for campus development and renovation of existing buildings; $2 million for endowment growth; $1.5 million for scholarship assistance; $1.5 million for program enrichment and educational advancement;

Damage Accompanies Mountain Day

by Mike Ford

On the evening of October 16, the night before the original Mountain Day, the amount of damage on campus surpassed the amount of all previous damage up to that time. Paint was thrown on the outside wall of Tussey dorm, two fire extinguishers and one fire alarm were set off, and ceiling tiles and a mirror were broken in the same dorm. In addition, a bathroom window was broken in South. Arnold Tilden, dean of student services, stated that these incidents deeply "concern us, as we've been doing so well, and that one evening stands out as a problem."

No one was caught in any of the damage incidents, and Dean Tilden felt the "parties after the parties" were the cause of the problem. There were four staff members on campus, and they reported that the organized parties seemed like fine, responsible affairs, and it was felt that the damage occurred sometime late at night. As no offenders were caught, the residents of the respective dorms will have to pay for the repair/replacement costs.

Tilden felt that the year, in terms of damage, had been good so far, and Mountain Day Eve stands out as a problem. Therefore, a proposal has been made to Center Board to simply announce Mountain Day the morning of the actual day. (This is, in fact, how Mountain Day was announced early in the tradition's history.) Tilden stated several advantages to this proposal:

1. It would ensure good weather, and there would be no problems with a raindate.
2. It would be a spontaneous event.
3. It would help curb the damage problem.

When asked if he saw any problems with this spontaneous announcement, Dean Tilden said that friends and alumni who like to come to Mountain Day might not know about it, and it also

Trustee Committees Meet

by Jane Carothers

The Budget Committee and the Academic Affairs Committee of the Juniata College Board of Trustees met on Friday, October 26.

Attending the Budget Committee meeting were Earl D. Croner, Chariman; Leroy S. Maxwell, Klare S. Sunderland, and Joseph R. Good, trustees; Frederick M. Binder, President; Bill Alexander, Business Manager; William C. Rutter, Controller; Edward Kaminsky, faculty representative; and Jane Carothers and Denise Steele, student representatives.

The major issue discussed by the trustees was the proposed increase in tuition for the academic year 1980-81. The cost to students of $5,910 which was recommended by the committee represents as 12.3% increase over this year's cost, and includes tuition, $4,065; room, $855; and board, $990. Alexander expressed his opinion that this increase may even be too low, and that "at best, the 12.3% increase is marginally adequate." Further, he stated that last year's increase in tuition would have been inadequate had Juniata not been "bailed out by the increased enrollment." Sunderland pointed out that if tuition increases in the past had "kept pace" with the national inflation rate, Juniata's students would not be confronted with such a dramatic increase this year.

The data from which the amount of the tuition increase is determined includes an estimated 400 students in next year's entering class — approximately 50 less than the figure for 1979 — as well as a higher attrition rate to allow for the possibility of attrition due to dissatisfaction with the crowded living conditions which have resulted from the freshmen's triple occupancy rooms. Maxwell questioned this situation, and observed that the crowded living conditions "would provide a fertile ground for increased attrition." Maxwell also expressed concern that this year's increased enrollment may have been due, at least in part, to Juniata's price, which has remained comparatively low in view of the cost of other independent Pennsylvania schools.

The financial aid situation at Juniata was also discussed. Alexander stated that approximately 80% of the students at Juniata receive some type of financial aid and/or are employed by the

by Cathy Creswell

It is a fact that approximately 10% of the population in the United States is afflicted with problems relating to alcohol. On this basis it can be assumed that roughly 10% of the student body at Juniata have alcohol related problems, and this also means that there are on campus about 10% of the students whose parents have problems with alcohol.

To deal with these alcohol problems on campus there is CASE, the Committee on Alcohol Study and Education. The Committee members are Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, Dr. Jay Buchanan, Dr. Robert Fisher, Dr. James Lakso, Andy Murray, Father Tim Swope, Susan Twombly, Bob Hendricks, Phil Jones, and Trudy Rhodes.

Right now CASE is placing emphasis on starting a support group for students that come from homes where there are problems with alcohol. The idea is to bring students who share this concern together and to provide them an opportunity to express their feelings with others who share this concern.

CASE was initiated in the fall of 1977. Their first project was a workshop for R.A.s for help them deal with alcohol related problems that they might encounter. Then at the beginning of last year CASE held a condensed form of this seminar which was open to the entire campus.

Other goals of CASE which have been accomplished were non-alcohol seminars sponsored by Center Board and an alcohol education program which was incorporated into the Freshman Conference Program this year.

The program was designed for students in Freshman Conference to give them information on the biological and sociological effects

According to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the operating license for the Three Mile Island plant, owned by General Public Utilities, probably won't be revoked. However, the NRC stresses it is still investigating the company's response to the nuclear accident. A $155,000 fine on the GPU was proposed last week by the NRC for violations at the plant.

EDITORIAL:

Judging from the confused look in the eyes of many freshmen and the outrage of many of the seniors, registration is not a popular procedure for the majority of Juniata students. For many the irritation stems from the fact that it takes an exorbitant amount of time to comlete a seemingly simple procedure.

Aside from this extremely long and unnecessary wait in the initial line which gives the student entrance to registration other disturbing aspects that lend to the unfavorable character of the event also exist.

A bewildered class of freshmen was cited by one faculty member as a factor that slows down the process. The confusion of the freshmen obviously resulted from a lack of prior orientation regarding the registration process. While this might seem trivial, if more freshmen knew what to do the rate at which students could complete the procedure would improve. Information passed on to the freshmen during their Freshmen conference is an easy solution to this problem.

By the time one becomes a senior they are hopefully "well versed" in the "how tos" of registration enabling the student to enter and exit the event with relative ease. Unfortunately this is not always the case- one obstacle lies in the path of many: Senior Value Studies. According to Dr. Martin Clarke, faculty coordinator of SVS, being preregistered for the course does not guarantee the student a place in the section of his or her choice. This creates a problem for many students when classes become closed and students are faced with the problem of selecting another time slot that will be conducive to their schedule during registration. In some cases alternative time periods cannot be found immediately and students are placed on a waiting list until other arrangements can be made.

Clarke is sympathetic with the problem this creates for many students and explains that a solution is being sought to remedy the problem registration of SVS causes many students. Assessing student requests for desired time periods and then scheduling classes during these hours (there was not enough room in the 9:00 class to satisfy students needs) is one of the solutions currently under investigation. This appears to be a relatively simple answer to the problem- especially since students are preregistered for the time slots they desire, but Clarke pointed out that he did not receive the computer tabulations of preregistered students until the day before registration.

Therefore, until a viable solution is discovered it seems as though SVS will continue to be offered on a "first come first serve basis." A headache for students and faculty alike.

by Jeff Boulton

It's Thursday evening, and time for another exciting adventure of Milton Murphy, Masochist Nurd. This week's episode: Miltie has fun at Registration.

We will join our happy hero as he waddles out of his secret hideout in Sherwood. Having been heavily harassed by the freshmen and sophomores on his home hall, he prances proudly out of his dorm with his customary inane and inadequate impersonation of an urbane and patient senior, which he actually believes himself to be. "Today," thinks Milton to himself, "i will have a chance to show once more my sophistication by going to registration with my senior classmates!"

Upon reading his daily mail, he finds he must pay his bookstore bill in order to register. He toddles on down to do just that, thinking happy thoughts. "Oh, boy! This means i'll have six dollars and thirty-two cents for the rest of the term! Maybe i'll even have some money left for vacation!" He gleefully climbs the stairs, panting in anticipation and overexertion, looking forward to adding his very own name to his thoroughly enjoyable winter classes' rosters.

Although he is two hours early for registration, he is forced to join the line at the tail end, which at this point is in the pinball room. "Golly, this is sure going to be fun," thinks Miltie, forgetting to maintain his "concerned senior" countenance and breaking into an absolutely absent grin. "Look at all the fun people who came here," he remarks to his nearest neighbor. "Doethn't it jutht make you feel tho proud to be in thith thenior clath?"

The poor fellow, a mere sophomore, inches away from our fun-loving friend, and finds a familiar face further up the file. In a fit of unfettered fear he flies to his grumbling buddy, who joins him in sending undisguised, worried glances in the general direction of our gentle protagonist of doubtful gender.

Milton ignores these feeble attempts at offensiveness and turns to the young lady behind him. She regards him apprehensively. Milton assumes his customary suave senior attitude and uses the line he has developed throughout a seemingly eternal career of girl-meeting failures, "Hi there! How'th it going? I'm Milton; what'th your name?"

The female in question enters a state of near-panic, her eyes darting into distant corners of the pinball room. The few faces familiar to her avert themselves in apparent unwillingness; she observes many people's backs convulsing in attempts at containing giggles: a few people even laugh openly.

Milton sees how embarrassed she is, and tried to break the ice of her shyness, hoping the others will stop laughing at her. "I jutht think that there'th thumb people here in line in front of uth who aren't even theniorth! After a long pause, the girl's breathing becomes irregular and she starts to tremble, so Miltie asks, "What do you think about that?"

The young lady's knees buckle. She grabs a pinball machine for support and recovers her balance well enough to tear out of the area, screaming "MOMMY! MOMMY!!" A dozen or so people

Sp. Ed. Note: May I offer you the sincerest of apologies from the editors and the sports staff. I admit we were grossly in the wrong for overlooking this varsity sport and a restitution article will be forthcoming in the next issue. However, I must correct a major fallacy in your letter. After it was brought to the attention of the editorial staff, we offered an apology and an article in the upcoming issue. Later, upon realization that we had neither a reporter available nor an editor that had an adequate knowledge of cross-country, we ASKED if the person filing the complaint would be willing to write that article, since they had an intimate knowledge of the sport. They WILLINGLY agreed. In the past, Soccer and Girl's basketball both had writers that were also part of the team. However, since you feel slighted we will have a staff writer for your article.

Cross-Country "Upset"

To the editor, sports editor and sports staff,

There has been one interscholastic and one club sport to be consistently "overlooked" in your sports write-ups. We are speaking of the men's and women's cross-country teams respectively. The men's team has increased our wins eight-fold since last year's 1-9 season, and now stands at 8-2. We let the first few meets slip, because we may have been overlooked, but after the Homecoming we became angry that though there was a full page of the weekend's activities, cross-country wasn't even men-

Students Speak

by Hilaire Veith
photographs by Robin Borthwick

This week's question was:
Where do you stand on the issue of capital punishment and do you feel it is a deterrent to crime?

I am in favor of capital punishment in the instance of premeditated murder. I feel that it may be somewhat of a deterrent in a crime such as this. It may make the individual contemplating such an act to reconsider.

Kathy Splane ('80)

In no way will everyone ever come to agreement. I personally do not feel it is an effective deterrent, however in occasions of multiple murders I do believe it is a good thing. The murderer is removed from society and the relatives of the victim often gain a belief that the death of a loved one has not gone without punishment.

Gwen Sterling ('80)

Since many crimes (murders) are acts of passion I feel that capital punishment is not an effective deterrent to these sort of crimes. Also the loss of a life does not justify the taking of a life especially if there is hope of reforming the criminal.

Lynn Stellander ('81)

I do not think that anyone has the right to take the life of another, no matter what the circumstances. I have always been against it, and as for deterring crime, I don't think that many criminals think of the consequences of the death penalty before killing someone, therefore I believe it not to be effective.

Terry Heffner ('82)

If an individual has been proven guilty I think I could pull the switch, because I do believe it deters a certain number of murders.

Jim Klein ('82)

On The Couch

Did you ever have on of those days where nothing seems to go right? From the moment you wake up five minutes late for your 9:00 exam until you wait thirty minutes in dinner line for food service's version of Dracula's Dog Chow — "mystery meat," everything has been disasterous. It's been a bad day and its' getting worse, you're hitting your anxiety level — what do you do to get it all out? The No. 1 response on Juniata's campus is to get "D & D" — drink and destroy. Truly a sign of maturity, creativity and productiveness, isn't it? Or is there some better alternative?

Last Thursday was registration for winter term. Like usual, some classes that were pre-registered for, turn out to be full — Did anybody tell you this beforehand? Surprise, surprise! Now it's your job to find another course which fits into your schedule, relevant to your major and that is still open, in five minutes. For some people this rather absurd situation creates a rather intense level of frustration — especially after four years. What's the release going to be? The "D & D" option is not open to you for obvious reasons — but verbal assault on the registering professor is possible — go do it. Really lay into him; an upper cut to his self-esteem, a low blow to the ego and a hard job to his functioning level of competency. All right!! Now that you've made your point, irrational as it might have sounded, and you got absolutely nowhere, what's the next move? D & D, that night? Come on people, think a little harder —

Believe it or not, there are ways to change frustrating situations on campus productively. There are positions especially created to receive student input: student services, academic affairs, food service meetings open to the student body — even resident advisors are there to help us out or give us direction as to where to turn for information. After all, students are an essential part of Juniata College and if there is something which needs to be changed, we are the ones who have to initiate it. What good does it do the "D & D" route when there are more effective channels open to us. And by utilizing these channels we can get rid of our frustration while at the same time making life at Juniata a little bit better. The important thing to realize is that individual efforts are important — that's one of the major luxuries of a small college. And it's left up to us to make our frustration work for us — along with Juniata College.

(Note: Some have suggested that feedback from pre-registration to let us know what classes have been filled would alleviate a lot of last minute hassles. What do you think?)

tioned. How much more in the limelight must we be to get mentioned and recognized by the "Juniatian" as a sport? Granted cross-country isn't a spectacular sport but we feel we deserve something for the hours and miles of training we do everyday.

The most annoying thing was the appointment of one of the women from the cross-country team to do the next article for the "Juniatian". This only occurred after one of your staff realized or was told that we were being shafted and maybe this would be a way of putting the burden and blame on us and get you into the clear. Why should cross-country be the only sport that writes their own articles? Well, we don't believe that we should, and if the sports staff can find the time to write on all the other sports, one more should not be that much more of a burden. We also feel that there should be an apology and some sort of restitution article covering our season.

Signed by all the members of the cross-country team and club.

The program also wanted to dispel certain myths surrounding alcohol and its use. For instance, alcohol actually causes problems with the sleep cycle which can lead to loss of memory and a lack of concentration. And an increasing tolerance to alcohol is one of the first symptoms of alcoholism.

Also brought to students' attention was the influence by the mass-media, especially through advertising, on our current attitudes toward alcohol and its consumption.

The overall goal of the program was to make students aware of their own values in, relation to alcohol and its use on campus. It is hoped that this will encourage students to act in a responsible manner when using alcohol.

Other plans being considered by CASE include a seminar on alcohol with booths having information dealing with such topics as law enforcement in relation to alcohol, the idea of responsible hosting at functions where alcohol is being served, and the biological effects of alcohol on the body.

Since it is believed that many students drink due to the pressures of college, Dr. Buchanan is working on non-chemical ways of dealing with stress. The committee is also thinking of starting a "hotline" for students with problems or questions dealing with alcohol.

FRESH TRACKS
Blondie — Eat To The Beat —— Chrysalis 1225

This is Blondie's fourth album to date and Eat to the Beat reveals the band's expansion of already musical borders in both delicate harmonies and articulate instrumentation. On their first three albums, Blondie, Plastic Letters, and Parallel Lines, the group's primary focus was on the 'pop' sound, since the harsh gutteral sound of pure punk fell to this 'new wave'.

Lately, however, new wave or punk bands have combined different qualities of the two styles and emerged with a middle-of-the-road sound, so to speak. Groups and performers such as Joe Jackson, The Cars, The Police, The Motels etc., and now Blondie are combining satirical, blunt "contemporary naturalism" lyrics with a harder hitting instrumentation than true-to-form pop. The success of this fusion can be reflected by the fact that each of these groups and performers enjoy mass popularity, all of them selling over a million records each.

This latest Blondie album, however, goes even harder on instrumentation than they have in the past. This is clearly evident when first listening to the album.

One of the best cuts on the LP is Atomic, an upbeat tune with Clem Burke's highly emphasized percussion and an amazingly striking harmonica piece. The tune's lyrics relate nuclear powers to human sexuality.

Dreaming is probably the only true-to-form pop song on the album, vaguely reminiscent of a cross between an old Tommy Boyce and Bobby Hart song with one of Ricky Nelson. Blondie's end result is much better, however, fusing smooth flowing melodies with lead singer Deobrah Harry's clear, clean vocals.

Another one of the better cuts is Die Young — Stay Pretty, a self-explanatory song making the best of Nigel Harrison's bass playing expertise and Jimmy Destri's keyboards.

Frank Infante and Chris Stein's intricate guitar riffs are clearly evident in Sound A Sleep, a slow melodic tune which as the title suggests resembles a modern lullaby.

The fusion of pop and new wave or punk styles has been commercially successful in the past, but Blondie's move to a harder style seems to push the border to the limit, beyond what has been proven commercially. It is always refreshing to come across a band who experiments with their music despite possible commercial failure. It seems they are the ones truly interested in music, not money. Blondie's Eat To The Beat album rates a B from Fresh Tracks.

are rolling around on the dirty floor, and Milton overhears someone saying that the girl was only a freshman. "Oh, tho that'th why she wath tho upthet — she wath feeling guilty!" Everybody loses it, and Milton joins in their laughter. "What an enjoyable senior class i am art of," he muses. "They all know the freshman chicks don't know how to handle me!"

After a four-hour wait and stringing of similar experiences, Milton is still in the pinball room. Registration should have started two hours ago, and he begins to tire of the stagnating circus in the room.

It's been fun, but it's about time to see why the line's not moving. Milton strolls up the line and sees a sophomore from his hall who informs him that freshmen must go to the rear. Drawing from past experience, Milton now realizes that all seniors have already been admitted to the ballroom.

He storms the entrance desk. "I'm a THENIOR!" he cries authoritatively. The people at the desk are seized in hilarity for a couple of minutes. He tells his name, and is told (between brief bursts of laughter) that he must show the receipt for his book bill, which he had inadvertantly filed in the waste basket.

After securing a duplicate copy of the receipt and waiting at the desk for awhile again (enjoying once more the cheer of his fellow students), Milton triumphantly strides into the ballroom. Having taken only required subjects and introductory courses for three and a third years, Milton is glad to be a senior because of the priority afforded him. He has pre-registered for two non-introductory 100-level courses and SVS.

However, his 100-level courses are both filled (reminding him of eight previous registrations in which he had had no prerequisites), so he is forced to take XY 101 and ZZ 101. He has saved the best for last, however: signing up for SVS, the culmination of his academic career; the commencement of a new life!

After 45 minutes in the SVS line, he is informed that all SVS sections are filled. "But i have to take ThVTh thith winter! If not, i won't be able to finish my Pwogwam of Emphathith thith thpring and graduate will all my thenior friendth!" he shrieks, in disbelief. "I thigned up for thith courthe latht year! THITH THUCTH!!" This last phrase spreads spittle across the eyeglasses of both faculty members facing him, who react by being astonished and grossed-out at the same time. Milton falls to the floor, kicking and screaming. He'd never gotten so much attention in his life. That makes him scream even louder.

But they still won't let him into SVS.

Matthews Excels

by Spencer

On October 28 William Matthews, accomplished guitarist and lutanist, performed one of the most enjoyable classical programs I have witnessed in some time.

His performance was particularly interesting for several reasons. First of all, he put the audience at ease by providing background information on each composer and selection in the program, making the listener feel somewhat familiar with the music even before it was played.

In addition, Matthews' proficience on both the lute and the guitar was beyond reproach. Each note was precise and clear; it was evident he knw exactly what colors he wanted the instruments to produce and how to achieve them at any given time.

Finally, Matthews' selection of music was impeccable. From da Milano to Bach, the selections were alive and exciting, thanks to both the composer and the performer.

Matthews' was the third of eight performances in the Artist Series this year, and if the standards set by the first three performances are any indication of things to come, Juniata can look forward to another year of fine entertainment thanks to the Artist Series.

Juniata Players Produce Thriller

Tyrone playwright Dan Meckes had a problem: after completing his dramatic thriller, "Lightningrod," he couldn't find a theatre group which was willing to produce it — even though the script was receiving considerable praise from persons who read it.

Thinking that perhaps an educational theatre department would be interested in giving his play its debut, he approached several Pennsylvania colleges and universities, only to discover that "college theatre departments, in general, are very reluctant to undertake the production of any but sure-fire, well-known hits."

But then he found Juniata College.

Or rather, Juniata found him. Bruce Davis, accomplished director and chairman of Juniata's speech and theatre department, read Meckes' script, like it, and agreed to produce "Lightningrod" Nov. 8 and 9 as the college's first 1979-80 dramatic production.

In addition, Davis and Mrs. Doris Goehring, who is co-directing the play with Davis and who serves as an assistant professor of speech and theatre, realized that in producing the play, a rare learning opportunity would be extended to Juniata's students.

"Producing a play for the first time is a very ambitious undertaing," Davis says, "because the directors and actors must work very closely with the playwright to shape the script into a workable art-form for the stage.

"This is a flexible process in which the directors and actors are actually involved in the creation of what eventually occurs on stage. As such, it represents a tremendous learning opportunity not only for our students, but for everyone involved, including Mr. Meckes, who has been very gracious in working with us as his script is 'reshaped' for the stage."

Meckes, who attends most rehearsals, observes: "The original script was too long, with dialogue included which was not needed to convey action on stage. Mr. Davis and Mrs. Goehring have done a very good job of tightening up the script, relying on the actors to convey, through stage actions, meaning that previously was conveyed by extra verbiage in the script."

He adds that "working with the directors and actors has been invaluable to me as a playwright — and, to the script of 'Lightningrod,' which is a much stronger drama that it was efore its script was adapted for the stage.

"And, because of the great demands and hard work required for producing an original play, I might add that Juniata is very courageous for undertaking this project."

The greatest demand Davis and Goehring faced was filling the "incredibily demanding" lead role.

"While we were confident that our students could handle all of the play's supporting roles, we were concerned about filling the lead role, for it requires such an emotionally complex and versatile performance that we concluded it could best be filled by a professional actor," Davis explains.

"Fortunately, we didn't have to look any further than our own campus, for one named popped into both our minds — Charlie Pollock."

Pollock, Juniata's director of public relations, does bring to "Lightningrod" some professional experience.

After graduating from Bucknell University — where he had leading roles in some 20 productions — he wrote and starred in "The Chicago Conspiracy Trial," produced by The Magic Theatre in Omaha, Neb., college. The actual amount budgeted for financial aid during the 1978-79 year was $762,398, or 9.9% of the total budget. This year, however, $1,069,735, or 12.4% of the total budget, is in the "Scholarships and Grants" budget. According to Alexander, Juniata aid has increased at about the same rate as tuition, and state funds (particularly in the form of Basic Educational Opportunity Grants) have increased dramatically since last year due to a change in eligibility requirements.

Closely related to the proposed tuition increase was the issue of the faculty salaries, which was raised by Kaminsky. Kaminsky expressed the concern of the faculty representatives to the trustee committees that an increase of 12.3% will not be enough when the current 13.5% inflation rate is taken into account. According to Kaminsky, "A minmum increase of 15% is recommended. Since we haven't kept up with inflation in the past, it's time to do some 'catch-up.'" Last year, while tuition was increased 7.3%, the basic faculty salary increase was 8.5%. The average faculty salary at Juniata, without benefits, is $17,610, a figure which is low when it is compared to average faculty salaries at similar colleges. Alexander stated that this year's faculty salary increase has not yet been projected, but that "Juniata can't keep paying a disproportionate amount to salaries."

Faculty compensation was also one of the major issues dealt with at the Academic Affairs Committee meeting. According to the Fall report of Donald T. Hartman, Dean of Academic Affairs, which was presented at the meeting, "In constant dollars, faculty are making less in terms of purchasing power than they did ten years ago; for the last ten or fifteen years the initial salaries faculty earn are also their highest in constant dollars." The recommendation of the faculty representatives in regard to a minimum 15% increase in cost was presented to the committee for consideration.

In addition, the committee agreed to set aside the proposal for the initiation of a nursing program at Juniata for at least five years. According to George Meyer, student representative to the committee, the major reasons for this decision were the lack of hospitals in the area in which student nurses could be trained, the large amount of funding which is required to launch such a program, and the lack of certainty as to whether or not the program would be accredited.

In the Christian Science Monitor of Wednesday, October 24, 1979, (the Monitor's View) it states that a total of 18 countries have already abolished the death penalty. That the United States is not included reflects the hypocrisy of a government supposedly concerned with Human Rights. In the next year, the Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders of the United Nations will discuss the "possible restriction" of capital punishment should be totally eliminated. Amnesty made a statement which should incite everyone in the United States to consider the hypocrisy of their society:

> It is not only contradictory but a threat to humane values for any society to proclaim that the taking of human life is the most intolerable of crimes and, at the same time, to countenance any form of execution carried out as an act of retribution in the name of society itself.

My challenge to you is to not only recognize the hypocrisy, but to do something about it. I have begun my action in a small way, by writing to one person out of the 140 on Florida's Death Row, and visiting him in his life-threatening situation. If you care enough to at lease support a person on Death Row, here is an address for a group that will hook you up with a Death Row inmate and give you suggestions on how to begin a correspondence:

> Death Row Support Project
> New Covenant Fellowship
> Route 3, Box 213A
> Athens, Ohio 45701

As a college student, I know how hard it is to find time for the relentless badgering this society needs. Perhaps college should be the time to learn effective techniques for creating change. Take the time, but use it wisely.

Dionne Warwick thought Red Cross was only about hurricanes.

A Public Service of This Newspaper & The Advertising Council

"True. I always thought of Red Cross as a kind of rescue force in times of disaster and little more.

"Then I learned that in towns and cities across America, Red Cross gives the kind of help to individuals that you rarely hear about, because it doesn't make headlines in the newspaper.

"Red Cross, for instance, helps elderly people get to doctors' appointments... and even to the store. They help veterans get back on the track. They teach kids to swim... and how to save lives.

"I found out that if you added up all the different humanitarian jobs Red Cross does in different towns, the number comes to over 100!

"That's why I'm helping to keep Red Cross ready. And why I hope you do, too."

and $2.5 million for on-going budget support.

The $13 million campaign — dubbed "The Second Century Development Program" in recognition of the 104-year-old liberal arts college's entry into its second century — comes three years after completion of the $10.1 million "Margin of Difference Campaign."

In related action, the board agreed to engage the services of an Altoona-based architectural firm — Hayes, Large, Suckling and Fruth — for the purpose of submitting preliminary plans for the proposed Sports + Recreation Center. A construction schedule for the new building is expected to be decided upon during the board's Spring Meeting in May.

Juniata's present facility, Memorial Gymnasium, was constructed in 1951 in honor of the nearly 700 Juniata graduates who served in World War II. It will be renovated and blended into the new structure, noted Ellis, a 1940 graduate.

Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata president, endorsed the board's action, noting that the new facility will enable Juniata to better serve the needs of its students.

"The new Sports + Recreation Center will allow Juniata to continue — and to expand — its commitment to providing its students with the opportunity to develop life-long physical fitness skills, deemed essential for healthy, well-rounded individuals," Dr. Binder commented.

Continuing, he explained that "with some 80 percent of the student body participating in intramural and life-long sporting activity for the past several years, the present gymnasium is being utilized to its limits. The new facility will provide not only additional recreational and intramural opportunities in swimming, but also additional space for currently-popular activities such as raquetball, handball, basketball and indoor tennis.

Remarking about the development program in general, Ellis noted that "Juniata presently has the largest student body in its history, and the intention of this campaign is to assure that the needs of these — and of future — students are met.

"Indeed, all aspects of Juniata's quality educational experience — from its rich academic programs to its substantial scholarship support — will be enhanced by 'The Second Century Development Program.' Quite frankly, Juniata is going to begin its second century as it did its first — in excellent fashion," Ellis concluded.

and in the greater New York City area.

Active in both Juniata and community productions, Pollock most recently appeared as R.P. McMurphy in the Carriage House Experimental Theatre's Huntingdon production of "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," his performance earning considerable praise in local media.

"Having Mr. Pollock appear in 'Lightningrod' is a real bonus for our students — who fill all the other roles — for it gives them an opportunity to observe, relate to, and react to a professional actor of the highest quality," Davis says, adding that "the students also gain from observing Mr. Pollock's technique for handling an extremely difficult role."

"Lightningrod," which centers around one man's attempt to discover the identity of a child-killer, plays in Juniata's Oller Auditorium on Nov. 8 and 9 at 8:15 p.m. The public is cordially invited to attend. There will be an admission charge of $1.50.

wouldn't leave faculty as much time to plan class schedules, but overall, "the advantages outweigh the disadvantages."

As the motion on this proposal will soon take place within the Center Board, students can be on the lookout for new possibilities in the way to declare Mountain Day.

The faculty and administration of Juniata finally got a cut from our football poll and they did it in "basic" fashion. The top three winners were Professor Kaminsky, Dr. Lakso, and Dr. Jay Buchanan — all getting 80% right. However, we only have one winner and Dr. Buchanan was the closest on total points; he will be the recipient of the $10. Our picks for this week are: Roh Morris-Juniata, Pittsburgh, USC, Florida, Indiana, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Tampa Bay, 38 total points; Pat Conroy-Juniata, Syracuse, USC, Florida, Indiana, Los Angeles, Denver, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Tampa Bay, 26 total points.

Football Contest Entry Form

Juniatian Football Contest Rules:

1. The object is to select the winners of the ten games to be played over the next weekend.
2. To make a selection merely circle the teams you pick to win. If you want to predict a tie circle both teams.
3. Each contestant is permitted only one entry per week.
4. The Juniatian will award a $10.00 prize. To win, a contestant must predict the highest number of winning teams, and this prediction must tie or surpass all of the Juniatian sports editors. In the event of a tie among contestants and/or sports editors for the highest winning team count, the total points estimates will be used as a tiebreaker. If a tie exists the prize money will be evenly distributed to the winners.
5. All entries must be submitted by noon Sarurday. The entry boxes are located in the hallway by the Juniatian office or in the Ellis Hall lobby.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Juniatian except those directly associated with the Juniatian.

.500 Season For Stickwomen

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Indian field hockey team failed to beat the .500 season course, tying their last two games to end up with a 3-3-3 record.

JC travelled to Carlisle last Tuesday to face the Red Devils of Dickinson College. Juniata scored first, 17½ minutes into the game, on a goal by Dara Torrico, assisted by Lisa Masood. Nine minutes later, the home team tied it 1-1 and that score stood through the intermission.

The Tribe came out fighting and went ahead three minutes into the second half on the reverse of the earlier score. Lisa Masood scored on a Dara Torrico assist. The scoring ended early, when the Red Devils tied it three minutes later.

Both teams played well considering the rain and slippery field conditions. Dickinson put more pressure on JC during the second half. The Red Devils had 12 shots on goal (9 the second half), while the Indians only managed two each half.

The College Hill Gang closed out regular season play on Saturday in a home match with the Crusaders of Susquehanna University. Once again, Juniata took the initiative. Marian Pagano scored 11 minutes into the game on a penalty stroke, the first of the season. That is a one on one situation with the goalie — the shot is attempted seven yards from the cage.

With fourteen and a half minutes gone, the visitors knotted the score, 1-1. Bonnie Cieslar gave the Indians the half time edge on her goal 18 minutes into the period.

Just three minutes after the intermission, the crusaders tied the score again. Despite controlling the second half, the Tribe couldn't find the goal, and their hopes for their first winning season in four years ended. The defense wasn't as effective as it has been earlier in the season. Susquehanna managed to score on their only shot on goal during the first half.

JC will play in the Susquehanna Field Hockey Association Tournament on Saturday. There will be two divisions of five teams each entered in the round robin play. Individuals selected for the Susquehanna Association team that will compete in the mid-easterns will play on Sunday.

Indians Slip Past Del Val

by Doug Williams

A 33 yard pass from Mike Nett to Jimmy Jones provided the margin for victory last Saturday as the Indians edged the Delaware Valley Aggies 7-3.

A strong game was turned in by the defense who allowed nothing after a 21 yard field goal in the first quarter. The Aggies were held to 155 total offensive yards, only 52 of which were through the air. All this was accomplished by a squad that lost two key starters, Frank Smith and Larry Shepard, to injuries and at one time was fielding seven sophomores and two freshmen.

While the low score seemed to indicate a defensive struggle, Coach Rossi felt the officiating played a large part in the final outcome. Although he felt "the officiating was bad for both clubs", calls against Juniata seemed to occur on the big plays. Seven good drives were halted by some of the 92 yards called against the Indians. A total of 153 yards were dealt out to both sides.

However, the officials couldn't be blamed for all the problems. For instance a Juniata fumble at the one-yard line had nothing to do with the men in the striped shirts. Overall, Juniata played well, and there was no time when Coach Rossi felt the game was out of the Indians' control.

Injuries continued to effect key players. As mentioned before Shepard and Smith were lost (Shepard re-injuring his bad knee will be lost for the season and Smith hurting his neck is uncertain for the rest of the year). Also Mike Valdiserri missed the trip with a tendon problem and is still hurting.

All this comes before the last home game of the year against a tough Wilkes team. According to Coach Rossi their defensive interior four average 6'4" and 245 lbs., and their offensive line is almost as big. For Juniata to win Mike Nett has to have a hot day passing and "a few wrinkles" have to be added to an offense which has trouble scoring in big games like this.

Streak Snapped

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Larry's Ladies six game winning streak was snapped over the weekend, but it took some tough competition at the Mansfield Tournament to do it.

Penn State-Altoona and St. Francis both wanted to stop the Indian machine, but both failed. The Cougars of Penn State fell 15-4, 15-13, 15-6 in Memorial Gym. Senior captain Nancy Zinkham was honored by the team for her four years of play during her last home match of her volleyball career.

On Thursday, the Tribe travelled to Loretto to face the Red Flash of St. Francis College. JC left with a 3-0 victory on 15-6, 15-10, 15-2 scores. The Indian spikers were ready for big time competition at the Mansfield Tournament.

Scoring at the tournament was done on a game basis, and the winner of the two game matches was determined by total points of the 30 point match. Larry's Ladies raised their season record to 17-4 after going 3-2 at Mansfield.

The United States Military Academy was the first opponent and they ended JC's streak. After dropping the first game 15-8, Juniata was leading 14-8 in the second contest, but couldn't hold on, and dropped the decision by a 17-15 score.

The College Hill Gang easily handled their next two opponents. Allegheny College was toppled by the mighty Tribe, 15-8, 15-4 and the host team, Mansfield, fell 15-6, 15-13.

JC next faced Western Maryland, last year's MAC champion (Juniata finished second). Good blocking lead the way for the champs again, as they defeated Larry's Ladies 15-6, 15-4.

The next match was a must win situation if the Indians were going to return home with a winning record from the tournament. Although the Tribe split their games with the Bullets of Gettysburg, the blue and gold of College Hill won the match on total points — scores were 15-9, 12-15.

The lady spikers will be at the MAC championships this weekend and need a first (or possibly a second) place finish to keep their hopes for an invitation to easterns alive.

Evaluations Important

As the end of the term draws near, it is time once again to fill out course evaluations. Few students take these evaluations seriously, and many look upon them as merely a nuisance.

The Personnel Committee however, uses these course evaluations to determine teaching effectiveness of professors being considered for promotion and contract renewal. The statistical section (the part filled on computer cards) is weighed as 60% of this evaluation. The "comments" section is also included in the remaining over-all evaluation, which amounts to an input of approximately 70% on the part of the students. Teaching effectiveness can be weighed 50-80% in the total evaluation of a professor.

The remaining percentages are covered by four other areas including Advising, Faculty Development Activities, Non-Academic Faculty Activities, and Activities on behalf of College and Community at large.

The personnel committee asks that the course evaluations be filled out carefully and considerately. The committee stresses that they are not to be used as a means for revenge, but as a means for an honest evaluation of Juniata professors.

Foreign Exchange Program Expanding

by Chris Corry

The Juniata Foreign Exchange Program started last year with only two students. This year, with thirteen of our students in Europe and thirteen foreign students on campus, it is, as Dr. William Russey, the Program co-ordinator modestly puts it, "going very nicely."

The program set-up is simple. The Juniata students pays the room, board, and tuition fees for the year, just as if he were going to stay here. His counterpart does the equivalent at his school, and just before the term begins, they switch places. The cost of the program is no more than the plane fare, incidentals, and regular fees at Juniata. An added advantage of this program is that financial aid transfers exactly.

Exchanges have been made with four universitys, three in Germany: University of Marburg, University of Muenster, and the Muenster Polytechnic Institute and one school in France, Ecole des Hautes Etudes Industrielle (HEI). Arrangements are made between the specific departments of the schools. Programs are set up with Chemistry, Biology, Geology, Business/Economics, and Political Science departments. Arrangements in other areas are also being considered.

"The personal benefits" for the student are "huge," Dr. Russey states. European universitys "offer much more in the way of courses," and the advantages of being at ease with a foreign language are undeniable. "Juniata students tend to be pretty provincial," the professor relates. "An experience like this does wonders."

The courses taught at the German and French Institutes are, of course, taught in that language, and third level study of the language is recommended.

Women's Programming Emphasizes Awareness

by Mindy Vincent

Student Services has been alloted a budget of $750 this year to be used for women's programming. Susan Twombly, Assistant Dean of Student Services, is the head of the committee to increase the awareness of women about the opportunities available to them. The committee has met several times and has come up with some ideas to be worked on. Since the budget is limited to $750, they are going to try and plan programs centering about existing events on the school calendar. In this way money can also come from other sources.

Some of the ideas are very promising. The committee would like to bring in some speakers. Some may be professional women, housewives, or men who wish to express their views concerning women and their role in society. Another idea is to have, in conjunction with a Career Day, a Women's Career Day. This would involve having women come to talk about their careers. The committee is also concerned about Women's Sports, as the attendance at women's sports events is sparse and the women don't always get the recognition that they deserve for their achievements. Another idea was to have an all-women raft in the Raft Regatta.

The program will be initiated at the beginning of the winter term. On Friday November 30, the film "The Turning Point," a movie centering on the role of women in today's society, will be shown in Oller Hall. The theme of the movie is the decision that women must make between being a housewife or a career woman. Before the movie, the Women's Programming Committee is holding a TGIF meeting for women in Lesher Lounge from 4:30 until 6:00. The purpose of this meeting will be to present ideas and discuss issues related to women's programming. They also want to know what kinds of things people will be interested in having

by Jane Carothers & Cherise Kent

Two Juniata students were recently fined for a violation of the college alcohol policy when the students sponsored a party in their room on Saturday, October 13.

According to one student who attended the gathering, Jack Linetty, assistant dean of student services, responded to a call from students living on the floor above the party. The students were reporting a disturbance that was not related to the party.

Linetty noticed in passing that a half keg was in the room of the party. The keg, however, was only one-third full when the students received it. This was later confirmed by Professor William C. Vocke at the Judicial Board hearing, who stated that the half keg was only "one-third full at most." The students were reported by Linetty for a violation of the college alcohol policy, which states that only one one-quarter keg of beer is permissable in a double occupancy room on weekend nights.

The accused were interviewed at an informal hearing by Susan Twombley, assistant dean of student services, and Linetty. The students were informed at this time a fine of $30.00 would be levied against them. The students them appealed this decision and were granted a hearing before the Judicial Board on October 29. The Board upheld the initial decision.

In a recent interview, Arnold Tilden, dean of student services, pointed out that the incident violated the alcohol policy, although the keg did not contain a half-keg of beer — 15.7 gallons.

"The policy clearly states that half-kegs in student rooms are prohibited," added Tilden, "regardless of the content."

The students involved in the incident believed that they did not violate the policy as they understood it, explaining that "the keg (½ keg) was only one-third full."

The student added that, following this decision, the Judicial Board will "no longer have to think about future cases, especially borderline cases like ours."

Iran's Prime Minister Resigns

Iranian Prime Minister Bazagan resigned from his position as Iran's head of state Tuesday following the unsuccessful attempt by his government to free the dozens of American hostages held by hundreds of moslem students inside the U.S. Embassey. Khomeini ordered the Islamic revolutionary council to take over the affairs of state.

The U.S. ruled out sending the deposed Shah to Iran for trial despite the demands from moslem students.

Library Exhibits Fascist Documents

by Lee Chottiner

For several weeks now, the display cases at Beeghly Library have been showing an exhibition of letters of prominent German and American Nazis. These letters are from the collection of Dr. Klaus Kipphan, a professor of history here at Juniata College.

The idea for this exhibition came about when Dr. Kipphan viewed the previous display of letters and autographs by such notable figures as Ernest Hemingway and King Boris III of Bulgaria.

"I was very intrigued by it," Kipphan noted; he then told about how he sought out the reference librarian, Mr. Cole Puvogel, and offered certain letters in his possession for display at Beeghly.

Dr. Kipphan pointed out that though he offered the use of his letters, it was Puvogel who actually set up the exhibition, along with the display of books related to the Fascist era. Much of the credit for the entire event must go to him, along with student assistnat Fran Freeberg.

The two display cases show letters pertaining to two areas of research that Dr. Kipphan has been involved in. The letters in the display case to the right of Beeghly's entrance pertain to Nazism in America, while the letters in the left case are about Julius Streicher, the most notorious anti-Semite in the Third Reich, and his trial at Nuremburg after the war.

Dr. Kipphan explained that he wanted the exhibition to take place now so that his Fascist Era students could take advantage of the information the letters offer.

It was pointed out by Dr. Kipphan that the letters do not "attempt to present a balanced view . . ." of the Nazi period, but merely show attempts to gain information from possible sources for his areas of research.

Florida Travel Package Available

by Mindy Vincent

This year Juniata College's Center Board in conjunction with the Wainwright Travel Agency have coordinated a travel package to Florida for Juniata students.

For the past three years, the Wainwright Travel Agency has sponsored the spring break program. The agency has made arrangements with hotels, airlines, nightclubs, and also a paddle wheel steam ship for those participating in the program. The agency is able to offer reduced rates because of the large number of people involved. The program is not only available to students but also to faculty and staff. Rooms and rates are based on groups of four. If students wish a double or triple the rates are increased accordingly.

A group makes reservations for a one week period. There are eight or nine weeks available to choose from depending on when the school's break begins and ends. Juniata has two vacations which fall into this predetermined period. Either the term break at the end of February or Easter vacation in April are the possible dates for Juniata students, faculty, and staff. About seventy colleges in all are involved in this program, among which are LaSalle and Penn State. In past years the program has been a great success.

There are three plans available to choose from. All include airfare, hotel accomodations, a get-acquainted cruise, a party every day, and food specials every day. Plan A is the Inland Hotel Package and includes a car. Accomodations are at the Kings Crown Inn, and a car is provided with unlimited mileage and a full insurance policy. Plan B is the Beach Hotel Package without a car. Participants will stay at the Lauderdale Beach Hotel for the week. With this plan one also gets transportation to and from the airport. Plan C is also a Beach Hotel Package and is the same as Plan B except that a car is included. Regardless of which plan is chosen the cost is less than three

by Jeff Boulton

Milton the Nurd was seen last Thursday night trying repeatedly to hang himself. This occurred out of Miltie's window at Sherwood Dorm between seven and ten times, according to some very reliable sources in te Cloister (well, maybe they were a little spaced-out).

Poor guy, he was having such a rough time. He had just received a bill for $13 million in his mailbox that morning and almost fainted. But, what's a little money, he asked himself, when there's the Future to look forward to? Like three hours into the future when he could go to dinner and find out if he won the Football Contest. It's in the Juniatian too — on the back page. Milton usually has problems finding it. He starts at the front.

Anyway, he got to supper at like 16:59:13, according to his trusty timepiece. "How well-ordered i am," he thought. "I'm only 47 seconds off!" As he put away his pocket calculator, which he had used to reason out his previous thought, his thought turned back to the Football Contest.

"Gee, ten bucks!" he mused, reaching for his calculator holster again. He was about to deducat $10 from $13 million; but he realised a calculator of his size wouldn't be able to handle the cents; too many digits. He just wondered how many football contests he needed, to win enough money to pay off his schooling. Even his pocket computer couldn't believe a sun of $13,000,000.00.

There were no papers on the stacks by the time Milton got there. Everyone else had taken one. But there were plenty on the ground, especially beside tables, and places where people can write.

Milton scraped a newspaper off the floor and found out for the sixth time this year that the Football Contest was to be on the last page. He couldn't wait to see the results. Ten-dollar bills crept within the limits of his periphery. His heart was pounding.

His perceptions failed him for a moment as he saw that a section had been torn from the final page. Sweat began to form under hornrims. He wiped them vigorously to calm down.

Regaining his composure slowly, he looked around for another copy. To his relief, copies were scattered all over the place. He began, slowly at first, to systematically pick them all up, one by one, to examine the rear page of each in search of the Football Contest. His pace increased as he began to wonder whether there were any virgin copies left anywhere. Pretty soon he was flailing away at mutilated newsprint, fighting his way across a sea of literature and a forest of humanity.

His right eye closed as he looked through the telescopic left lens of his horn-rims. He spied a sophomore from his hall ripping the Football Contest Results and Entry Form from the back page of the last virgin copy of the Juniatian! He almost wet himself.

But he controlled it for the moment. He thought of taking one of the already filled-out forms from the ballot box; he was wise enough to pull that off — if anyone caught him, he could keep the entry blank and erase the original author's writing.

However, his belief in his own slickness was shaken as he saw a security guard with a Doberman patrolling the area by the entry box. The dog saw Milton's guiltily pensive and patently candid countenance, and (reading Miltie's thought accurately) asked him, "You aren't going to CHEAT now, are you?" (That was the dog talking, there.)

Milton moaned in mortal agony. He melted into a mound of mush. He was afraid he was going unconscious until a scream awoke him. He was draped across a strange female. This frightened him so badly that he screamed, too.

A couple of guys fom Milton's hall carried him back to his room. The one who had been tearing the Contest Entry Form from the last copy was reading him the article about the $13 million, indicating the spot that was torn out. "It said right there that Milton Murphy was going to be the gracious donor the funds!" he shouted in glee showing poor Miltie the in-

"Yeah. I signed you up for that und-raiser that the IVCF was cirulating," said his smirking roomate. "I didn't think you'd mind." Milton was in a completely ifferent universe.

"At least you won the Football ontest!" offered Milton's eighbor.

Miltie felt a brief spark of hope. e wiped the tears from his chin nd stiffened his upper lip uscles.

"No. Miltie, only kidding!!" aughed his neighbor, thwacking im on the back. Milton exerienced an earthquake. His hole life began tumbling into his ars. He blubbered a few minutes, hen tied a stray jockstrap to a ope, fashioning a makeshift oose, and jumped out of his winow with it around his neck. His oommate and friends amused hemselves for a while by cutting he rope and making him run back from the bushes, bawling the hole way.

After over a half-dozen suicide ttempts, the Resident isciplinarian entered the room. t this point, Miltie's roommate nd friends had nearly grown tired f Miltie's antics and pardoned hemselves. "Sorry! We were just ying to save his life!" howled his oommate. The R.D. doubled up in elight.

The Juniata College Yearbook has had some hard times in the past. It has suffered from financial difficulties, jokes and jeers, and worst of all, the gloom of careless abandon — or in contemporary terms, student apathy.

There is not a great deal that can be done about this. Each year a staff has to be woven out of available and interested straggles. A meagre lot this year, but a hardy and enthusiastic bunch are undertaking the task of creating a momento.

What the staff is counting on and more importantly, what the Alfarata depends on, is student participation. To inspire interest and a throng of creative mania the theme chosen this year is HUMOR. In the near future, the Alfarata will be sponsoring competitions-for the best group photogragh, for the best cartoon that depicts some aspect of Juniata life, for the best professor charicature, and possible for the most absurd rumor that you've heard this year. Who knows what evil lurks . . . .

Play Premieres Tonight

"Never Trust A Stranger Till November 8th . . ." This ominous, paranoia-inducing message has been spread through-out the Juniata campus causing curiosity and bewilderment to most who hear it. Where did it come from and why November 8th? For those of you with clever, mystery-seeking minds, you will instantly spot it as a baffling clue in an intricate puzzle; and you will be right! That small insignificant-seeming warning we usually teach to small children plays a vital role in Juniata's fall production of "Lightningrod," an original thriller by Dan Meckes, which opens November 8th and 9th at 8:15 in Oller Hall.

During those two magical evenings, Oller Hall will once again reverberate with life as the drama and mystery of the play unfolds. The atmosphere will fill with suspense, even the very air must crackle with tension, until the sudden action-filled climax catches you unaware and turns you completely around, leaving you breathless with surprise. It is a must for theater-goers, and for mystery lovers a true delight.

It is a first in the history of Juniata's theater in that "Lightningrod" is an original play. From the Theatre Department's point of view, itsdebut is a triumph of collaboration of the acting skill and technical crew using a virgin script and almost non-existent set design. Veteran directors Professor Bruce Davis and Professor Doris Goehring, in close consultation with playwright Dan Meckes, have combined their knowledge and experience of an original play successful to the Juniata stage. The performances are the culmination of three months of intense mental strain and manual labor which finally explode into a fast-paced, mind engrossing drama. "Lightningrod" will be a theater experience not soon to be forgotten.

Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers — "Damn The Torpedoes" MCA5105

This is Tom Petty's third album to date and "Damn The Torpedoes" seems to be trying damn hard to compare musically with the first two Petty releases, The Heartbreakers, and You're Gonna Get It. The attempt is quite apparent, but the results were far from what was expected. It's not that this album is so bad, its just that the other two were so good and this latest release simply pales in their very presence. Perhaps the band's recent bankruptcy had something to do with it, but it is hard to see a correlation between a lack of funds and a lack of songwriting skills, both of which seem to have hit the band at the same time.

This does not mean, however, that the album is a total loss, for there are a few good songs on the LP that save it from being a complete disgrace.

Refugee is probably the best cut on the album, featuring Tom Petty's characteristic slurred, back-of-the-throat vocals and Mike Campbell's hard driving guitar.

Don't Do Me Like That is another song which saves face for the album. Ron Blair's heavy bass riffs along with Benmont Tench's keyboards and Stan Lynch on drums provide the necessary ingredients to make the song an inspiring one, dealing with confusion between the sexes.

Louisiana Rain is yet another tune on the LP which ranks among the best. A slow melodic, romantic ballad filled with Tom Petty's distinct harmonic and vocals.

In considering the album in its entirety, one would have to describe it as typical Tom Petty, but certainly not typical of his best efforts to date. "Damn The Torpedoes" recieves a C from Fresh Tracks.

For the first time this year, a member of the 1983 class won our football poll. Andy Pearson is ten dollars richer today after he got 9 out of 10 right last week while he also was only one point off in total points. We also had the most participants with over 50 entries (as well as losers). This week will be the last $10 poll but we will have a special $25 poll right before the holiday season on bowl games. Our picks for this week are: Roh Morris — Penn State, Texas, Alabama, Purdue, UCLA, Atlanta, Green Bay, Chicago, San Diego, New England, 44 total points; Pat Conroy — Penn State, Texas, Alabama, Purdue, Arizona State, Giants, Green Bay, Los Angeles, Cincinnati, New England, 43 total points.

Football Contest Entry Form

Juniatian Football Contest Rules:

1. The object is to select the winners of the ten games to be played over the next weekend.
2. To make a selection merely circle the teams you pick to win. If you want to predict a tie circle both teams.
3. Each contestant is permitted only one entry per week.
4. The Juniatian will award a $10.00 prize. To win, a contestant must predict the highest number of winning teams, and this prediction must tie or surpass all of the Juniatian sports editors. In the event of a tie among contestants and/or sports editors for the highest winning team count, the total points estimates will be used as a tiebreaker. If a tie exists the prize money will be evenly distributed to the winners.
5. All entries must be submitted by noon Sarurday. The entry boxes are located in the hallway by the Juniatian office or in the Ellis Hall lobby.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Juniatian except those directly associated with the Juniatian.

Pigskin Upset Evens JC Record

by Doug Williams

The Juniata Indians kept their hopes for a winning season alive with an upset victory over Wilkes last Saturday, 21-7.

The defense for Juniata was strong once again forcing five turnovers, three of which led to Indian scores. They also allowed only 197 yards in total offense, 87 yards on the ground against the best running team in the MAC.

But the real surprise was the offense. Led by Mike Nett, who scored two touchdowns and threw for a third, they rolled up 360 yards of total offense. Even more surprising was the 223 yards the Indians got on the ground against a defense they weren't supposed to run well against.

The scoring started with less than two minutes gone in the first quarter. On the Colonel's first play from scrimmage, Matt Blauch forced a fumble, Kevin Morrow recovered, and the Indians had the ball deep in Wilkes territory. Juniata pushed it over on an 8-yard pass from Nett to Jim Jones for an early 7-0 lead.

The start of the second quarter found Wilkes pinned deep in their own territory. The defense came through again forcing a fumble as Morrow recovered his second around the 10. Although in the past Juniata has had trouble capitalizing on opportunities like this, they had none this time as Nett scampered seven yards for the touchdown.

Juniata's final score resulted when the defense again gave the offense excellent field position. Steve Lach picked off one of his team-leading six interceptions giving the Indians the ball around the Wilke's 30. The offense drove to the five where Nett took it in himself with just 12 seconds remaining in the first half.

In the fourth quarter, the Wilkes team started to mount an attack that had laid dormant all day. Working with short passes across the middle and an occasional run they scored with 7:03 left. It still looked out of reach for the Colonels, but when Juniata's DeWayne Rideout fumbled inside Juniata's five yard line the win appeared to be slipping away.

However, once again the defense rose to the occasion, forcing the Colonel's quarterback to fumble. Lach recovered the ball, and the Indians were able to run out the clock for their fourth victory.

With a 4-4 record the Indians travel to New Jersey next week to play their last game of the season. Their opponents, Fairleigh Dickinson at Madison Jersey Devils, are the doormats of the league, and so the Indian's seventh straight winning season is well within reach.

Mack Wasn't Enough

by Cathy Oliver

In their last game of the season, the Juniata soccer team gave up a 5-2 loss to the Frostburg Bobcats on College Field last Wednesday.

The defeat came after a hard fought, rough game with both teams playing strong offensive passing games. The Bobcats took an early lead by scoring just minutes into the first half, making the Indian's thirst for victory awful dry. The Indians scored late in the first half when super lineman George Mack scored. Mack also tied a Juniata record when he scored again in the second half, giving him the most goals in a game for Juniata.

Although the season was not a winning one, it saw much team improvement and valuable experience gained. Coach Klaus Jaeger praised his team for their hard work and spirit and is not disappointed, but rather enjoyed this season. Jaeger felt that a win "just wasn't in the cards" and the excellent gained was priceless to returning players.

The soccer team will miss some valuable seniors, especially Senior "Mr. Consistent" Captain James Angstadt and Co-captain Joe Condurso. Other seniors that the team will miss will be Mack, Bruce Rothenberger, John Andrews, Mike Antonetti, Frank Rothermel, and Alan Schiff. These seniors are responsible for establishing soccer as a varsity sport, through hard work, dedication, and guts to stick it out through clubs (with no field) and a winless season.

Cross-Country Caps Year

The Juniata College cross-country team concluded their season of successes by participating in the MAC championships this last weekend at Memorial Lake State Park. Over a five-mile course, and stiff competition, the team finished in the thirteenth spot out of twenty teams.

The team was led individually by Bill Shuler, who was the only runner to finish in the top fifty at the MAC's. Mike Sheely led his Haverford team to an impressive victory with a time almost three minutes faster. The next four positions, respectively, were taken by Scott Malay, Joe Guth, Tom Wise and Mike Murray, who all finished within 20 seconds of each other.

The showing was not truly indicative of a fine season. Coach Donald Mitchell noted that the inexperience of the team may have been a factor in their showing at the big meets. In dual-meet competition the team closed out with an 8-2 record, and in the last meet against the Red Flash of St. Francis, Shuler broke the Juniata record for the course.

To help complete the foreign experience, the family of the student welcomes the Exchangee and helps provide the experience of being in a European home.

Dr. Russey says of the program, "Ideally it's for Juniors to go for a full year." It usually takes a couple of months to get adjusted and it does not make much sense to come back as soon as one gets settled. It is also "not impossible that something could be worked out on the sophomore level."

It is not too late, if you are qualified and have the language background, to go on the Exchange Program next year. If you have had language in high school, it's conceivable that the second level language course could be taken this winter and the third level in the spring term; see Dr. Russey for information before Wednesday, November 14.

Anyone is invited to attend these discussions. The committee is hoping to spark an interest on campus in the area of Women's Programming.

Marathoners Keep It Up

by Cathy Creswell

The annual Multiple Sclerosis Marathon was held in Memorial Gymnasium last weekend. There were 78 students participating in the marathon which was sponsored by Juniata'a Circle K Club.

Activities for the marathon were volleyball, dancing, backgammon and cards. The marathon lasted twenty-four hours, from 8:00 p.m. Friday night to 8:00 p.m. Saturday night. This was about six hours shorter than last year's marathon.

Music for the dancers was provided this year by a private disco show. Mike Riling of Rilco Audio Enterprises donated his time and equipment to provide the marathon with professional entertainment.

The players were allowed 15 minute breaks every 1½ hours and they had half-hour breaks for meals.

The money raised goes to the Multiple Sclerosis Foundation, with the majority of the proceedings going directly to the local Pennsylvania chapter of M.S. Nancy Corbin, the chairperson of Circle K, estimated that the total amount raised this year would be between $1,500 and $2,000.

The individual who raised the greatest amount of money from pledges will win $25 and second place will receive a prize of $10. Winners will be announced in January after the pledges have come in.

Students Submit Proposal

by Cherise Kent

The scientific, social, and economical ramifications of an underdeveloped littoral zone of Lake Raystown is being examined by seven Juniata students. Kristen Storms, Hatti and Susan Bruan, Donna Leevers (all environmental biology students), John Robinson (biology/economics), Cathleen Connell (sociology/psychology) and Judy Parthmore (geology) have submitted a proposal to the government for a federal grant which would enable them to continue their work.

"The project involves the examination of the shallow nearshore area where light reaches the bottom of the lake, which is characterized by the growth of aquatic rooted vegetation," explained Ms. Storms. At Lake Raystown however, the littoral zone has not been developed, meaning there is no vegetation in this area.

The ramifications of this underdeveloped area has affected the fish, wildlife and recreational aspects of the lake. Where the fish are concerned the "vegetation is a source of food and protection of the young" commented Ms. Storms. She added that economically the game commission would not have to stock as many fish if such vegetation existed.

The vegetation also provides an area of forage and nesting for waterfowl and its aesthetic beauty is admired by the human population.

Development of this zone would not affect swimming which is concentrated in an area of the lake with a cement bottom. "The lake is large enough to cater to the various needs of campers, fisherman, and recreation," Storms added.

From an academic viewpoint the project is interdiscliplinary involving students from the environmental sciences and social sciences. Ms. Connell, the sociology/psychology member of the group has investigated the underdevelopment of the littoral zone from a social stand — how it affects the human population.

According to Ms. Storms the group has received help from members of the Juniata Faculty which include Dr. Gustafson (their project advisor), Dr. Ronald Cherry, Dr. Duane Stroman, and Dr. Tom Fisher. They have also received support from the Army Corps of Engineers at Lake Raystown and the community.

Concern Over Grade Delay

by Mike Ford

Upon returning to Juniata after Thanksgiving break, students found that their grade reports were not in their mailboxes, and the blue envelopes did not reach the post office until Thursday, November 29.

According to the Registrar's Office, none of the rumors concerning the late grades were true. The following explanation was offered by a member of that office: The grades were due from instructors on Monday, November 19. One faculty member was late with the grades, which almost caused 42 students to receive an incomplete grade. However, this delay did not impede the grade printing process.

The grades were taken to Data Processing on Wednesday, November 21, and were all printed by the following Tuesday. According to the Registrar's Office, a computer breakdown was not the cause of the late grades.

The grade reports were then reviewed, the situations of borderline students were considered by the Curriculum Committee, and the grades were cleared for distribution by the Accounting Office. No grade reports were withheld from students who had not paid their bills. The Registrar's Office received the grades last Monday — November 26, and the student copies were in post office boxes on Thursday.

The Registrar's Office initially maintained that students were under the false impression that their grades had always been in their mailboxes when they got back from break, and specifically stated that last year the grade reports had been in the boxes only upon their return after Winter term break. But records revealed that grade reports had indeed been in the post office boxes upon the students' return from both Fall and Winter term breaks last year.

The Registrar's Office stated that there is no deadline for distributing grades: rather, it is a matter of time, and though the grade reports have priority, their distribution by the Registrar depends upon the amount of work created by drop/add week.

The Registrar's Office recognizes no deadline for the distribution of grade reports to students. The Registrar suggested that students with borderline grade problems ask their professors for their grades.

Shah Recuperates in Texas

On Sunday, December 2 the deposed shah of Iran left his hospital bed in New York and flew to Texas aboard a U.S. Military jet for an indefinite stay at an Air Force Hospital. President Carter commented the ousted shah needed "to recuperate" following five weeks of treatment in New York. When questioned if the shah would be offered permanent asylum in the United States, the president stated, "I cannot answer that."

Some of the 50 Americans held hostage by Iranian students were reported to have been transferred from the occupied U.S. Embassy in Tehran to locations in a northeastern suburb of the city on Sunday. The hostages are entering their fifth week in captivity

Editorial

Although many students were outraged with the Registrar's Office when they returned to campus to find their post office boxes lacking their fall semester grades, this is where the frustration on a new term and dealing with the Registrar's Office only began.

The Office cited the distribution of the grades depends upon the amount of work created by drop/add week, however if the grades had been distributed before the chaos of drop/add week had descended upon the office, the grade distribution would not have been affected. It is obvious that the work load of drop/add week increases significantly for the Registrar's Office as students swarm its confines in an attempt to gain valuable information regarding schedule changes, independent studies, and grades. And while it may be frustrating to the staff in the Registrar's Office when this insurmountable amount of work materializes and the traffic of students in and out of the office becomes astounding, there are other members of the campus who also regard this as an extremely trying time — the students.

Many students seeking information from the office are dismayed by the attitude of the Registrar's staff which has been discribed by students as "impolite" and "impatient".

Granted, drop/add week is probably one of the grandest times of the term for the Registrar's Office and it was no doubt very tedious answering all those questions. However, isn't this one of the functions of the office? To help confused students with the sordid mess of registration . . . in a professional way? The staff of the Juniatian thinks so.

by Jeff Boulton

There is a house on Moore Street which is in the Twilight Zone. Picture, if you will, a three-story building painted a disgusting shade of pink; a building so bizarre in appearance that it almost makes you disregard the noise and stench. Almost. It is a house that exists in two different worlds simultaneously.

Up until this year, this slum-like building was inhabited by peaceful, slightly paranoid off-campus students. These students would retire to their "palace" each evening to eat quiet meals and complain about underclassmen. Within the last year, however, all this has changed. The tranquil lifestyle of these unobtrusive bookworms has been abruptly shattered by the unnerving arrival of an evil present, an exile of the Land of Make-Believe: the Baron von Freschmann!!!

With the entrance of von Freschmann, the inhabitants of this building noticed a disturbing change coming over their home. A new feeling was in the air, as red-eyed members of the von Freschmann family stumbled like zombies through the deserted hallways at all hours of the night. The atmosphere is quite prevalent in the Land of Make-Believe and is a result of a mysterious judicial system (known as "Campus Policy") used in that land and extended in its authority to govern those members of the von Freschmann family living on the first and third floors of the building in question.

One by one, every little thing that could go wrong, did: Water pipes began to leak. The hot water heater began failing regularly. Toilets began flushing themselves for no reason, and wouldn't stop. Doorbells rang constantly and mysteriously in all rooms. The electrical system, which had served the tenants quite well for many long years, mysteriously disappeared. It was replaced by an inferior system at the request of someone from the Land of Make-Believe (also known as Oncampus).

This new electrical system automatically cut off the electricity to any apartment which uses an electric skillet, a utensil which is strictly verboten in the Land of Make-Believe.

Let us not blame the whole deal on the Baron von Freschmann and his family. This writer, through many daring and devious schemes, has found out the name of Baron's leader. The mere mention of this enigmatic figure's name causes the Baron himself to cringe in terror, and elicits much the same reaction from anyone else from Oncampus. Their fearless leader is none other than that filthy proponent of anguish, the Duke Jacques de la Nettie. With much effort, this writer has succeeded in establishing that the evil Duke has been planning to take over the building in question and make it into part of his Land of Make-Believe, so that he can hold more helpless students in the palm of his cunning and ruthless paw.

For example, the Duke legally has the right to let his wily apprentices unplug the refrigerators in any building Oncampus during term breaks. This activity has undoubtedly been going on in the Duke's most recent conquest, the House of Mission. He has removed all kitchen facilities from the House of Mission in order to force the unfortunate tenants of the building to trudge across the tundra all winter long to eat a miserable morsel of the Duke's measly meals should they decide to eat at all. Jacques thinks this is funny.

Evidently, the malevolent Duke has decided that the war with the students living in the Land of Leases and Electric Bills has ended. He launches another offensive against these helpless critters by telling his crafty underlings to commence fridge-unplugging operations within the walls of the edifice which is in the Land of Leases and Electric Bills and the Land of Make-Believe at the same time.

But in acting thusly, the slow-witted Duke has unknowingly broken the lease authorized by the people who handle his hefty paycheck: The Business Office!! (Oh, NO!) But a Duke from the Land of Make-Believe would never be expected to know about such alien things as leases or electric bills, much less personal privacy!

Okay, so those two refrigerators were not perfectly clean, nor was defrosting such a bad idea. But Operation Unplug left two private piles of food in the smelly state of decomposition, water all over two kitchen floors and wet brown spot on at least one ceiling!

What the problem seems to be is NOT that the von Freschmann family has moved into the Land of Leases and Electric Bills. The tenants of the building were merely upset that they were going to have to get used to people whom they didn't already know at the beginning of the school year. The problem in actuality boils down to the fact that the Baron von Freschmann has involuntarily allowed the Policy of the Land of Make-Believe to gain a foothold in the Land of Leases and Electric Bills.

Triplers Commended

Dear Student:

I am writing with regard to the triple room situation as it currently exists in the residence hall.

Initially, permit me to take this opportunity to thank the students who reside in triples for their cooperation and patience in dealing with a rather trying situation. The space factor aside, attempting to get used-to a new environment and new people is an extremely difficult task. An important educational benefit has been achieved by those involved. In any event, I commend these men and women for their mature behavior.

It is my hope that the situation will be eased somewhat by attrition and a possible property acquisition that would provide additional space near the campus. Persons who are interested in residing off-campus should contact the Housing Office at your earliest convenience.

The Housing Office will continue to provide as much assistance as possible in dealing with any problem encountered. In addition, the Housing Office is most receptive to any suggestions which may make life in a triple room a bit easier.

Sincerely,
John V. Linetty
Director of Housing

Steinberg Questioned

Editor, The Juniatian:

I always look forward to the Will Judy lectures because I have a naive curiosity about how the speakers' minds work, and am interested in how they have chosen to spend or invest their lives. While Dr. Steinberg's tracks out of town are still fresh, I want to bring up a couple of personal reactions to his talks.

After his Thursday evening lecture I asked myself why I had dozed off so many times during his presentation. I hadn't been especially tired. My intellectual curiosity had been aroused by Dr. Steinberg's evidence that Michelangelo's genius was fully capable of handling, among other things, such tricky subject matter as herpetological-human fellation in a fresco featuring the Christian Redeemer at work offering salvation against the incredible odds of human depravity. I think I kept going to sleep because of Dr. Steinberg's language.

Thursday's presentation was a reading of a scholarly paper intended for publication, or so it seemed. Almost any scholarly paper, when read aloud, sounds like an over-eager reply to an essay question on an IQ test. A general audience is apt to assume that the writer is paid by the syllable and is aiming for a higher

Joan Lippincott, critically recognized as "one of America's outstanding organ virtuosos," will perform in concert in Juniata College on Tuesday evening, Dec. 11, at 8:15 p.m. The following morning, at 9 a.m., the accomplished organist will present a lecture-recital, "The Organ in the 19th-Century."

Organist to Perform

Critically-acclaimed organist Joan Lippincott, head of the organ department at Westminster Choir College, will perform in concert and deliver a lecture-recital on two consecutive days at Juniata College.

On Tuesday, Dec. 11, Mrs. Lippincott will perform at 8:15 p.m. in Juniata's Oller Auditorium, and on Dec. 12, she will return to Oller at 9 a.m. to present a lecture-recital, "The Organ in the 19th-Century."

The public is cordially invited to attend the concert and the lecture, both of which are supported, in part, by the Visiting Scholars and Artists Fund of the Edith B. Wertz Endowment for Support of Cultural Events. There is no charge for admission to either program.

Mrs. Lippincott, who heads the largest college organ department in the world at Westminster, has performed extensively throughout the United States and Europe, always being well-received "not only for her outstanding techniques, but especially for her sensitive musicianship."

A music critic for the Los Angeles "Times" wrote, for example, that "everything about Joan Lippincott's organ recital in Pomona College's intimate 250-seat Lyman Hall proved first class." And a critic writing for "Worship and Music Notes" further observed that "those who attended the recital can certainly verify why critics have acclaimed Mrs. Lippincott as one of America's outstanding organ virtuosos."

Not only an accomplished organist, Mr. Lippincott also has considerable expertise in the area of organ design, and she is often asked to serve as a consultant by churches and schools purchasing new instruments. At Westminster, she was responsible for adding seven new instruments to the 20 that existed in 1969.

The notorious Duke Jacques de la Nettie was approached during the first week of September by diplomats from the Land of Leases. They expressed concern about potentially troublesome ambiguities in the situation in the ugly pink slum. These representatives hope that His Highness might reopen political channels in hopes of reaching a peaceful agreement with the Land of Legal Stuff. He might at least phone them as requested. Otherwise, the citizens of the land of Leases will be forced to take the Baron and his family as hostages in order to facilitate better understanding! (And you thought Iran was ridiculous!)

Meanwhile, if you ever walk past this hideous slab of pink plaster and hear or see something that is a little upsetting, or slightly ambiguous, don't try to go in: You may end up. . . .

Jefferson Starship — Freedom at Point Zero Grunt 13452

Freedom at Point Zero reveals yet another drastic change in the venerable history of Jefferson Airplane/Jefferson Starship. Since the Starship's last album Earth, vocalists Grace Slick and Marty Balin have departed to pursue solo careers. Starship has added Aynsley Dunbar to their ranks — an excellent drummer replacing John Barbata. Dunbar, an accomplished percussionist has previously played for Ian Hunter and more recently Journey. Also added is Mickey Thomas, lead vocalist who although he is no Grace Slick, does not pale too much in her shadow. Also new in the highly respected producer Ron Nevison. Still remaining is the rest of the starship control Paul Kanter, guitar and vocals, Pete Sears, bass and keyboards, Craig Chaquico, lead guitar and vocals, and David Freiberg bass and organ.

Some of the best tunes on the album would have to include Jane which is currently on the top 100 list.

Awakening is another song portraying the move to harder rock than the band usually is associated with. Pete Sears' synthesizer and Craig Chaquico's sliding powerful guitar riffs comprise the basis of the song which is a sort of rock/blues mixture.

Girl With The Hungry Eyes is another of the best songs on the album. An upbeat tune with the usual harmonizing associated with the Starship being present.

All in all this latest change in Jefferson Starship did not prove to be a change for the worst. Although this does not necessarily mean that it was a change for the better it will simply be recognized as a dramatic change — Grace Slick certainly a major contribution to the Airplane/ Starship will without a doubt be missed. Freedom at Point Zero receives a B from Fresh Tracks.

Study Finds Preschool Programs Helpful

Results of a study released today show that participation in preschool programs significantly reduces the likelihood of school failure and markedly improves a disadvantaged child's self-concept.

The study was funded and released by the Administration for Children, Youth and Families. It was conducted by the Consortium for Longitudinal Studies under the supervision of Dr. Irving Lazar and Dr. Richard B. Darlington, both of Cornell University.

Among the key findings in the Consortium's report were:

Low-income children who had participated in preschool programs were more likely to meet their school's requirements for adequate performance than were children in control groups. They were less likely to be retained in grade or assigned to special education classes. They also scored higher than control children in mathematics acheivement.

The children's preschool experience appeared to influence them towards more realistic occupational goals than control children.

Children who have been through an early intervention program were more likely than control group children to respond with achievement-related reasons, such as school or work achievements, for feeling proud of themselves.

The report analyzes and summarizes the results of a series of separate research projects conducted by 12 pioneers in the field of early childhood education during the early and mid 1960s, and examines follow-up data collected in 1976-77.

Researchers involved in the original and follow-up studies included Drs. Kuno Beller, Temple University; Martin and Cynthia Deutsch, New York University; the late Ira Gordon, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; Susan Gray, George Peabody College, Nashville; Merle Karnes, University of Illinois, Champaign; Phyllis Levenstein, Verbal Interaction Project, Freeport, New York; Louise Miller, University of Louisville; Francis Palmer, Merrill-Palmer Institute, Detroit; David Weikart, High/Scope Foundation, Ypsilanti, Michigan; Myron Woolman, Institute for Educational Research, Washington, D.C. and Edward Zigler, Yale University.

At Juniata, Mrs. Lippincott will perform on Oller Auditorium's showpiece Moller Organ, donated by Ms. Rello Oller, a 1920 Juniata graduate and sister of Huntingdon's Jack E. Oller, in memory of her parents.

"Diapason," the national organist's magazine, heralded Juniata's Moller Organ as "one of the best to be built in 1940." It has three manuals with 30 ranks of pipes — 2,000 in all — and 43 stops, including a set of chimes.

A member of the faculty at Westminster since 1960, Mrs. Lippincott was named head of the organ department in 1968, an appointment considered a singular honor for a young artist.

Mrs. Lippincott began her musical studies as a child with William Jancovius, a student of Robert Casedesus and Isidore Phillipe, and she attributes much of her technical and musical accomplishment to this excellent early training.

Mrs. Lippincott holds bachelor's and master's degrees in music from Westminster Choir College and an artist's diploma from the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. Her musical training also includes piano study with Dr. Vladmir Sokoloff and organ study with Dr. Alexander McCurdy and Dr. Robert Baker.

tax bracket. With a little thoughtful revision, the same information could have been put in the context of the spoken word, with no sacrifice of integrity or authority. It could have been aimed at the ears of listeners; not the eyes of readers. The authoritation tone which may be needed when publishing for a jury of one's peers could be avoided at no great cost to a sincerely interested audience. Friday's talk, by contrast, was no less informative for its lack of a prepared script.

If I ever experience Last Judgement personally (the painting, that is), I'll be intersted to see if I can just stand in front of it and let it work on me; to see if it gets any juices flowing, as some works of art do. On the other hand, I may look for the steinbergian Diagonals, and surrender to my quantitative-empirical assessment mechanism, which generally doesn't entice my visceral-response perceptions into activity.

Walt Whitman must have had the same problem with astronomy that I have with art history:

When I Heard
the Learn'd Astronomer

When I heard the learn'd astronomer
When the proofs, the figures, were ranged in columns before me
When I was shown the charts and diagrams
To add, divide, and measure them
When I heard the astronomer where he lectured with much applause in the lecture-room
How soon unaccountable I became tired and sick
Till rising and gliding out I wander'd off by myself
In the mystical moist night-air, and from time to time, Look'd up in perfect silence at the stars.

No Will Judy lecturer has ever made me sick, though many have tired me, Dr. Steinberg among them. In this case it wasn't his product but the fussiness of its wrappings that kept me nodding off . . . that, and the notion I have that being clobbered by the power of a painting may sometimes be preferable to being innoculated with data as to what it's really all about.

Sincerely,
Jack Troy

Lecture a Disappointment

Dear Editor:

Although I am not in the habit of writing letters to the editor, I feel compelled to comment on this year's Will Judy Lecture by Dr. Leo Steinberg.

To be sure, Steinberg is a renowned and competent scholar in his field, and I in no way intend to create a diminished image of his abilities as an art critic or lecturer. Nonetheless, on the basis of my own opinion and the opinions of the majority of others with whom I have spoken, it seems evident that the objectives of the Will Judy Lectureship ("intended to supplement and enrich the academic program of the College.") were not at all fulfilled on November 29.

This is not to say that a worthwhile attempt was not made. It must be realized, however, that if the lecture was to have supplemented and enriched our academic program, it should first have been understandable. This it was not, at least not by the majority of the Juniata Community.

The failing was not the fault of Dr. Steinberg. Nor was it the fault of Juniata students. The fact is that a mistake was made when selecting a lecturer whose topic and style were appropriate to the nature of the intelligence of the typical Juniata student.

Attempts should be made to ensure that this situation does not recur.

Sincerely,
William Beard

Library Hours

On the Sunday before classes resume after Christmas break Beeghly Library will open for student use from 6:00 p.m. until 11:00 p.m. In recent years the College Libraries have not opened after Christmas break until 8:00 a.m. on the first day of classes; students who returned on the day before classes resumed could not use the library facilities during the evening before their classes. We will be open this year at the request of some interested students as an experiment. If Beeghly Library is used during this Sunday evening we will consider extending these after-break hours to Myers Science Library and making them a permanent part of our regular library hours.

Process For Aid Simplified

by Tammy Helwig

In response to the tuition hike fective next year, Mr. Ken ugel is urging students more an ever before to apply for finan- l aid. This year the process has en simplified considerably in mparison to previous years. hereas before Pennsylvania dents were required to com- ete both the FAF and the HEAA forms, this year only the HEAA form need be completed. is application makes students gible for state, federal, and llege assistance. More good ws is that there will be no charge for processing the applications this year. If the forms are submitted by January, students should know the results of the applications by the end of the school term.

Out-of-state students must still submit applications as in previous years. The FAF forms will be included with your renewal materials in December. New Jersey students are reminded that they must submit a TAG (Tuition Assistance Grant). All other out-of-state students should apply for BEOG using the FAF form.

Student Government Sponsors Loans

by Joan Gosnell

Although it is not official yet, udent loans will soon be ailable from Student vernment. These loans can be to $50 for thirty days. Their ain purposes are for emergen- s.

These loans were originally fered by the Financial Aid Of- e. Because of the time involved interview the students who need ch loans, Ken Grugel suggested at the Student Government uld more effectiveiy handle the eration.

The new operation will be handl- by both the financial aid office d student government. The dent would apply to the Student Government office to receive the loan. The government could approve or disapprove the loan depending on the criteria which would be decided by the government. The student would receive a voucher from the government to be given to the financial aid office. With this dual system for record keeping, the college could legally take action against students who defaulted their loans. Without a dual system, the Senate would have no power to collect their loans.

It is not yet known when this new system will be introduced, but it will soon be initiated.

Sarni Elected To Board

Vincent A. Sarni, group vice esident-chemicals of Pitts- rgh's PPG Industries, Inc., has en elected to the Board of ustees of Juniata College.

Elected by a unanimous vote ring the board's regularly heduled Fall Meeting, Sarni comes a Juniata trustee in the beral arts college's 104th ademic year, a year marked by e largest student body (1250) in e college's history.

"It is a pleasure and an honor to elcome Mr. Sarni — a man with eat energy and many talents — the Juniata community as a ustee," said Charles C. Ellis, CA senior vice president-finance d chairman of Juniata's board. hese are exciting times at niata, and the college is for- nate in having Mr. Sarni share th it his obvious expertise and adership abilities."

Sarni's association with the llege began through his son, ncent A., Jr., who graduated om Juniata in 1978. Then, as the atured speaker during Juniata's 0th commencement ceremonies st spring, he was awarded an norary doctor of laws degree by . Frederick M. Binder, Juniata esident.

After a 12-year association with e Olin Corporation, Sarni joined PG Industries in 1968 as vice esident of marketing in the In- strial Chemical Division. He as named divisional vice esident and general manager in 69, then assumed the same title th the Chemical Division in cember, 1975.

Nieto Authors Book

Dr. Jose C. Nieto, Juniata College professor of religion and chairman of the department, recently published a book about St. John of the Cross, the saint whose life and writings inspired Pope John Paul II to become a priest.

In his 143-page book, "Mystic, Rebel, Saint: A Study of St. John of the Cross," Dr. Nieto focuses upon St. John's life, thought and experience to provide a synthesis of his conflictive and pardoxical elements.

Describing St. John as a "submissive rebel," Dr. Nieto explores the conflictive themes inherent in these descriptive words to uncover the source of their tension. In addition, he portrays St. John within the wide scope of universal mysticism, and establishes differences between mysticism and religious experience.

Included in Dr. Nieto's book is a short poem he authored, of which the first and last verses explain his view that "because the book's subject is paradoxical, so is the book's method:

"This Quixotic
"St. John of the Cross
"Is from beginning to end
"A paradox

ACN Reviewed By Committee

by John W. George

The All Class Night is a long-held tradition at Juniata college that is held yearly close to the ides of March. It is symbolically the end of winter and the commencement of spring.

Each class puts on a sketch that sarcastically pokes fun at the school, groups, or individuals. The skits are based on a predetermined theme that varies yearly. After battling it out onstage, a bowl is awarded to the victorious class. It is unquestionably the largest turnout in Oller Auditorium for the year.

Along with the actors on stage, the audiences of the past have often participated in a very unruly manner by shouting obscenities and hurling objects. The problem continued to snowball until it zenithed 3 years ago. The following year, student monitors were placed to mollify the crowd's actions. Last year, food fights and their ilk preceded the affair, and it was nearly canceled. This gave rise to much discussion by the Student Affairs Council.

This year, the All Class Night steering committee and Dr. Stroman's survey class are conducting a survey of faculty and students to garner further opinions on the subject. Hopefully more can be known by the time of the next steering committee meeting, which is 3 p.m. in the Blue Room of Ellis, Friday, December 7.

The All Class Night steering committee is composed of a faculty advisor and student representative from each class, plus a representative each from Student Government, Center Board, and Student Affairs Council. Professor Esch is also a member.

Miller Named to Development Office

Kathryn M. Miller, most recently of Arlington, Va., has been named assistant director of development at Juniata College, President Dr. Frederick M. Binder announced today.

In making the announcement, Dr. Binder observed that Ms. Miller "has a very impressive background in development. She certainly will add to our already strong development program, which she joins at an exciting time."

Ms. Miller, who most recently served as assistant to the president for the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) in Washington, D.C., joins Juniata's development staff shortly after the launching of a 10-year, $13-million development program.

Divided into six objectives, a highlight of the program is the proposed construction of a multi-million dollar Sports & Recreation Center and other campus recreational improvements. improvements.

At Juniata, Ms. Miller's major responsibility will be to direct the Annual Support Fund, which has a 1979-80 goal of $241,000. She also will assist in the $13-million development campaign and will be responsible for organizing development campaign and will be responsible for organizing special development-related activities.

While serving as assistant to CASE President James L. Fisher, Ms. Miller was responsible for operation of the president's office, staffing, trustee relations, supervising the president's calendar and representing the president in his absence, among numerous other duties.

Prior to her appointment a year ago as assistant president, Ms. Miller served for a year each in two other capacities for CASE: from 1977-78, as an administrative assistant and office manager: and from 1976-77, as administrative assistant to the vice president for business affairs.

From 1974-76, she served as an assistant buyer for Buffums' of California, where she held joint responsibility for the major department store's $1.5 million ready-to-wear department.

A 1974 graduate of California State University at Long Beach — where she received a B.A. degree in psychology — Ms. Miller has taken additional course work toward an M.A. degree in educational administration at Catholic University.

Date Set for Brethren Conference

Andy and Terry Murray of Huntingdon are helping to plan a national conference for Church of the Brethren youth. They are two of the twelve persons serving on the steering committee for the Brethren Study/Action Conference to be held June 20-24, 1980, on the Juniata College campus. Andy is the Campus Minister and Terry serves as an instructional assistant in the music department.

As adult advisors for the steering committee, the Murrays have helped in determining the theme, symbol and selected leadership for the conference. They will also help determine specific policies regarding the way the conference functions. During the conference itself, Terry will be in charge of coordinating and leading music, and both Andy and Terry will be involved in many behind-the-scenes activities.

Karen Norton of Lewistown is also serving on the steering committee for the Conference. She is serving as an onsight liaison for physical facilities at Juniata. She will also help with the general responsibilities of the committee.

The Study/Action Conference occurs every four years and uses Biblical and theological reflection to focus on a selected topic. The theme for the 1980 conference, "Do Justice, Love Tenderly, Walk Humbly," is taken from Micah 6:8. The same scripture provides the basis for the Church of the Brethren Goals for the '80's statement.

The Church of the Brethren, a denomination of about 175,000 members, is headquartered in Elgin, Illinois.

Filmmaker to Speak

The departments of Political Science and Sociology are combining with the Humanities' Visiting Artists committee to bring the acclaimed nonfiction filmmaker Frederick Wiseman to Juniata in January. Wiseman will screen three of his movies, speak in two classes and give an evening presentation in Oller Hall for the college and community.

Wiseman first came to national attention with Titicut Follies, a study of a Massachusetts mental institution which was the subject of enthusiastic reviews and a still-unsettled court case started by state officials who felt they had been portrayed less than flatteringly in the film.

The filmmaker went on to make a dazzling series of studies of American social institutions in films like High School, Hospital, Welfare and Juvenile Court.

Wiseman will be on campus on January 21. He will speak in the "Current Political Issues" course of Professors Vocke and Baldino, then in Professor Davis' "History of Nonfiction Film," and finally at 8:15 he will speak in Oller Hall and screen his movie Juvenile Court.

Mead Corp. Honored

Citing the "lasting partnership between Mead Products and Juniata College, which began in 1877," Juniata President Dr. Frederick M. Binder presented Mead Corporation executive Frank DeMar with a "Partnership Award" during a special luncheon on the Juniata campus.

The luncheon — in recognition of Mead's centennial anniversary and the 15th anniversary of the company's founding its Alexandria facility — was highlighted by Dr. Binder's presentation of the award to DeMar, plant manager.

In making the presentation President Binder pleased the Mead executives by placing special emphasis on the citation's last sentence, "may this award signify Mead's entry into its second century of corporate success."

In addition to Dr. Binder, DeMar and Juniata personnel, the luncheon was attended by five other Mead executives: Bill Barclay, personnel manager; Kim Burket, production/planning inventory control manager; Don Talasky, production superintendent; Glen Rogers, sales coordinator; and Ed Boran, controller.

During the luncheon, Dr. Earl Kaylor, Jr., Juniata professor of religion and history, outlined the mutual history of Juniata and Mead Products.

That history, Dr. Kaylor noted, began on a fall day in 1877 when David Emmert, Juniata's first teacher of art, stopped in J.C. Blair's bookstore on the Penn Street "diamond."

Continuing, Dr. Kaylor observed: "In their late 20s, with only a year's difference in age, the two young men struck up a conversation during which the storekeeper revealed his ambition to mass produce some line of

"Like St. John of the Cross
"This interpretation is
"From beginning to end
"A paradox"

St. John — patron-saint of Spanish poets, the "poet of mysticism," and a universal figure of sixteenth century Spain — had a vision of Christ on the Cross, which he drew. Dr. Nieto compares this drawing to Dali's famous painting, "The Christ of St. John of the Cross," now housed in the Kelvingrove Museum of Glasgow, Scotland.

Dr. Nieto explains that "while the Christ of Dali is a 'bourgeois' Christ — plump and smooth, indifferent to pain and suffering — St. John's Christ is the ascetic, agonizing Christ, suggesting religious awe."

The Juniata religion professor's analysis of the two works of art represents the first time a comparison of the two has been made. In making his analytical observations, Dr. Nieto is able to more fully illustrate the paradoxical elements of St. John.

Published in English by one of Europe's most outstanding publishing houses — Librairie Droz S.A. of Geneva, Switzerland — the book is Dr. Nieto's most recent publication, coming shortly after his revised edition of "Juan de Valdes and the Origins of the Spanish and Italian Reformation."

Dr. Nieto, who recently returned from a trip to Spain, notes that the "Juan de Valdes" book was reviewed by renowned Spanish philosopher Jose Luis L. Aranguren in Madrid's prestigious newspaper, "El Pais."

In his review, Aranguren commented: "Although Spanish democracy is not fully realized, it is now time to revise thoroughly all established interpretations of the history of Spain in order to provide a new interpretation free from the traumas of previous orthodoxies."

Dr. Nieto explains that Aranguren's review, "The Other Face — Bronze or Gold? — of Imperial Spain," focuses on how Dr. Nieto's book fits into new historical studies about Spain.

"Books such as mine are in great demand in Spain because they explore the other side of orthodoxy," Dr. Nieto says, commenting that "minority groups in Spain — religious or political — have been interpreted only from the side of orthodoxy and were, therefore, looked upon in a negative way, as not contributing anything positive to Spanish history.

"Now, new studies — such as this one of mine — are uncovering the positive contributions of minority groups and dissident movements."

Dr. Nieto also observes that Aranguren is reviewing the book about St. John of the Cross. In addition, Dr. Nieto notes that during his trip, he was interviewed by both "El Pais" and another of Spain's leading newspapers, "ABC," also published in Madrid.

Summer Employment Directory Available

Over 15,000,000 students and teachers will want summer jobs in 1980. Many have started looking already, but even those who begin early may find jobs much harder to come by this year than last. Higher unemployment has made competition for all jobs tighter than ever this year.

If you're looking for a summer job, there's still a shortcut way to find one. That's with the help of the 1980 Summer Employment Directory of the United States (Writer's Digest Books: $6.95), an annual handbook that lists employers with over 57,000 job openings.

For the past quarter century, thousands of students have spent the summer working at exciting places, earning money for next year's expenses, too, thanks to the annual Summer Employment Directory.

This directory is packed full of listings that give you the prospective employer's name and address, a description of the jobs available, employment dates, salaries, and other important information — such as whether or not room and board are available.

This year's version of the annual directory lists 900 summer employers: amusement parks, summer camps, national parks, private resorts, summer theaters, office temporaries, marketing and sales organizations — literally everybody who hires summer workers. Jobs are listed at amusement parks like Busch Gardens in Florida, Disneyland in California, Cedar Point in Sandusky, Ohio, and Six Flags Over Texas.

All the listings are checked and updated annually. In addition to the listings of summer jobs, the directory provides tips on applying for jobs, a sample job application and information about the summer job market.

Indians End With Romp

by Doug Williams

The Juniata football season ended on November 10 in a big way. Besides completing their eighth .500 or better season in a row, they set a total offense record in a 47-0 mauling of Farleigh Dickinson at Madison.

With 570 total offensive yards the Indians broke the previous record mark of 556 yards set in 1955. Also by gaining 415 yards on the ground, they placed second on the all-time list behind the 437 yards also set in 1955.

The fact that Juniata didn't have to punt was an indication of their dominance which allowed the defense to enjoy one of their easiest games. In shutting out their first team of the year, they allowed only 74 total offensive yards and forced the Jersey Devils to lose eight yards on the ground. Steve Lach and Bob Waszak each intercepted a pass, and Waszak led the team with 14 tackles.

On offense, Juniata's leading rusher was DeWayne Rideout who picked up 137 yards on 18 carries (7.6 average) and scored 3 touchdowns. Pat Davis and Tom Bell had 82 yards apiece to add to the rushing total.

Most of the scoring came on long gains as Juniata scored touchdowns of 41, 30, 48, 40, and 80 yards among others.

With just one minute 47 seconds gone in the game, Eric Biddle scored on a 41 yard pass from Mike Nett. Although Rusty Watson missed his first extra point of the season, it didn't matter, the Indians were rolling.

With just under three minutes left in the first quarter Rideout scored from eight yards out and Jimmy Jones ran for two extra points. In the second quarter Nett took the ball himself and ran for 30 yards and a TD.

But it was in the third quarter that the Indians really made a charge. With just over two minutes gone Rideout tore 48 yards for another TD. About three and a half minutes later Rideout again scored this time from one yard, and a little over two minutes later Ed Yablonski took a 40 yard pass from Biddle for another score. But the icing on the cake was when Davis scored Juniata's longest TD of the season when he went 80 yards with just over 30 seconds left in the quarter.

Gridders Finish Season

by Doug Williams

The Juniata football season has come and gone, and the end result is a five and four record. While it is the eighth straight season Juniata has been .500 or better, it isn't as good as pre-season plans had hoped.

There were some bright spots. The entire defense had an outstanding year and ended being ranked third in the nation. Larry Shepard had a fine season, even though it was cut short by injury, and ended with 107 total tackles. Steve Lach also shined with a team-leading seven interceptions and repeated as All-MAC. Coach Rossi praised the entire secondary noting that senior John McCullough had his finest year yet. He also complimented some of the inexperienced players like Mike Ford, Bob Edwards, and Bob Waszak who played well in replacing injured upperclassmen.

On offense, Rossi mentioned an unsung star in Jim Jones who did everything asked of him playing a large, but unpublicized role in every game. Also Mike Nett, a sophomore, who helped improve a weak passing game did well. Other plusses were linemen Eric Bollinger and Guy Bennardo along with receiver Ed Yablonski.

However, there were problems which Coach Rossi referred to as frustrations. A main one was inconsistancy. It would appear in the offense one game, the defense the next, and the special teams next. It was never the same thing and never occurred at one time. But a quarter here and a quarter there something would go wrong and it often cost the Indians the game.

A possible explanation for this inconsistancy that Rossi gave dealt with late classes. Because of labs or afternoon classes he often found himself short 30 or more people. This made it difficult to communicate all that had to be done for the next game to all the players. While Rossi wasn't blaming anyone, he did feel that this, more than anything else, could have contributed to inconsistant play.

The best part of the season, and something that Rossi said made him the proudest, was the team's refusal to quit. After they lost the first two games, most hopes of a championship were gone and the team could easily have given up. But they didn't and came back to win their last three games to give them a 5-4 record.

Stats — Dewayne Rideout led the Indians in rushing (725 yards), scoring (48 points), and all-purpose offense (775 yards). Mike Nett led in total offense with 913 yards and passed with 824 yards and six TDs. Ed Yablonski had 27 catches for 323 yards and Jim Jones added 319 yards with 21 catches. On defense, Larry Shepard had 107 total tackles to lead the team. Kevin Morrow recovered five fumbles and Steve Lach had seven interceptions. Matt Blauch led the team with four sacks and threw an opponent for a loss nine times. Juniata outscored their opponents 152-91 and scored 22 TDs to 12 for the opposition. They also ran up almost 100 more total offensive yards per game than the other team.

paper merchandise, at the time thinking of wallpaper.

"Obligingly, the Juniata art teacher volunteered to make cuts of original designs for Blair's use, thus beginning a long acquaintanceship of mutual admiration.

"However, during the course of their conversation that day, Emmert occupied himself by fashioning a pad, 5-3/4 inches by 8-1/2 inches, which he intended to use for taking notes while auditing another professor's class. For backing at the top, he used a piece of stiff cardboard, and then added a stack of papers, which he clamped together with four large carpet tacks.

"It was this homemade pad that inspired the 'Blair Tablet' and a whole new stationery industry. Emmert's friend had found his 'line' and promptly forgot about wallpaper. At first John C. Blair's tablets were fastened by carpet tacks, but later he used copper tacks and then glue, which he considered 'a great improvement.'

"A year or so later, the tablet caught on, especially in public schools, and Emmert was again very useful to his friends, this time designing the Keystone Trademark. By 1882 that trademark — still carried on one Mead Products item today — could be found on Blair's stationery in many European countries and throughout most of the Western Hemisphere."

Concluding, Dr. Kaylor circulated several of Blair's original tablets, including one with the famous "Keystone" trademark. The executives of Mead Corporation — into which J.C. Blair's original tablet-making company was eventually merged — were delighted by the ancient, yet strangely (except for the tacks), modern tablets.

(The J.C. Blair Company, for many years housed on Penn Street, became part of the Western Tablet and Stationery Corporation — Westab — in 1929. Westab, in turn, became part of the giant Mead Corporation in May, 1966. The company moved the Huntingdon facility into modern quarters in Alexandria in 1965.)

In addition to receiving the citation, the Mead executives were each presented with a copy of Dr. Kaylor's centennial history of Juniata, "Truth Sets Free." Its title being the English interpretation of the Latin words on Juniata's seal — "Veritas Liberat" — the 431-page book was published in honor of Juniata's 100th anniversary in 1976.

Included in the book — and of special interest to Mead personnel — are photographs of Blairs first tablets and an expanded version of the history of the Blair tablet which Dr. Kaylor related during the luncheon.

COMING FOR CHRISTMAS

Indians Playing in Tight Games

by Pat Conroy

Off to their best start under Head Coach Pat Frazier, the Junior basketball team won their first two games and lost a heartbreaker 70-69 last Saturday against Lycoming. The indians won their first game against Ursinus 81-80 before the student body returned for winter term. They were led by Andy Dwyer, for the first time in three successive games, as he poured in 16 points and Kerry Walsh and Joe Chuba added 13.

They then beat Frostburg in one of the worst exhibitions of basketball seen through this reporter's eyes. The Indians shot 38% from the field and had 27 turnovers and the only reason they won, 58-55, was because the Bobcats were worse. They shot 33% from the field, and had 26 turnovers. The game was won by the big men who controlled the boards, especially Co-captain Roger Arnold who corraled 12 rebounds. Dwyer had another good night, connecting on 9 of 15 shots from the floor for 19 points and grabbed 9 caroms. Co-captain Dave Bizousky pulled down 8 rebounds and Scott Lehigh had 11 points and 5 steals. Frostburg, who had 10 returning lettermen, should have just brought one of them. Lewie Thomas had 21 points, 16 rebounds, and about all of the talent for the men from Maryland.

In what Coach Pat Frazier claimed the "best away game effort by any Juniata team," the Indians lost a tough game in Williamsport. Some untimely turnovers cost Juniata the game. The Indians kept up their phenomenal defense and outshot the Warriors 52% to 39%, but could not come up with the key basket when they needed it. Arnold was doing his thing again, pulling down 12 rebounds, scoring 12 points, and throwing Lycoming's star Ray Graff's shot back 6 times. Dwyer was tough again, having 21 points, including 5 of 5 from the line. Kerry Walsh dumped off 7 assists.

But when you came right down to it, Graff was the difference with 28 points, including an impressive 12 for 12 from the charity stripe. Lycoming also shot 17 more times and as a team were 16 of 18 from the foul line. The JV's pulled out a "defensive battle" 105-104 in overtime. Coached by Mike Mihalov and Dan Helm, it was the first JV victory of the year. They were led by Chet Sowal's 28 points.

The Indians return home tonight against Lebanon Valley, after playing Gettysburg on the road two days ago.

Volleyball Makes JC History

The Juniata volleyball team — the "Cinderella" squad in the East for 1979 — has finished its season with more victories than any team — in any sport — ever at the college.

The third-year Indians, 24-9, closed their season with a fourth-place finish at the AIAW Division III Eastern Regionals, held at Mansfield State. Seeded 11th, they finished behind the top three seeds, also the only teams to which they lost in the three-day tournament.

Top-seeded East Stroudsburg won the event, dropping three games in six matches, including one of four with the Indians. Third-seeded Brockport finished second, while second-seeded Western Maryland was third.

The Indians split six decisions, going 2-1 in early "pool" play to advance to the quarter-finals. They lost to Brockport, 15-10, 15-5, before bouncing back over sixth-seeded York, 15-9, 15-11, and host Mansfield, 18-16, 14-16, 15-3.

In the quarter-finals, they stopped fifth-seeded Grove City, 15-6, 15-11, before losing in the semis and consolation finals. Their semis setback came by 15-5, 15-1, 13-15, 15-9, their finals loss by 15-4, 15-8.

"We finally realized our potential," felt Indian Coach Larry Bock. "We played our two best matches ever with York and Grove City, and two of our best-ever games with Stroudsburg."

The Indians fielded, Bock says, "the two best setters in the tournament," citing junior Amy Bowser (and freshman Claudia Tweardy). "We didn't see many better blockers, either," he adds, than junior Julie George or senior Nancy Zinkham.

Rounding out the Indian lineup were three hitters: junior Sue Benusa and freshman Sue Barker and Sue Maclachlan.

The spikers held the previous single-season victory record at Juniata, going 16-4 last year. Earlier, the 1953-54 basketball team had finished 15-6.

Seven Gridders Named All-MAC

Seven Juniata College football players, including three first-team selections, have been named to the 1979 Northern Division All-Star Squad in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

The seven Indians, who tied divisional runner-up Upsala as the largest contingent from a single school, were named in coaches' balloting. Upsala earned five first-team berths, North champ Lycoming six.

Earning first-team nods for Juniata were a pair of senior captains, offensive tackle Eric Bollinger and linebacker Larry Shepard, plus junior safety Steve Lach.

Bollinger and Lach repeated berths from 1978, while Shepard had received an honorable mention in 1977.

Shepard earned his latest spot despite missing 2-1/2 games with a season-ending knee injury, while Lach was one of but six juniors named to the top 22 slots.

Tribe honorable mentions went to senior tailback DeWayne Rideout, junior split end Ed Yablonski, sophomore quarterback Mike Nett and sophomore middle guard Matt Blauch.

Rideout and Blauch had been first-team picks in 1978, when the Indians placed five players in the top 22, but aside from Bollinger and Lach, only five players repeated there this fall.

Senior center Todd Blankenstein, the Indians' fifth selection last season, missed the Tribe's last four games this year being struck by a truck.

Rideout led the Northern Division in rushing this year, averaging 93.5 yards per game, and was third in total offense. Named as first-team running backs were Wilkes' Carmen LoPresto, second in rushing at 91.8, Upsala's Don Oshiro, third at 78.5, and Delaware Valley's Bill Mullen, who was not among the top five gainers.

Nett was second in both passing and total offense, averaging 7.2 completions and 114.8 yards. In both columns, he trailed first-team quarterback and North MVP Rick Burd of Lycoming. His favorite target was Yablonski, second in receiving with his 3.3 completions per game.

Lycoming placed six players — its first-team selections — on the overall all-star squad. Wilkes also placed six, including three first-team picks, as did Delaware Valley, with one first-team nod.

Other first-team spots went to Albright and Susquehanna, with two apiece.

As a team, Juniata was second in North total offense and second in total defense, trailing Lycoming in both spots (322.3 to 304.1, and 165.7 to 196.2, respectively).

Lycoming won its second straight North title, going 6-0 in the league, followed by Upsala (5-1), Juniata and Wilkes (4-3), Delaware Valley and Albright (3-4), Susquehanna (2-5) and FDU-Madison (0-7).

Women Win Opener

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Last Wednesday, the Juniata women's basketball team opened their third season under Coach nancy Latimore. The Indians defeated Frostburg State 79-62 in Memorial Gym.

Starting slowly and using a zone defense, the half ended in a 28 point tie. After the intermission, the Tribe switched to a man to man defense and was effective in shutting down their opponent's offense.

Freshman Amy Brua was the game's high scorer with 24 points, followed by Senior Captain Nancy Zinkham, who chipped in 16. JC was able to cut down on last year's 35 turnover average. After giving the ball up 17 times in the first half, the Indians contained their charity, by handing the ball over 9 more times.

Coach Nancy Latimore has high expectations: "We should do very well this season — we will have to beat ourselves to be defeated. We have excellent ball handlers, good shooters, and for the first time, a team that can play man to man defense." Once again she expects the toughest competition to come from Bucknell, Shippensburg, and league rivals, Elizabethtown and Scranton.

For the first time this year, the girls are entered in a regular season tournament. This weekend the Indians will be in Virginia, playing in the Bridgewater Invitational. They will face the host team Friday night and Eastern Mennonite on Saturday afternoon.

JC returns to regular action on December 12 at Loretto against the Red Flash of St. Francis.

Field Hockey Places All-Stars

Two Juniata College field hockey players — senior sweeper Shawn Hansen and sophomore halfback Barb Pearson — have been named to the Coaches' All-Star Team in the Middle Atlantic Conference Southern Division.

Hansen and Pearson led Juniata to a 3-3-3 record this fall, though the Indians wound up 0-1-2 in the MAC South-West Section. They were named to the second all-star unit on the league's initial yearly team.

F&M, the South-East Section champion, dominated the two Divisional teams, placing nine players. Gettysburg, the South-West Section and MAC champ, placed another four, as did South-East runner-up Elizabethtown.

Dickinson added three players, Juniata and Lebanon valley two each, and Western Maryland one. Only Albright failed to place a player on the squads.

Pearson had earned, the previous week, yet another all-star spot: on the "Susquehanna 2" team selection to play in last week's MidEast Sectionals of the US Field Hockey Association Tournament.

She and four other Indians, Marj Porter, Marian Pagano, Bonnie Cieslar, Clair Warmerdam, failed to earn spots on the MidEast teams which now advance to the USFHA Nationals.

Indian Coach Nancy Latimore, who coached the Susquehanna 3 squad, was nonetheless pleased with Indian showings at the Sectionals. "When you get to that level," she explained, "the competition for all-star spots gets pretty rough, what with former members of the national team and so on. But we played pretty well against good people."

Susquehanna 3, with Juniata's Marian Pagano scoring half its goals, went 2-0-1 at the Sectionals, topping Central Penn 2, 3-1, and Pittsburgh 2, 2-1, and tying Lancashire 3, 1-1.

On the regular season, Juniata was paced offensively by senior Marj Porter whose seven points included four goals and three assists. Senior Lisa Masood added three goals and two assists, while senior Debbie Spillane collected four goals.

Sophomore goalie Nanci Young, ranked 10th in the overall MAC and fifth in the Southern Division, turned in an overall .814 saves percentage, stopping 48 shots and allowing 11 goals. In eight games, Young recorded three shoutouts.

Triples Again?

by Bob Kemper

The Admissions and Housing Offices are trying hard this year to avoid the housing problems encountered with the present freshman class.

One of the major steps being taken by the two offices in conjunction with the President, the Academic Dean, The Dean of Student Affairs, the Business Manager, and The Development Office is to decrease the actual number of students being accepted for enrollment. The projected figure for acceptances in 1980 is about 400 students in comparison to the 422 freshman and transfers who arrived on campus this fall.

To eliminate confusion on the part of the students, Admissions is encouraging interested students to apply early so that they will not be assigned a triple should they decide to attend Juniata. Admission representatives are also informing prospective students about triples in interviews and again when they call students to inform them of their acceptance.

Although students and parents taking tours on Visitor's Day said that they had not yet received any mail information about triple occupancy from Juniata, an Admissions representative said that they will be informed in the course of their interview should they receive one.

Although both the Housing and Admissions Offices hope that the present freshman class will be the first and last Juniata students to live three in a room, they do not believe that they still have adequate housing to totally eliminate triples next year. Even though there will probably be triples, the number of people forced to live in them will decrease.

U.S. Steel Provides Grant

The United States Steel Foundation, Inc., has awarded Juniata College a $25,000 grant to provide for additional teaching equipment in one of the college's acclaimed natural sciences programs, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder announced last week.

In making the announcement, Dr. Binder said that the grant money will be used to purchase polarizing microscopes for the geology department.

Pinball Machines Abused

by Mike Ford

In recent weeks, four pinball machines in Ellis have been damaged so severely they have been removed from the gameroom. According to Programming Director Wayne Justham, if this damage continues, it is highly probable that all of the coin games will be removed. Justham stated that the College has a contract with the Royer Amusements for eleven pinball machines, but because of damage, only seven machines are presently in the gameroom.

Students beat the machines until they produce free games, and abuse has been extreme. In one case a machine's legs were badly bent that it had to be removed.

On another machine the coin-receiving mechanism was barely attached to the inside of the machine. Justham felt that the company has been giving the College good service, but obviously cannot afford to have their machines constantly damaged.

Many students do not realize that the Juniata College Center Board gets 50% cut from the money spent on the machines. In past years this has added up to as much as $200,000 clear profit which is then used in student programming. Currently this income is below last year's level, and threatens to be cut off totally if the rest of the pinball machines must be removed due to damage.

Students who damage the machines are affecting many aspects of student life — the recreational use of the machines will not be available to the student body, Center Board is losing money and student programming will suffer because of it.

Center Board has placed signs on the machines to discourage further abuse. Recently, four students have been apprehended damaging machines, and will be given an administrative hearing. Students witnessing damage to the pinball machines are requested to immediately notify the information desk of the activity.

Social Service Club to Expand

by Mindy Vincent

A few years ago, the Social Service Club was organized by students studying social work. The club, designed as a service club, was mainly made up of people with POE's in social work. In the past, members have worked with the children at the Crawford apartments, but this year they are trying to expand the services that they offer.

An organizational meeting was held on Wednesday, December 5. Chuck Parsons, a senior working in the DeForrest apartment building in Huntingdon and in the Taylor apartment building in Mt. Union, new complexes for the aged (60 and up), attended the meeting to solicit help from club members. Parsons said that the apartment dwellers are very lonely and need friends; in fact, many of them do not even know the other people on their hall.

The proposed activities would allow the elderly in the complex to get out of their rooms and meet other people.

On Monday, December 10, there was a crafts night held for the elderly at the DeForrest complex, to enable them to get acquainted with other people and to find out what kinds of things they would be interested in doing. A Christmas party is being planned; other ideas for activities include Bingo and Card playing.

In other club business, the idea of starting a Hotline was discussed. Jay Buchanan has volunteered his office and time to the project once it gets underway. Since training sessions will be necessary before anyone can even consider working with such a project, it will take a long time to get the project together, and it may be several years before it can be expanded to the community.

Other plans being considered by the club include sponsoring speakers on topics such as planned parenthood, and alcohol and drug abuse. A tour of the Huntingdon County Prison may be scheduled in the spring. Lisa Volle, president of the club, is already participating in the Big Brother — Big Sister program and is encouraging others to become involved also.

There will be another meeting tonight, December 13, 7:00 p.m. to discuss these ideas.

Trials Delayed as Iranians Clash in Streets

Mobs of pro- and anti-Khomeini forces battled in the streets of Tabriz on Sunday, capturing and recapturing government buildings in the worst violence of the four-day-old rebellion by Turkish Iranians in northwestern Iran. Heavy gunfire broke out at the government radio-television station as thousands stormed the facility and seized it from pro-Khomeini forces who had recaptured it earlier in the day. There was no immediate information concerning casualties following the disturbance.

While the Iranian government attempts to quell the actions of the rebellious minorities seeking to overthrow the Ayatollah's rule, the government changed its mind about setting a quick date for the trials of U.S. Embassy hostages.

Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh pledged last Friday to make a statement within 48 hours regarding a trial date for the 50 Americans still inside the Embassy. On Sunday he commented, "At present we are not going to set any time limits on arriving at any new decisions about the hostages."

In a nationally televised interview, he stated it might take 10 days for him to establish an international panel that would be up to investigate the hostages.

Zimbabwe Rhodesian air force jets attacked Patriotic Front guerrilla bases in neighboring Mozambique and Zambia on Sunday, coinciding with the final stages of peace talks in London between the guerrillas and the biracial government of Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa. In London a spokesman for Joshua Knomo's Patriotic Front said the attacks showed that the Salisbury government was not serious about the settlement. Zambia provides a base for Nkono's guerrillas.

The attacks cast a shadow over hopes for an early conclusion of a Zimbabwe Rhodesian peace agreement. Both sides in the talks had accepted a constitutional plan, and last week the guerrilla leaders agreed to cease-fire terms. But last minute technical hitches developed and the front declared it would not accept the principles of cease-fire that amounted to "surrender."

Madrigal Dinner

For the past two years the Madrigal Dinner Committee of Center Board has been riddled with the problem of not enough seating for all the students who wish to attend the traditional dinner. Over the last two years the demand by students to attend the event has exceeded the number of seats which is 538. This year, approximately 100 students who wanted to attend the dinner stood in line at registration, but by the time they reached the head of the line all they were offered was a place on the waiting list.

In an attempt to eliminate the problems resulting from last year's table registration (mainly students cutting into line ahead of others — causing students who did not receive tables to complain loudly and legitimately to the Madrigal Committee), this year's Committee investigated various methods of registration and made certain alterations in the process to make sure that the process would be as fair as possible to all students.

The Committee decided that the old system of "first come, first serve" was the fairest method of registration. All students would therefore have an equal opportunity to obtain a seat. The committee had explored methods involving seniority, but decided this was unfair to freshmen.

To prevent the congestion and confusion of last year, registration was moved to the Ellis Ballroom. Ropes were set up inside the Ballroom to direct students in an orderly fashion to the registration table. This also eliminated line cutting.

Only one person was required to sign-up a table for a group this year — this was also designed to eliminate unnecessary congestion. The Committee also required a complete list of names and meal sticker numbers before a group was assigned to a table. And groups were assigned to tables; they were not allowed to select tables as they had in the past. This policy was initiated to move the line at a more efficient rate.

To eliminate registration "by convenience," the time of registration was moved to 2 p.m. on Wednesday afternoon in the Ballroom. In prior years, registration was scheduled during the dinner hours in the lobby adjacent to the dining hall. If people wanted a table they had to make a greater effort to get a table.

The Committee had also advertised extensively the time, date, location and method of registration to the student body. If a student did not know that registration was scheduled for Wednesday at 2 p.m. in the Ballroom, it was no fault of the Committee.

While the Committee had done everything within its power to insure all students an equal opportunity to obtain a table, a shadow was cast upon their effort when they began assigning tables at 1:40 p.m., twenty minutes before the advertised time.

Those students who arrived at 2 p.m. entered the line, and five minutes later were told the tables were full. Students who entered the line at 1:45 p.m. could do no better than the "waiting list" for tables. These students, upon learning registration began at 1:40 and not 2:00, felt cheated and misinformed.

One of the major responsibilities of this year's Madrigal Dinner Committee was to insure an equal opportunity — a fair chance to all of the students interested in attending the Madrigal Dinner. The element of fairness was a concern to the Committee because it wanted to avoid the bitter feelings which resulted from last year's registration. By informing the students that registration would begin at one time and starting it at another time an element of unfairness was introduced into the process — an element that made some students feel they had been cheated.

Ed. Note — The best suggestion to date regarding "How to Handle Madrigal Sign-Ups in the Future" was submitted by Mark Hyssong, '80: For all those students who wish to attend the Madrigal complete a card which includes the names and meal sticker numbers of students at a given table. Put all cards in a bin and select at random.

Along Muddy Run

by Jeff Boulton

As soon as the plates were cleared and his wife was wolfing down her meager leftovers, the President Bread Finder pushed his chair back from the dinner table and addressed two of his more notorious accomplices. It was a typical meeting of the three, one in which many important policy decisions were made.

"The reason i've called you fellows here this evening " droned the perpetually smiling president, "is that i personally feel that there is a grave problem here on this campus these days. Anyone care to guess what this problem might be?" he asked, hoping someone would come up with something good.

"Ooh! Ooh! Call on me, Sir!" squealed the Housing Director. "Please-please-please??" He was totally out of control, as usual.

"Would you like to add something, Jacques?" inquired the Bread Finder with a condescending smile.

"I saw at least a half-dozen students on campus this week who were . . . uh . . . well, smiling, Sir! I think it's about high time we implemented that student curfew policy i've been stubbornly recommending four times at every administrative meeting for the last three years. Uh, Sir!"

"That's about the dumbest thing i've ever heard!" shouted Barnie, the Dean of the S.S. "I mean, you make the most ridiculous statements sometimes, Jacques! Like every time you open your big fat mouth something disgusting always comes out!!"

Jacques turned forty shades of red before he could think of anything to say. Finally, amid administrative laughter, he countered, "It was not me that got sick at that party last Friday night! It was your wife and you know it!" He was now standing with his arms folded and a smug sneer spread across his face.

"Gentlemen, gentlemen! Please try to control yourselves! I've called you here to discuss a very grave problem. Will you please be seated so we can continue our meeting in an orderly fashion?" implored the Bread Finder, grinning annoyedly.

Barnie and Jacques sat down like whipped puppies. Barnie stuck his tongue out at Jacques, who yelled, "Doctor Finder, Barnie's stickin' his tongue out at me! Make him stop it!"

"Barnie, stop sticking your tongue out at Jacques. Okay, now; does anyone have any problems in mind?" said the head honcho, beaming in delight at his display of power.

"I do — He's a problem!" screamed Jacques, pointing at Barnie.

"I am not! He is!" hollered Barnie.

"Shut up!" boomed the Bread Finder. Reassuming his customary pleasant grin, he broke the sudden silence with his soothing and sophisticated voice. "As you two men seem utterly incapable of helping me solve this pressing question, i will simply answer that my instincts suggest that one troublesome situation here is that the students are bored."

"Aw, who asked you?" blurted Barnie.

"Yeah, your instincts stink!" suggested Jacques gleefully.

"With all due respect, sir," offered Barnie, "If the problem isn't Jacques, then it has to be you. It most certainly isn't me. Did you hear what you just said? Who cares if our students are bored? What do you think they're here for?"

"Anyway!" injected Jacques. "It's our job to make them bored! Why do you think we were picked from all the applicants who wanted to work here?"

The Bread Finder stopped smiling. He considered these comments for a moment, and remarked, "I work here because i'm so . . . Dynamic!" Barnie and Jacques groaned. The president continued, "Look, guys. I don't like being bored. I hate it. It's so . . . boring!"

Barnie saw an opening for his own ideas. "Just because the students are bored doesn't mean we have to be bored! Think of all the fun and adventurous ways we could bore the students!"

"Yeah!" ejaculated Jacques. "Just imagine all the neat-o rules and regulations we could impose on them!"

The Bread Finder got a gleam in his eye. His crafty smile returned as he caught the drift of the conversation. "The only thing is, it can't cost the College any money. My salary's too low already!"

"Of course not! All we've got to do is make up fines for everything," piped Jacques.

"For sure. And we can have a lot of good money-making activities, like dinners and receptions and pep-rallies and all that kind of stuff!"

"All right, fellows! I leave the details up to you, so long as i get 90% of the take; you can divide the

Letters to the Editor

Dear Sirs:

I write to you the editors of The Juniatian as open-minded and fair people. I wish to express a comment concerning the recent anti-Iranian demonstration held at Juniata late one night so reminiscent of the Klan's style. How many of you, the marchers, really cared what happened in Iran? How could you? You will rally out to shout and parade when there are cameras and free publicity yet you remain apathetic and quiet when policy is decided right here at Juniata.

Rules get changed, made, and broken; rules and regulations which effect your immediate lives. You sit by and allow hard-won social liberties to become bent or extinct, and yet you cry over the lack of freedom which you enjoy. Maybe that is the clue you don't really care at all. Follow the crowd, get a laugh, pretend to be concerned. How many of you? HOW MANY? Will go and give the ultimate sacrifice, your LIVES, should those slogans of "Kill Khomeini" and "Bomb Iran" become reality. You chant, you cheer, but you hypocrites better answer the call when it comes. Don't rely on college, some eighteen-year-old will go die so you can demonstrate, how's that sit on your conscience! And soon you will all be out, and quite eligible. Uncle Sam isn't choosy either. Do number of Juniata students have an interest in advanced geological studies — such as petrology, economic mineral deposits, sedimantology and others — the additional microscopes will allow all geology students easier access to these vital educational tools," the Juniata president observed.

Located in the north wing of the Brumbaugh Science Complex, Juniata's geology department has equipment ranging from standard survey and collecting items to highly sophisticated atomic absorption and x-ray diffraction units, hydrothermal furnaces, a gravity meter and a seismograph.

"Juniata — which recognizes the urgent need to improve understanding of our physical environment and man's relationship to it — is most grateful to the U.S. Steel Foundation for assisting its geology department in providing students with these essential educational tools," commented Dr. Robert H. Washburn, professor of geology and department chairman.

Good Companions Gather Together

by John Kelly

esday, December 4th, at 8:15 in Oller Hall, Dr. Esther e, Diane Gold, Dr. Ibrook r, and Mary Ruth Linton nted a program called "The Companions." The program one of literature and music. we, the audience, were the companions. A good anion is "one who lights the one with whom the rience is made brighter." e other shows, there was a intimacy of the performance se both the audience and the rmers sat up on the stage. er Dr. Doyle welcomed us, listened to Allegro ma bile by Vivaldi. Dr. Doyle read a selection by Dylan as entitled "Quite Early One ing." After Largo, the second on of Trio by Vivaldi, Dr. e read part of the "Colossus Maroussi" by Henry Miller. ugh the magic of Dr. Doyle's ng the audience was taken to aurus to learn of "the peace passeth understanding." er Epidaurus there was a by E.M. Foster called "Two cheers for America." This was followed by Farley Mowatt's "People of the Deer." The audience held its breath as they heard the account of a small boy who sees for the first time the great annual Caribou migration in northern Canada. After this piece Dr. Doyle showed her mastery of the art by reading D.H. Lawrence's "Morning in Mexico." It tells of an English expatriate recalling his other life in Mexico.

The final piece "In Sara's Tents," by Walter Starkie, told of English women at a Hungarian folk dance. The performance closed with Tarentelle op. 6 by Saint Saens.

Most people forget how hard it is to conjure up vivid images of faraway places and lands. Dr. Doyle made these places come alive. The music cannot be forgotten. Although you probably wouldn't hear it on WKVR, the music was excellent and helped carry the audience from place to place. In one short hour the audience experienced adventure and sadness, and a haunting feeling of being there.

rest as you see fit," stated their Capo decisively.

"Hey! No Fair!" squeaked Jacques.

"I want thirty three and a third!" cried Barnie, showing off his mathematical genius.

"You can want whatever you want to want," said their generous leader. "But if you're smart you'll get more than Jacques does. I really must get going; i have an appointment with the Mercedes dealer, and i have to get a new living room suite for the little lady for Christmas. Boy, are expense accounts ever great! I'll see you boys the next time we have a problem or whenever you start collecting those fines, whichever comes first," he added, smiling his way out of the door. "Have a good evening!"

"Look here, Jacques," began Barnie, bargaining. "We'll put that curfew policy of yours into effect next week, and you can have a quarter of our share of the take."

"No Fair!!" answered Jacques.

"But you get to check the girls' dorms. . . ."

Little Feat-Down On The Farm
Warner Brothers-HS3345

Down On The Farm is the eighth album released by Little Feat and chances are it will be the last due to the death of Lowell George this past summer, the band's originator, lead vocalist, guitarist, and chief songwriter. Most of the material was recorded prior to his death and the album was even produced by him. Although the band terms this album as "the real last record album," (The Last Record Album was the title of a previous release) by the music it contains they in no way meant it to be the least.

No changes in personnel have occurred since the last few Little Feat albums-Paul Barrere, guitars and vocals, Richard Hayward, drums and vocals, Kenny Gradney, bass, Sam Clayton, congas, and of course Lowell George, guitar and vocals. Background vocals are provided by Bonnie Raitt among others and Keith Godchaux (formerly of the Grateful Dead) combines his songwriting skills with George's on one song.

Choosing the best cuts on the album was no little feat, however, because all of the songs rate among the band's best efforts to date.

The title track Down On The Farm is an upbeat tune dealing with a girl's moving to the big city to take up an occupation in an area of scarlet illumination. Lowell George's raspy vocals are strong here with intricate guitar work interlacing the lyrics.

Six Feet Of Snow is a different tune discreetly mixing country with just a touch of a polka beat. The result is amazing and it is truly an enjoyable song, co-written by Keith Godchaux.

Straight From The Heart is another Feat tune destined to be a classic. Another upbeat tune, the lyrics seem to be the saga of Lowell George. Accentuated percussion and articulate guitar work provide the base and George's vocals complete the structure.

Be One Now is a song with more of a Latin/Jazz influence not unlike that of Steely Dan. The harmonies, instrumentation, percussion, and even lyrics are among the best effort ever by the Feat, and if Donald Fagen started off the first verse no one would be surprised.

All in all, this Feat album is as superb as its seven predecessors. No disappointment will be experienced in listening to this album except in coming to the realization that this will most likely be the last album of new material to be released by such a great band. Down On The Farm is truly a final tribute to Lowell George, worthy of an A-minus from Fresh Tracks.

Pure Prairie ue's "Amy" was performed, he set ended with a Spanish-flavored song by Charlie Daniels.

Bruce Rowland then stepped up to the stage to perform two songs each by Stephen Stills and Neil Young. In each of the four songs, Bruce is to be commended for his audacity to which he seems to subscribe so ardently. Before Richard Mayher accompanied him, Bruce displayed his versatility by doing a slide guitar number that was reminiscent of Led Zeppelin's "Hats Off to Roy Harper".

When Richard joined Bruce, they went into a tune by Graham Nash, which was followed by a good rendition of Neil Young's "Hopeless". It seemed that the audience wanted either Bruce or Neil Young, so Bruce quickly fired off two of Young's best tunes, "Comes a Time" and the classic "Cowgirl in the Sand" for his brief encore.

Armed with the best material of the night, Glenn Beasley strolled onstage to deliver a barrage of extremely well-done songs by Bob Dylan, Neil Young, and one each from Led Zeppelin, Lynyrd Skynyrd, John Lennon, and the New Riders.

On Dylan's "Subterranean Homesick Blues", Skynyrd's "Sweet Home Alabama", the Rider's "Last Lonely Eagle", and Young's "Southern Man" and "Ohio", Tom Concilus was persuaded to join Mr. Beasley on the voice harp. Needless to say, his presence added an air of professionalism to the overall performance.

To conclude an evening of exceptional music, Dan Brilhart, with Ed Mozer on banjo, began to work into a number of mellow, folksy songs such as the "Gambler", "The House on Pooh Corner", "Defying Gravity", "Criple Creek", "Will the Circle Be Unbroken", and other tunes that contained somewhat of a pious overtone. Contrary to the previous performers, Dan and Ed caused much audience participation with their down-home-on-the-songs. Many hearty souls enjoyed their deft picking and Dan's pleasant but airy voice well into the wee hours of Sunday morning.

The Outing Service does a superior task in preparing the Catharsis Lounge in Sherwood for the performers. Except for an outdated sound system, the production rated admirably. The lighting system and the speedy service by the popcorn and beer waiters also added to the total atmosphere of general satisfaction, although at times the lounge seemed more like a bar rather than a coffeehouse because of the crowd's reluctance to relate to the musicians.

With a minimum of outlay and a healthy return off the price of tickets, the Outing Service profusely expands their general fund by putting on a coffeehouse. With this money, Laughing Bush Enterprises can offer the Juniata student much more in the form of outing equipment.

you all forget that "War is so cruel, it goes on for so long." Can you continue to demonstrate when that first body-bag returns?

If you can, if you are willing to pay the ultimate sacrifice, your lives, to "Kill Khomeini," why then go right ahead and demonstrate. Truly show your loyalty and patriotism. But if you will run to Canada, or fail to support those very slogans, then please, "Shut up!" Go to your kegs and your soft, comfortable rooms, concentrate on Juniata where you can't get killed and where you can't get anyone else killed. Like that young eighteen-year-old! And don't demonstrate, it doesn't fit Juniata's social rules and you all do it so poorly. Thank you.

Holiday Bowls!

Over the upcoming break, the Juniatian decided to give you a chance to win $25 in our 'bowls' poll. All you have to do is get more games right than the Sports editors do. In the event of a tie, we ask you to pick who you think will be the NCAA National Champion and the total amount of points the champs will score on the first of the year. Our picks are: Roh Morris — Oklahoma, Ohio St., Houston, Alabama, Purdue, Clemson, Michigan, Pittsburgh, LSU, Tulane, Texas, Brigham Young, Oklahoma with 35 points; Pat Conroy — Oklahoma, USC, Houston, Alabama, Purdue, Clemson, Michigan, Pittsburgh, LSU, Penn St., Texas, Brigham Young, Alabama with 30 points.

Football Contest Entry Form

Juniatian Football Contest Rules:

1. The object is to select the winners of the ten games to be played over the next weekend.
2. To make a selection merely circle the teams you pick to win. If you want to predict a tie circle both teams.
3. Each contestant is permitted only one entry per week.
4. The Juniatian will award a $10.00 prize. To win, a contestant must predict the highest number of winning teams, and this prediction must tie or surpass all of the Juniatian sports editors. In the event of a tie among contestants and/or sports editors for the highest winning team count, the total points estimates will be used as a tiebreaker. If a tie exists the prize money will be evenly distributed to the winners.
5. All entries must be submitted by noon Saturday. The entry boxes are located in the hallway by the Juniatian Office or in the Ellis Hall lobby.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Juniatian except those directly associated with the Juniatian.

So What Happened?

The Juniata Indians evened their record at 3-3 last week, doing it the easy way. After an impressive win on the road against Gettysburg 54-52, JC managed to drop two games against teams they were heavily favored against.

At Gettysburg, the Indians won their third game of the young season by less than 4 points to up their record to 3-1. This was Kerry Walsh's day to be hero, as his three point play with only 8 seconds to go clinched the victory. Fighting back from a 10-point deficit, the Indians got hot inside, especially Andy Dwyer who had 20 points. Dan Helms, the assistant coach, was credited with the victory due to his renovation of Indians' inside game. Dave Bender chipped in with 10 points for the victory.

Then, although the varsity came home, they left their shooting touch on the road. Lebanon Valley was not the strongest team Juniata will face. The Indians had 14 LESS turnovers and 9 MORE field goals! Why did they lose? Shot selection and playing defense with their hands is the answer. JC shot 37 per cent from the floor to the Dutchmen's 64 per ce (although they only shot 22 times The Indians fouled 28 times givi LV 38 free throws of which th made 29; JC made 2 of 5 from t stripe. In fact, LV only had chance to shoot 8 times in t second half because the India were all over them — literall Juniata got 42 chances to put it the bucket, but could drop only

The story gets better. Again the worst team in the leagu winless Fairleigh-Dickinson, t Indians were favored by 18 point Attempting to cure their scori woes, the Indians employed times what must be called a zo offense. Freshman Chet Sow was designated shooter, a although displaying enough tou to drop some bombs, he and t rest of the team together cou only sink 36% of their shots. O shot basketball didn't hold up, a JC came out on the low end of a 48 score. Sowal had 14 points f the game, Andy Dwyer added more to go with his 13 rebound and Roger Arnold also added points.

So what's the story? Why t sudden, or perhaps overdu collapse? Is it the player Apparently not, Coach Frazier h indicated there is an abundance talent by keeping 14 varsi players. Is it possible some a seeing too much action, and oth not enough? Is it possible the tea got carried away with i seemingly fast start? Or perha the problem is in the coachin Doesn't the saying go — shoote are born, but defense is taught. it time to go back to basics? Is time to run-and-gun? Women Undefeated

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Juniata's women's basketball team upped its record to 3-0 over the weekend by defeating Bridgewater and Eastern Mennonite at the Bridgewater Invitational Tournament in Virginia.

The host team fell to defeat Friday night 55-46. Led by freshmen Ellen Gasnacht with 14 points and Aimee Brua with 13, JC shot 33.3%. Julie George led the Indian rebounders with 11, followed by Nancy Zinkham and Judy Pepoy with 9 apiece.

On Saturday afternoon, Eastern Mennonite tried its luck against the much improved Tribe team. Up by seven at the half, JC never looked back and won by 20 points, 65-45. Ms. George led the scoring with 22, while Nancy Roach chipped in 11. Julie George also led the rebounding with 14 and Ms. Zinkham grabbed 7 caroms.

The Indians travel to Elizabethtown Saturday night to face the tough Blue Jays. It is the first league contest of the young season for the women and the last game until after Christmas.

Misunderstanding Over Grades

by Mike Ford

Last week's article regarding the delay in grade distribution needs to be clarified. The article, which appeared in the December 6 issue of the Juniatian, stated that a faculty member had turned 42 grades in late, but that this tardiness had not caused the delay in distribution. The registrar's staff was the source of the information.

However, after interviewing the Registrar, Tom Nolan, it became clear that this was, in fact, incorrect, and that it was precisely because of this late faculty member that the grade reports were late.

The Registrar stated that while the grades were due Monday, this faculty member did not bring his in until Tuesday, which set the entire process back 24 hours. According to Nolan, if this faculty member had submitted his grades on time, then the grade reports would have been in the mailboxes when the students arrived on campus after term break.

Last week's article stated that the Accounting Office had not withheld the grades of students who had not paid their bills. This was incorrect, but when individual cases warrant such, the Accounting Office has withheld grade reports.

Juniata Receives Research Grant

In recognition and support of its rong tradition of undergraduate esearch, Juniata College has eceived a $14,800 grant from the esearch Corporation, Juniata resident Frederick M. Binder an- ounced last week.

Dr. Binder credits receipt of the rant to Dr. Ruth E. Reed, ssistant professor of chemistry nd principal investigator for esearch into the "Involvement of lant Aminotransferases in hotorespiration — Inhibition and haracterization Studies."

Dr. Reed explains that the proj- ct will involve an analysis of lant enzymes, specifically those hat may be part of hotorespiration and nitrogen tilization in agriculturally im- ortant plants.

"The ultimate goal is resolution a problem that has plagued odern scientists who are in- erested in increased crop roduction — how to increase trogen utilization," she says, dding that "this would have far- eaching effects in energy conser- ation, since man-made fertilizers rrently are used in part for that urpose."

Observing that Juniata "already has excellent facilities for this type of research," Dr. Reed says that electrophoresis equipment to separate the plant proteins has been purchased with grant funds.

Currently aiding Dr. Reed in one aspect of research for the project is Juniata student Pam Green from Vineland, N.J., a senior majoring in biochemistry. During the next two summers of the project, four additional Juniata students will have the opportunity to gain first-hand experience in investigative biochemical research.

A 1968 graduate of Winthrop College, Dr. Reed was a 1968-69 Fulbright Fellow at the Georg August Universitaet in Goettingen, West Germany.

She received her Ph.D. in biochemistry from the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in 1974 and joined the Juniata College faculty in 1976.

The grant is sponsored by the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation under the Cottrell Science Grants Program of the Research Corporation.

Its funds are derived from the Hewlett Foundation of Palo Alto,

Militants Insist Hostages will be Tried; Shah Exiles in Panama

Shah Mohammed Riza Pahlevi, former ruler of Iran, secretly left the United States last Sunday for exile in Panama.

Iran claimed on Sunday that the deposed shah's exile to Panama was a defeat for the United States and a partial acceptance of Iranian demands.

Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh stated some of the 50 hostages might be freed by Christmas and he played down talk of putting hostages on trial as spies. The militant students holding the Americans hostage at the embassy vowed to try some of the hostages as spies and said that none would be released until the trial was conducted.

Title IX Monitors Sex Discrimination

Title IX is a Federal law that was passed by Congress, and signed by the president in 1972. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare wrote and published regulations in 1975 that outline the specific requirements an educational institution must meet in order to comply with the law. The Office for Civil Rights, in HEW, is assigned the task of enforcing Title IX.

The preamble of Title IX states: "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Title IX applies to all schools that receive Federal aid. As a practical matter, virtually every college and university, and many vocational schools are covered.

The following list summarizes some of the key provisions of the law. If your school engages in practices contrary to these regulations, it is probably in violation of Title IX. If you believe a violation has occurred, you should consider contacting your school's affirmative action officer or the Office for Civil Rights in HEW.

* Admissions: Schools may not discriminate on the basis of sex in their admissions policies (except that single-sexed undergraduate schools may continue to admit only men or women). Specifically, schools may not rank men or women separately, may not give preference to one sex, and may not set a quota or other limit on the number of persons of one sex to be admitted. Further, a school may not use an admissions test that has a disproportionately adverse effect on one sex unless it can show that the test accurately predicts success in the program. Schools are also barred from discriminating on the basis of marital or parental status. They may not make a pre-admission inquiry into the marital status of applicants.

* Educational Programs: Generally, educational institutions may not engage in sex discrimination in any academic, extracurricular, research, occupational training or other educational program. A school may not on the basis of sex provide

by Mark Coakley

Upon the resignation of Charles W. Wise, former Juniata professor, two temporary instructors were hired to take over some of his responsibilities. Mr. Glenn Roth and Mr. William Nelson, both of whom are prominent business executives, are the two individuals who have been acquired to fill this need.

Mr. Nelson, who is being utilized to teach Personnel Management, is originally from Ridgeway, Pennsylvania. Now residing in Hollidaysburg, he holds the position of Director of Employee Relations at Berwind Railway Service Co. Mr. Nelson holds a B.S. as well as an M.S., both of which were earned at Penn State University.

Mr. Roth, the Cost Control Manager for Owens-Corning Inc. in Huntingdon, is instructing a course in Financial Management. Originally from Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, Mr. Roth has received a B.S. in Management Sciences from Penn State University and an MBA in Finance from Carnegie-Mellon University. Mr. Roth presently resides in Huntingdon.

When asked why he took the job, Mr. Roth said, "I wanted to see what it was like to teach". Mr. Nelson, apparently full of aspirations, said, "I would like to facilitate the thinking of the class. I want them to think about the subject matter and apply it to today's world."

Juniata students celebrated the holiday season by holding parties in numerous dorms on campus. Dave Shenberger, Nancy Gionlin and JoAnn Russell attended a party sponsored by Tussey-Terrace dorms.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Jeff Boulton

We are now in the part of the academic year in which the peak of boredom will occur for most Juniata students. All those Christmas parties of scale went on last weekend's agenda, and this week is thoroughly designated for study and recuperation.

Over in East Houses, the inhabitants spent both Friday and Saturday evenings wandering about from tower to tower in search of a good party. Almost every apartment had a party, so there were never enough people in any one apartment to constitute a "good party," so after a quarter of an hour or so it was time to move on to see how boring the next party was. It is my own secret suspicion that before leaving their own apartments, each East Houses person had already decided which party would be "good." In that case, everyone actually hoped the other parties would be boring, because wouldn't it be a drag to leave a good party?

After the evening reached its peak, they finally ended up each one at the party he really wanted to attend, after having fulfilled all social obligations to acceptable levels.

The Cloister was definitely a different story. One of the main difference between them and East Houses was probably the types and strength of the beverages. On Sunday morning an inhabitant of East Houses found a nearly full bottle of vermouth lying on the ground outside his tower. He promptly retrieved it and dropped it into his waste basket. The same morning (though much later) somebody trudged blinkingly from the Cloister's Wing. He spied a bottle of Ripple on the embankment by Oller Hall. He made his way gradually across the lawn through the nearly crippling daylight, thanking his lucky stars that it was heavily overcast. There were only a few drops in the bottle, but this burnout Zipster tipped the bottle so that anything left inside would dampen his mouth. Feeling slightly better, he smashed the bottle against the wall of Oller and walked back to his room in the Arch.

This week was, for many, the beginning of the winter doldrums at Juniata. Of course, everyone will get together to discuss their family scenes and to exhibit their new toys, but it should be generally as dead as any other.

I do not mean to say that there are no events planned; nothing could be further from the truth. There are special committees who go all out to invent reasons to have fun here during the winter. There are more ad hoc social functions planned for the winter than for any other term. So why are we currently bracing ourselves for a term so boring that we're complaining about it already?

A large portion of the answer to this question may very well lie in the general nature of the climatic patterns for our geographic region (that means: We're gonna get a lotta crummy weather around here soon). Many students will find themselves dashing straight to and from classes and dinner without stopping to talk to anyone. They will voluntarily stay indoors when given a chance. Even if they have cars, they won't go downtown for practically no reason because it will take too long to warm up the car.

Another reason for the upcoming inevitable period of boredom may be that some student could be tiring of hanging around with the same people all the time. The cold weather will give them an excuse different aid, benefits, or sanctions. It may not have different rules for male and female students.

* Recruitment: Schools that recruit students must do so in a manner that does not favor one sex. They may not recruit exclusively or primarily from single-sexed schools or schools at which students predominantly are of one sex, if the effect of this practice discriminates in their overall recruitment effort.

* Scholarships and Financial Aid: Although a school may administer single-sexed scholarships from outside sources, it must insure that reasonable opportunities for similar studies are made available to the other sex and that the overall effect of such awards is not discriminatory. Awards — financial aid, scholarships, prizes, and fellowships — issued by the school itself must be distributed in a non-discriminatory manner. These awards would include graduate student aid such as teaching fellowships and research assistantships. In the area of athletic scholarships, an institution must provide "reasonable opportunities" for women and men to receive financial aid "in proportion to the number of students of each sex participating" in intercollegiate athletics.

* Housing: Schools may separate men and women in housing and may require that students live in university sponsored dormitories. The housing rules must apply equally to both sexes. For example, if a school requires women to live on campus or to meet a midnight curfew, the rule must also apply to men. A school must make available comparable housing for men and women. If apartments are made available to one sex, they must be available to the other sex as well. Overall, a school must insure that housing as a whole is proportionate in quantity for students of both sexes.

* Health Benefits: Schools must provide comparable health benefits to their male and female students. A school is under no obligation to offer full health services, but if it does offer such care, it must provide gynecological services. Health insurance offered by the institution also must be non-discriminatory.

* Athletics: Title IX prohibitions on sex discrimination extend to athletics, and are singled out for special treatment. Where selection to a sports team is competitive, a school may have separate teams. Nevertheless, the overall program must provide "equal opportunity" to both sexes. The regulations on sports have been the subject of the greatest controversy of Title IX, and HEW has been reluctant to challenge schools' athletic programs. Consequently in many schools, programs continue to have the same inequities they have had for decades.

* Compliance: Under the regulations, every school must designate an individual responsible for compliance with Title IX. Further, it must establish a complaint and grievance procedure. If a student believes a violation has occurred, this compliance officer is the person to see. Many schools have made dramatic policy changes through the internal grievance procedure.

Editor, The Juniatian,

Because I felt that this year's Will Judy lecturer, art historian Leo Steinberg, was among the best I have heard in this series, I cannot leave the questions raised in the letters to the editor in The Juniatian of December 6, 1979 unanswered.

Juniata College's strength as an educational institution lies in the fact that its students are challenged to the limits of their intelligence. For this reason, and because Juniata is committed to liberal arts, I believe that neither the topic nor the level of the lecture was, as William Beard says, inappropriate "to the nature of the intelligence of the typical Juniata student."

I agree with Jack Troy that Prof. Steinberg's lecture could have been improved if it were aimed at the ears of listeners rather than the eyes of readers. It bothers me, however, when Prof. Troy minimizes the importance of the intellect in experiencing Michelangelo's painting, The Last Judgement. It is important to note that Dr. Steinberg's lecture was aimed at observers, whose object is understanding; not at artists, whose object is expression.

The composer Aaron Copland has suggested that a work of art appeals to our senses, to our emotions, and to our intellect. Works which appeal sensually and emotionally do as Prof. Troy says, "get . . . juices flowing" and clobber me with their power. (I also believe, as Prof. Troy implies, that, as one can only fully experience a musical work in a live performance, one can only fully experience The Last Judgement by observing it from inside the Sistine Chapel in Rome. Let me be the first to sign up for the Logic and Language field trip to Rome for that purpose.) I do not believe, however, that intellectual involvement in a work undermines one's sensual or emotional responses.

In some cases, an intellectual analysis of a work can intensify emotional and sensual responses to it. In my first year of conservatory study, I took a required form and analysis course in which we performers were forced to look at musical works from the point of view of the listener rather than the creator. One of the ways we did this was by learning to make mental analytical diagrams of musical works not unlike Prof. Steinberg's diagonals. At first, I was quite bothered by this technique because I felt this way of listening distracted me from my sensual and emotional responses to the music. In those days I knew I was in danger of being branded a musical heretic because the music of J.S. Bach, every musician's favorite composer, bored me. My emotional responses to Bach paled in comparison to my responses to Brahms or Tchaikovsky. I applied my newly learned analytical listening techniques to Bach's Preludes and Fugues and found a new world of listening experience. Each discovery of an intellectual subtley in the music elicited in me a deeper emotional response. I wanted to listen to each work over and over because I kept discovering more with each hearing.

My reaction to Michelangelo's The Last Judgement has always been somewhat confused because I could never see the rationality in the work to which art historians continually refer. I particularly felt that a rational system should become evident in the work because I had discovered rationality in musical works of Michelangelo's contemporaries, Palestrina, who was a member of the Sistine Chapel Choir, and

Ski Association Offers Discounts

If you think the only places that attract thousands of college students are the sunny beaches of Ft. Lauderdale and Daytona Beach, guess again. In recent years the powdery snow of the Student Ski Association's College Ski Vacations has been almost as popular a place to get together as Florida.

Last winter and spring over 5,000 students from hundreds of colleges trekked to SSA's carnivals at major ski resorts in the East, Midwest and Rocky Mountains. Priced to fit a student's budget, SSA's College Ski Vacations include first class lodging or condominiums, lift tickets and a full schedule of activities. Most trips also offer a low-cost breakfast and dinner plan, with meals served in the student's own lodge.

by Amy Powell

Pavlov's dog is not the only one conditioned to the sounds of bells. While few of us would be accused of salivating at the sound of the tone, many of us have been known to get that old familiar "antsy" feeling as that "five minutes of" alarm rings throughout Good Hall. This one little bell causes most Juniata students to put on their coats and close up their books as well as their minds. Just think, this one little bell controls how long we allow ourselves to learn . . . just think. . . . Doesn't seem very rational, does it? Once again Juniata students are kept company by dogs and other lower(?) animals.

But where is Pavlov's dog without Pavlov? Believe it or not, there are many "Pavlovians" on campus. The food service must be recognized for being one. Yes, our own little food service has single-handedly conditioned the majority of us on campus. There are very few who do not emit a gutteral grunt of disgust as they pass by the selection of imaginative entrees. This is all a product of hard work, consistency and dedication on the part of the food service. It is not easy to condition the stomachs of 1,200 people into nausea. Let's give credit where credit is due.

Unfortunately, there are drawbacks to every scientific inquiry, and "Pavlovians" are not exempt from this. The food service is finding out that they have conditioned the campus so well that no matter how good the entrees are, a typical J.C. student still emits groans of despair. The majority on campus cannot seem to shake that conditioned response. We have lost any appreciation for the occasional good meal in Baker Refectory.

Pavlovian conditioning does not end in Good Hall, nor does it end in the dining hall. It goes on all the time on the Juniata Campus — only masked by different facades. The trick is to find out what's being conditioned and do something about it. Maybe that's what college is all about????????

Programming Begins

Women's programming will again be in full swing on the Juniata College campus this year. The Women's Organization is planning many activities for the upcoming winter and spring terms. Seminars, speakers, coffeehouses, radio shows, and camping trips are being planned.

The goal of the program is to help prepare Juniata women to deal with women's concerns, such as careers, families, marriage and lifestyle.

The women's organization is presently creating a survey to send to all Juniata women in the hopes of finding out what women want on campus. All women are urged to fill out the survey and return it as soon as possible. The information from the survey will be used in the creation and design of the women's programming. Anyone wishing to work with the women's program should contact Patti Cook, Box 30 or at 643-0777.

Juniata students gathered together to ring in the holiday spirit at last week's Madrigal Dinner.

Students Celebrate the Season

by Heather MacCrindle

Baker Refectory echoed strains of the Juniata Brass Ensemble as college students decked out in three-piece suits and winter gowns arrived at 6:00 sharp on December 14 to experience the annual Madrigal Dinner. Experience is the right word for it, for as a wide-eyed freshman myself, the whole night held the newness of what a Juniata Christmas is like.

Searching eagerly for table 39, we stood impatiently through Marj Porter's Welcome and felt closeness grow between us as we bowed our heads with Andy Murray in prayer. The Wassail toast to friendship by Mike Ford was one of the highlights of the evening before we sat down to our Chicken Cordon Blue dinner, featuring red and green bread.

Clinking forks and knives were all that was heard until hungers subsided and the Madrigal Players, directed by Bruce Hirsch, began their concert, inviting us all to the festivities of the evening in "Masters In This Hall." After making a big hit with their Spanish Christmas carols the choir turned the program over to the J.C. Four, Mike Ford, David Miller, Craig Greusel, and Jay Hinish who added a barbershop quartet touch to some favorite Christmas carols.

For any freshman, however, the total impact and meaning of Juniata's unique Madrigal Dinner was felt as the evening came to a close. The choir lead the entire dining hall in carol singing as Andy Murray began the Passing of the Light. Flickering with the glow of Christmas candles, Baker Refectory was in a hushed darkness while Juniata celebrated Christmas together with the singing of "Silent Night."

to drop out of contact with some and get acquainted with others, especially with those who live in the same dormitory. This may not take place in the Cloister (where they all know each other already anyway) or in East Houses (where they have already picked out their friends), but as a general standard, all students will probably become more a part of their own dorms' lifestyles than they are now, until six weeks after Punxsutawney Phil is coaxed out of his hole to see his shadow on February 2.

There is, however, one possible event which could bring life to an otherwise dull January weekend. It's going to be a big deal in any case, but it will be a major event on the Juniata campus should the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Philadelphia Eagles be fortunate enough to play in Pasadena for the Super Bore. It's pretty poor when something like a sporting event can become such an influence upon our lives; but then again, what else are we going to be doing on Super Bore Sunday?

I hate to burn you all out, but the game will be a completely dull exhibition — the Eagles haven't got a chance to even keep it close. But at least we can hope for something exciting this winter, if we're unreasonably optimistic!

CO's Meet

by John W. George

The local affiliation of the Conscientious Objectors (CO) met in Tote this past Monday, December 10, at 7:30. The meeting gave students a chance to voice their opinions in a seminar-like manner. The CO's are a group of people who, on the basis of their moral principles, refuse to bear arms or participate in military service. But, by no means, does this mean that they are total pacifists. A CO conceivably could kill in self-defense or if unjustly provoked, but there exist some who believe that sometimes it is necessary and right for him or her to participate in war, although he or she might be strongly opposed to a particular war on the basis of deeply held religious or moral beliefs. Under the present draft law, this "selective objector" is not eligible for the CO classification.

To register your opposition to war with a federally authorized agency, contact the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors, P.O. Box 15796, Philadelphia, PA. 19103. On campus, contact Lucy Breslin. After the holidays, another meeting will be held to further discuss a subject which should concern us all.

by Anita Moore

Just twenty minutes from campus is a small restaurant called The Farmers Table where students and their company can enjoy a good meal for a fair price.

The menu contains the usual variety of foods in dinners, steaks, seafoods, sandwiches, beverages and desserts. Dinners, including veal steak, porkchops, peppersteaks, ham and chicken are in the four and five dollar range. You have the choice of four potatoes, two vegetables, and four salads. The three types of steak offered cost seven and eight dollars with the same variety of side dishes. For under two dollars you can buy the restaurant's specials. "The Country Boy" is their sausage sandwich along with the grilled ham and cheese and the ham and egg on whole wheat, "The Farmers Wife" and "The Farmers Daughter". There are burgers and hotdogs and many other sandwichs for under a dollar. The Farmers Table offers four types of hot sandwich meals for $3.15. The dessert menu mainly consists of ice creams and pies.

One member of the party, Chris Corry, tried the breaded shrimp and found it appetizing although it was a small serving. She sampled the french fries which are "cut when you order" and described them as delicious. She also enjoyed the chunky applesauce and the vegetable soup. She was delighted to eat vegetable soup without whole stewed tomatoes like those found in cafeteria soup!

Heather MacCrindle ordered the swiss steak and commented on it's tenderness and the abundance of spicy filling and sweet potatoes. She mentioned that it had a lot of fat but was still well pleased to have a real piece of meat and not another one of food services all purpose meat patties. Heather also tried the sugar-free, non-fat milkshake and described it as flavorful, tasting like strawberry milk.

I sampled the porterhouse steak — although it was tender, it's flavor was undistinctive.

The side orders of fruit salad and creamed corn were non-descript and were called "Baker Refectory Specials." The homemade bread and pies were excellent but Chris mentioned that her cherry pie was still "not as good as her mom's!"

The warm atmosphere was accented by the fire in the fire place. The interior is done in red and gold with farmhouse windows and curtains. There are many country pictures and antiques about the small dining area. The outside of the building is done in barn siding with a rail porch and could easily be mistaken for a farm house. The handmade Christmas decorations added to the restaurant's charm. We enjoyed listening to the John Denver Christmas Album as we sat beside the pine Christmas tree which had real gifts underneath it. Beside the dining room is a special area with booths and a snack bar.

The waitress was courteous and attentive and gave us a little background on The Farmers Table. It is owned by a Mrs. McGraw who lives next door to the restaurant. It has been open for one year and is fifteen miles from Juniata. The Farmers Table is located in McAleveys Fort, along Rt. 26 between Huntingdon and State College and is open Monday through Saturday, 8:00 to 8:00 and Sundays 12:00 to 8:00. They accept Visa and Mastercharge and reservations are not required.

The three found the meal to be quite filling and would recommend it to any one seeking a quiet meal off-campus.

New Courses Deal With Stress

Stress, an emotional reaction which has a variety of origins, is an affliction suffered to some extent by all Americans.

But while some persons cope rather easily with the tensions and stresses in their lives, others are not so fortunate.

Persons who are unable to effectively cope with stress often suffer from the physical effects of smoking too much, over-eating, alcoholism, high blood pressure, family breakups and a myriad of other stress-induced physical problems.

Soon, Lewistown-area residents interested in helping others, or who are suffering from stress themselves, will be able to take advantage of a program of study intended specifically to help persons cope with tension and stress.

A special course in clinical sociology, designed to help persons identify and manage sources of stress, is set to begin after the holidays at the Lewistown Community Mental Health Center on Green Street.

Offered under the auspices of Juniata College's Continuing Education Program, the course will meet at the Center on 10 consecutive Wednesdays, beginning Jan. 9, from 7-9:30 p.m. Dr. Duane F. Stroman, Juniata professor of sociology and chairman of the department, will conduct the course, which is offered for two credits.

"Stress, which almost all of us experience to some degree, can be very dangerous to a person's mental and physical health," says Dr. Stroman, adding that "this is especially true for persons who constantly suffer a high level of stress and who do not know how to control it, or the symptoms it produces."

One of these symptoms, he notes, is high blood pressure, an affliction medical doctors often link directly to high levels of stress and tension.

To control stress, Dr. Stroman says that the first step is to identify its source.

"During the course, we will focus on identifying the sources of stress, which are both work-related and socially-related. Work related stress often stems from heavy work loads, conflicting demands of supervisors, office politics and a sense of a personal lack of fulfillment.

"The social origins of stress," he continues, "include family conflicts and a person's relationship — or lack of relationship — to others in the community."

Dr. Stroman adds that during the 10-week course, participants will examine various methods of coping with stress, including treatment in mental health clinics and treatment through self-analysis.

"Often, a person can effectively deal with stress — even high levels of stress — through a program of self analysis," Dr. Stroman explains. "For example, learning to look for the positive, rather than the negative, aspects of a given situation can be very beneficial, as can learning to use one's time more efficiently.

"Also, establishing values and priorities is helpful, and during the course, we will also consider the role of physical exercise, diet, rest, meditation and numerous other factors that can be important in bringing stress under control," the sociology professor says.

The course, as are all credit courses offered through Juniata's Continuing Education Program, is open to all area residents who have graduated from high school. Neither a formal degree application nor a transcript of previous work is required for admission.

Pre-registration for the course must be completed by Jan. 2, and persons desiring application forms and more information about the course may contact Dr. Stroman by writing to him at Box 657,

ACN Survey

by John W. George

Friday, December 7, the All Class Night (ACN) Steering committee convened in the Blue Room to further discuss the upcoming ACN. There has been pressure from the administration to "clean up its act" or else be canceled altogether. In the past, ACN, usually held in March, has been noted for its vulgarity and destructive activities.

Before the meeting it was resolved that a questionaire would be distributed by Dr. Stroman's survey class. This survey will be handed out to the students during this week, before the holidays. As many students as possible will be asked to express their views on ACN. The next meeting of the steering committee will be the first Friday after classes start in the Blue Room at 3:00 p.m.

Viewpoint

by Hilaire Veith

It's that time of year again. You know, when sleigh bells ring, and cash registers ping, and all the world is happy, or should be, because it's Christmas!

It seems you're never too old, or too hip, to enjoy Christmas. Even here at Juniata, though lacking the frantic hustle-bustle of Christmas shopping I'm used to in Philadelphia, I notice the spirit is all around. It's evident in the Christmas lights twinkling merrily in the windows of Sherwood Dorm, the consistent sounds of rock and roll that permeate the dorms replaced by Christmas carols, the evergreen trees minus numerous branches, and the surprise gifts placed in students' rooms by an unknown "secret Santa".

I have always loved Christmas, and the antics that pervade our house when December finally rolls around. Every year my mother would proclaim her usual, "Well, there's not going to be any Christmas this year," citing numerous reasons such as no money, no money, and no money, as being the cause. Yet, when morning came, and the many presents with it, we kids knew she had either robbed a bank, or "Yes, Virginia, there really is a Santa Claus."

Then, of course, there's the selection of the Christmas tree. A trivial matter you might think, but in our house a major operation. Every tree must be perused thoroughly for bald spots, size, color, and, of course, all of us downgrade the others' choices because each of us wants to be the discoverer of the "perfect" tree. We all have a good time decorating it when its finally home, but it doesn't really matter because once we're finished my brother Jack takes it all apart and does it again himself the "right way".

Instances like these are what make Christmas special for me, and yet I know some people who find it a depressing time. I can understand this in a sense. If you're an unhappy person, and all around you see people getting a great deal of enjoyment out of decorating a Christmas tree, and becoming in debt by charging too many Christmas presents, I guess it might be a bit hard to take. After all, who wants to be surrounded by ecstatically merry people who've all caught the Christmas spirit when you're miserable. I would only suggest that they try to understand why people love Christmas so much, and if one can see the real reasons behind this "reckless spending" and "ridiculous merriment" maybe Christmas would become a much more pleasant time for them.

But I don't really have these reasons. I've told about why Christmas is special to me but what could I say that would make it special to everyone? If I said we should all be happy at Christmas time because it is the commemoration of Christ's birth, I would probably be sneered at by many people. If I said, we should all be happy because its a time for giving and expressing our love, the cynics would laugh and say its just a time for department stores to get rich, and shoppers to get poor. And what about the people, especially children, who won't be having any kind of Christmas. No tree, no presents, no illusions of grandeur. If I said Christmas is a special time for all to share in the love and generosity of Christ, would they feel he had been generous to them?

Let me say this. Yesterday, while Christmas decorating with two of my roommates I heard on the radio not less than ten instances of people who had been killed over the weekend in traffic accidents. Following that was a news bulletin on the situation concerning the hostages in Iran. It was a sobering experience, and one I hope never to forget. The one greatest gift, more important than anything to be found under a Christmas tree, and one that no other has a right to govern, has already been given to us. Life.

Continuing Education Program Offers Credit Courses

Beginning after the holidays, Juniata College will offer its winter selection of credit and non-credit continuing education courses to area residents.

The five credit and seven non-credit courses are intended to improve job-related knowledge and skills and to enrich and expand personal horizons.

"Juniata's Continuing Education Program is open to all area residents, and neither a formal degree application nor a transcript of previous work is required for admission," comments Dr. Duane F. Stroman, continuing education director.

He adds that no requirements exist for taking non-credit courses, and that credit continuing education courses are open to all area residents who have graduated from high school.

Pre-registration for the credit offerings must be completed by Jan. 2, while the pre-registration deadlines for the non-credit courses are one week before the courses begin.

The credit courses are scheduled to begin the week of Jan. 7.

"Principles of Management" will be taught by James Donaldson, assistant professor of economics and business administration. Part of a two-year, six-course sequence in Juniata's Certificate Program in Management, this course will meet on ten consecutive Mondays, beginning Jan. 7, from 7-9:30 p.m. on the Juniata campus.

Also part of the Program in Management is "Financial Accounting," which will be offered at Everett High School on 10 consecutive Mondays, beginning Jan. 7, from 6:30-9 p.m. The instructor is Edward Seager, a Bedford County CPA.

Designed primarily for supervisors and potential supervisors in business and industry, the Certificate Program in Management includes 4 additional courses, to be offered in future sessions: "Elements of Economics"; "Managerial Accounting"; "Dynamics of Supervision"; and "Business Law." A certificate of the College will be awarded after the successful completion of the six two-credit hour courses.

"Archaeology and the Bible," to be taught by George Whipple, will meet on 10 consecutive Tuesdays, beginning Jan. 8, from 7:30-10 p.m. on the Juniata campus. This course will deal with the relationship of historical narratives and stories of the Bible to archaeological findings.

"Clinical Sociology," to be offered at the Community Mental Health Center in Lewistown, will be taught by Dr. Duane Stroman, professor of sociology. The class will meet for 10 weeks on Wednesdays, beginning Jan. 9, from 7-9:30 p.m.

Jack G. Troy, assistant professor of art, will teach "Introduction to Ceramics" from 7-10 p.m. on 10 consecutive Mondays, beginning Jan. 7. While all the previously mentioned credit offerings will be worth two credit-hours each, "Introduction to Ceramics" can be taken for three credit-hours if additional laboratory work is done.

A fee of $130 will cover the cost of instruction for each of the credit courses.

The seven non-credit courses being offered this winter represent a wide range of interests, from real estate to dog obedience classes.

"Real Estate Sales," the second course in Juniata's newly-developed Real Estate Program — which is a multi-course program approved by the Pennsylvania Real Estate Commission — will be offered 10 consecutive Mondays, beginning Jan. 7.

Taught by Jack Rawlings, an Altoona real estate broker, the class will meet from 6:30-9:30 p.m. on the Juniata campus.

Sandy McBride, associate professor of art, will teach "Introduction to Photography," beginning Jan. 8. The class will meet in Juniata's Shoemaker Galleries on 10 Tuesdays from 7-9 p.m.

A three-session program in "How to Finance Your Child's Higher Education" will be led by Ken Grugel, director of financial aid at Juniata. Beginning Jan. 7, the class will meet at Juniata on Mondays from 7-8:15 p.m.

Instructors Janet Lewis and Anne Reynolds will offer a course in "Basic Dog Obedience" on 10 consecutive Sundays, from 1-2 p.m. Beginning Jan. 6, the class will meet at Juniata's Women's Gymnasium. A preliminary organizational meeting, without pets, is scheduled for Good Hall on Jan. 3 at 7:30 p.m.

Thomas Nolan, professor of economics, will teach "How to Prepare Your Personal Income Tax Forms." Scheduled for three Wednesdays from 7-9 p.m., the class will begin Feb. 6.

"How Do I Say It in French?" will cover the basics of the French language. Taught by Dr. Cornelis Frijters, professor of French and Linguistics, the class will meet on campus from 7-9 p.m. on 10 consecutive Mondays, beginning Jan. 7.

Brochures describing Juniata's Continuing Education Program in greater detail have been distributed throughout the area and to numerous local corporations.

In addition, persons desiring more information about course descriptions, pre-registration and costs may contact Dr. Stroman by writing to him at Box 657, or by telephoning him at 814-643-4310, extension 11.

Since enrollment in many of the courses is limited to a specific number of students, Dr. Stroman urges interested persons to pre-register for the course or courses of their choice at their earliest convenience.

equipment rentals make the carnivals popular with beginning and intermediate skiers. Both the group ski lessons and numerous activities make it easy to meet new people and make friends. Every day there are many activities to choose from: Welcome parties and all college mixers, dances to live bands and discos, fun races and a College NASTAR Race to test a student's improvement.

For the 1979-80 season, the Student Ski Association is offering trips to Stowe, Mount Snow and Bromley/Stratton/Magic Mountain, Vermont for $99 to $119 and to the Mt. Washington Valley, N.H. for $99 for five days of skiing in January. In the Midwest there are weekend trips to major ski areas. Week-long trips to Steamboat, Winter Park and Copper Mountain are offered from December through April from $133.

According to SSA Director Kim Chaffee, "The popularity of our carnivals is in large part due to our removing the normal hassles associated with skiing. We pick well known resorts, clean comfortable lodges or condominiums and take care of all the details. Students can come solo or with friends. SSA will find roommates for those who need them. Through volume purchasing power, we can cut costs almost in half, which is very important to college students. For those without cars, we have chartered busses from major cities that go directly to our lodges. We can book low cost air or train transportation through our official travel agencies.

For more information write the Student Ski Association, 1200 Post Road East, Westport, Conn. 06880 or 2256 N. Clark St., Chicago, IL 60614. The Student Ski Association is sponsored by Schlitz Beer.

Darkroom Club Launched

Amateur photographers have a new source to advance their darkroom techniques.

Braun North America, a division of the Gillette Company, has launched the Paterson Darkroom Club. A membership fee is $5 for one year, or $8.50 for two years.

A member receives a kit of useful information: a layout for a darkroom, a quarterly publication, written by professional photographers, and a "how-to" book on the darkroom.

There are some other useful items, such as a darkroom doorknob sign to advise if one can enter the room, or should wait. Identification labels for chemicals and trays are also included in the kit. But one of the more valuable items is a membership card which provides a 10% rebate on darkroom merchandise bought at a photo store.

Monteverdi, whose music has often been compared to Michelangelo's art.

Dr. Steinberg's lecture helped me to discover the rationality in The Last Judgement. At the same time that the colors in this work appeal to my senses and its facial expressions appeal to my emotions, the Steinbergian diagonals allow me to experience it intellectually by helping me to discover relationships between sections of the work. The fact that it is possible that Michelangelo was not conscious of his own use of these diagonals is irrelevant. These diagonals enhance my understanding as an observer; not Michelangelo's as creator.

I have myself slept through many scholarly art lectures, but I found myself exhilarated at the end of Dr. Steinberg's lecture. I had to concentrate hard to understand his vocabulary and follow his reasoning, but it was worth the effort to improve my understanding of a great artwork. Dr. Steinberg's lecture was a virtuoso scholarly performance. I hope that this situation does indeed recur in future Will Judy Lectures.

Sincerely,
Ibrook Tower

Holiday Bowls!

Over the upcoming break, the Juniatian decided to give you a chance to win $25 in our 'bowls' poll. All you have to do is get more games right than the Sports editors do. In the event of a tie, we ask you to pick who you think will be the NCAA National Champion and the total amount of points the champs will score on the first of the year. Our picks are: Roh Morris — Oklahoma, Ohio St., Houston, Alabama, Purdue, Clemson, Michigan, Pittsburgh, LSU, Tulane, Texas, Brigham Young, Oklahoma with 35 points; Pat Conroy — Oklahoma, USC, Houston, Alabama, Purdue, Clemson, Michigan, Pittsburgh, LSU, Penn St., Texas, Brigham Young, Alabama with 30 points.

Football Contest Entry Form

Juniatian Football Contest Rules:

1. The object is to select the winners of the ten games to be played over the next weekend.
2. To make a selection merely circle the teams you pick to win. If you want to predict a tie circle both teams.
3. Each contestant is permitted only one entry per week.
4. The Juniatian will award a $10.00 prize. To win, a contestant must predict the highest number of winning teams, and this prediction must tie or surpass all of the Juniatian sports editors. In the event of a tie among contestants and/or sports editors for the highest winning team count, the total points estimates will be used as a tiebreaker. If a tie exists the prize money will be evenly distributed to the winners.
5. All entries must be submitted by noon Saturday. The entry boxes are located in the hallway by the Juniatian Office or in the Ellis Hall lobby.
6. The contest is open to all readers of the Juniatian except those directly associated with the Juniatian.

The Ultimate Game

by Roh Morris

The season is over, the gladiators chosen. Through sixteen weeks the gridirons, plastic or real, have hosted the clashes of 28 Pro Football teams, and on a cold weekend in December, eighteen of them were forced into their annual retirement. The remainder still hold the lease, the shot at the golden ring, what is simply referred to as the Super Bowl.

Yet even in this aggregate of football's best, there are the lucky and the deserving, the new and the old, the conservative and the bold, and in the end the ones who tried and the ones who made it. The final two are showered with adulation and praise, their victories serving as signs of hometown superiority. Something extra is added when the two teams that meet also happen to be natural rivals. RIVALRY! That encompassing description of emotions, that in reality are too difficult to explain. It is that intangible force that permits the impossible, transcending the limits to bring about the ultimate in either team. It becomes the silent cheer that motivates, the drug that heightens every individual confrontation. And when this rivalry occurs in the final matchup, the meaning of champion changes. Then certainly what better way to have a Super Bowl than to have two rivals meet.

Call it nostalgic, or perhaps a dream, but the final two will just have to be Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. The champ and the upstart, the reputed and the unknown, the game to end all games.

The Pittsburgh Steelers, TIME Magazine's team of the decade, are without doubt the most talented team, according to fans, writers, and players. However, being in the Super Bowl insures that your opponent is just as talented, and the outcome will depend on some other factor. Admittedly, the Steelers led the league in turnovers, perhaps a sign of overconfidence, or of complacency? Earlier in the season, the two teams met and the Eagles had come out on top of a 17-14 score.

The Philadelphia Eagles, a surprise to some, certainly not to Philadelphia fans, have beaten some of the best and are eager to prove it was without any luck. Unheralded, but undaunted, they proved themselves over and over and could easily defeat the rest of the NFC to wind up in Pasadena, come January.

What better rivals? At opposite ends of the state the cities have been marked with opposite reputations, and use their athletic teams to vindicate their pride. Surely the Pirates are proud to win the World Series, but coming at the expense of the Phillies makes it all the sweeter. The entire state of Pennsylvania should declare a holiday the day after the Super Bowl to applaud the champions. In the true sense of the word, it would be a super Super Bowl.

To pick a winner would be blasphemous, nevertheless this writer chooses the Steelers to begin the Eighties, exactly the way they ended it.

Grapplers Remain Undefeated

by Doug Williams

The Juniata College wrestling team remained undefeated after taking all three contests in a "triple dual" meet last Wednesday. The wins left the Indians 5-0 in the season.

Juniata took on the Penn State-Dubois Dukes, the Penn State-Altoona Cougars, and the J.V. from Division II Shippensburg.

Although the whole team performed well throughout it was the lower weights that insured the three victories for the Indians. Bob Gay led the attack with three falls in three matches and six other wrestlers were undefeated on the night.

In the first match against Penn State-Dubois, the Indians recorded four pins and lost only two bouts in coasting to a 39-7 victory. Gay, Tom Swavely, Joel Beach, and Dan Jendrzijewski pinned their opponents to aid the cause.

Next, the Indians faced the Cougars of Penn State-Altoona. With Gay and Rob Funk providing pins, and six of the first seven wrestlers winning their contests, the Indians had enough to win 24-21. The score was a little misleading as six of Altoona's points came on a forfeit by Juniata's heavyweight.

The last match figured to be the toughest as Shippensburg was also undefeated. The Raiders started off with an unusual strategy. They forfeited the first match and after Gay got his third pin of the night, Shippensburg forfeited again. This gave the Indians an early 18-0 lead.

Then Funk scored a 10-5 decision and Joe Paskill followed with an easy 4-0 decision. This put Juniata ahead 24-0. They needed all their points however, as the Raiders won every remaining match and it was up to Brown at 190 and Jendrzejewski to keep from being pinned to insure an Indian win. They did, and the final total was 24-18.

Overall, some of Juniata's top wrestlers are Paskill who at 8-0 is the only undefeated Indian, Gay who leads in falls with four and is 8-2, Funk with a 7-1 mark and two pins, and Todd Roadman who is 6-2. Gay also leads in team scoring with 27 for and none against. The Indians are coached by Bill Berrier, also the school's athletic director.

Streak Continues

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Juniata women's varsity basketball team, off to its best start in years, recorded two more convincing victories this past week that told their opponents that JC is a team to be reckoned with this year. After easily defeating St. Francis and surprisingly beating Elizabethtown, the team record stands at 5-0.

On Wednesday, December 12, the Tribe travelled to Loretto to face the Red Flash of St. Francis. The girls played outstanding basketball — they shot 48% from the floor, 64% at the foul line, and above all, the turnovers were down to 13 (the lowest in three years).

The Indians were able to constantly fast break and had built up a 27-15 lead at the half. All twelve team members saw action, with 10 entering the scoring column. Julie George led all scorers with 15 points in the 79-30 onslaught, followed by Nancy Zinkham with 14.

Two records fell in the contest as well. The 49 point winning margin was the largest in JC's history and 79 points was the most scored in an away game.

On Saturday night, the Tribe faced the Blue Jays of Elizabethtown in the preliminary to the men's contest. After losing last year to the division winner by 30 points, JC was not the favored team.

The Indians surprised everyone by leading practically from the outset, and took a 7 point lead into the locker room at the half. The Blue Jays attempted to rally, but failed. Julie George once again led the scoring, tallying 22 points in the Tribe victory.

The College Hill Gang will return to the home courts on January 10, when the Bullets of Gettysburg College travel to Memorial Gym. JC will then begin a three game road trip which will include tough MAC rival Scranton.

New Year Coming

by Pat Conrow

Well, 1979 is finally over. Juniata basketball has three weeks to regroup and regain their confidence. For the third and fourth game in a row, the Indians shot under 40% and the results were unavoidably the same. At home against Susquehanna, JC shot 36% and were overtaken by the Crusaders 76-65. Juniata had fewer turnovers (12 to 16), more rebounds (41-39), and more shots (78 to 52). The face that the Indians shot 26 more times than SU and made only one more than they did was the difference. Andy Dwyer and Dave Bender led the Indians in scoring with 25 and 17 points respectively.

Things did not get better. Juniata took their cold shooting to Elizabethtown and met up with some hot shooters. The result: a dismal 33-12 deficit at the end of the first half. E-town shot 74% to JC's 30% in the first half. After intermission, it took the Indians eight minutes to score their first field goal. A couple minutes later the BlueJays were up 49-17 and both the benches had been cleared. The bench did show improvement and played even with E-town the rest of the way for a final score of 67-38. No Indian was in double figures while the Indians shot a horrifying 31% from the field. The BlueJays did "cool down" to 55%.

When it rains, it pours, and the Indians are getting caught without an umbrella. Here's a toast to better luck in the New Year.

Loans Available

by Tammy Helwig

Short of money? Haven't all of us, at one time or another, felt the pinch of a limited money supply dwindling only to be reminded that pay day is weeks off? Now, students can do something about this very real problem — and in a relatively easy manner. During Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays, Student Government will be holding regular office hours which will enable all students to apply for loans of up to $50. These loans are generally for convenience sake, and no interest will be charged. The only students exempt from this privilege will be ones which already have a high bill run up with the college or people who owe money on a loan at the time they apply for another. In other words, you can't apply for a second loan until you've repaid the first.

To get a loan, students should apply during the designated hours. The loan request will then be approved by the president and treasurer of Student Government. Then, on Wednesday afternoon, the applications will be reviewed by Mr. Ken Grugel, Financial Aid Director. If approved, the students will receive a voucher by Thursday in his/her mailbox. The voucher should then be taken to Juniata College is pleased to announce the arrival of the celebrated film maker Frederick Wiseman who will present several lectures plus three of his award-winning documentary films starting Sunday January 20 and continuing through to the next day. All events will be held in Room A100, Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center.

Wiseman to Lecture

At 8:15 p.m. on January 20, Wiseman's "Titicut Follies" will be screened in Alumni Hall. The film, in which Wiseman examines life in a mental institution, will serve as an introduction to him. Juniatians and the public are cordially invited to attend all screenings and lectures.

The following day, January 21, Wiseman will be in a class at 1 p.m. that will be under the direction of Professors Baldino and Vocke. At 3 p.m. Wiseman will lecture about the "History of Non-

by Cathy Creswell

Juniata College, with its competitive atmosphere can place a large amount of stress and pressure on its students. Environments such as these found on campuses like JC provide settings which are ripe for suicide according to Dr. Jay Buchanan.

In the past twenty years suicides in the 15-24 year-old age bracket have increased over 200%. Only people who are 65 years or older are more likely to commit suicide than the teenager or young adult.

Dr. Buchanan, who provides counseling services at Juniata, has compiled a list of some of the most common symptoms of people who are considering suicide. These symptoms are:

1. Fatigue and loss of sleep
2. Sudden loss of appetite
3. Sudden and frequent mood changes
4. Significant decline in school work
5. For smokers there is an increase in smoking
6. Writing lots of letters to friends
7. Increase in drug and alcohol use
8. Giving away of prized possessions

Usually at least four of the above symptoms have been evident in those people who have attempted suicide. Some of the symptoms may be more severe than others.

The most indicative characteristic of a suicidal person is that this individual feels that he is not liked by others and he has no support from the people around him. This person also has the impression that nobody cares what happens to him.

A supportive system is necessary for people in times of extra stress and pressure; everyone needs someone they can talk to. If a person feels that he has no support system it is harder for him to cope with his problems and suicide may become an attractive alternative to him.

Other evidence suggests that a history of suicide in the family tends to increase the possibility of an individual committing suicide. Women attempt suicide more often than men but men are more successful in committing suicide. This is because men use more violent means when attempting suicide.

Dr. Buchanan feels that in a small academic community such as Juniata, in which many of us share common concerns, we should all be concerned about each other. There have been suicide attempts made at Juniata in the past and there is always a chance that another suicide situation could occur.

If there is concern about someone who acts as though he or she may be considering suicide, Dr. Buchanan suggests either direct personal intervention or seeking out professional help from himself.

When talking to anyone who is deeply depressed, point out positive aspects of their life that they are overlooking. Help them to break down their problems into small, manageable ones. Encourage them to think better of

by Heather MacCrindle

Recommended priorities was the topic of discussion January 9 when the Residential Life Committee of Student Government and several senators met with Jack Linetty, Director of Housing and Susan Twombley, concerning Residence Hall Improvements. Jack linetty had prepared a list of proposed dorm improvements and met with the students to discuss which improvements they regarded as most important.

Linetty stressed that these improvements were merely proposals; not all the suggestions will even be considered, for the meeting was merely of a fact-finding purpose. The proposals that were discussed at the meeting would be written up as Special Projects, and then passed on to the Physical Plant for consideration. If approved by the Physical Plant the request is passed on to the Business Office. If the Business Office approves the request the project will finally be funded.

Linetty explained that lounge furniture ordered earlier this year is scheduled to arrive later this month. Which halls will receive the furniture is under consideration. A mat for the lounge of North dorm is another immediate residential improvement.

The lack of washing machines to meet the needs of any one dorm and the frequent breakdowns were also discussed. Linetty suggested contracting for more machines to reduce the workload put on the machines. Both Linetty and the senators agreed the company who provides the machines to the school has been good concerning repairs, but more machines are needed to handle the demand of students.

Ordering new bunk-beds was also considered as a proposed dorm improvement. Linetty hopes that 200 more beds could be purchased by the college this year. A long term project would be to furnish all dorms with bunks. Sherwood and Cloister were considered as top priorities if the bunk beds are purchased.

Discussion was most insistent over the sorry state of Tussey-Terrace Lounge. It was suggested that curtains could be purchased to improve the appearance of the lounge and keep out the cold in the winter.

Students felt that as a public area this lounge greatly needed improvement. Since Tussey

Soviets Veto Iranian Sanctions

United States optimism ended last Sunday night with a Soviet veto of the United States' request for U.N. economic sanctions against Iran over the holding of American hostages. In a 10-2 vote which included two abstentions, the 15 member security council approved the sanctions sought the the United States aimed for the immediate release of the estimated 50 American hostages. China did not participate in the vote and Mexico and Bangladesh abstained. The Soviets and East Germans voted against the imposition of sanctions.

Earlier this week, President Carter warned he will press to move the 1980 summer Olympics from Moscow if Soviet troops remain in Afghanistan. However Afghan leader Babrak Karmal stated the Russian forces will stay until "the danger of aggression" ends.

According to Afghan refugees arriving in Pakistan Sunday, heavy fighting took place outside Kabul between Soviet forces and Moslems.

In a related development, the State Department would not confirm or deny a report that the United States had offered $400 million in military and economic aid to Pakistan to counter the new threat of Russian forces on its western frontier.

Dates set for plays

Juniata College's progressive theatre department — which last year staged the debut production of Tyrone playwright Dan Meckes' "Lightningrod" — will begin a four-day run of one-act plays on Jan. 24.

This year's production will mark the third consecutive year of one-act plays at Juniata. Two years ago, it was "An Evening of One-Act Plays," and last year, it was "Another Evening of One-Act Plays." The 1980 production is titled, appropriately, "Yet Another Evening of One-Act Plays."

Featured this year will be three one-act dramas: Tom Stoppard's "The Real Inspector Hound," Noel Coward's "Ways and Means" and Elaine May's "Not Enough Rope." The plays will be presented on Jan. 24, 25, 26 and 27 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

As in previous years, the entire audience will be seated on the stage in three-quarter round, providing an intimate theatrical experience. Admission, therefore, is limited to approximately 160 persons per evening, and tickets, which specify admission for a particular evening, should be purchased in advance. The price of admission is 50 cents, and tickets are available at the Information Desk in Ellis College Center. The public is cordially invited to attend.

"The Real Inspector Hound," a comedy which spoofs the genre of the British murder mystery, is being directed by D. Bruce Davis, chairman of the speech, theatre and film department and assistant professor of English. The drama questions, in particular, where the borders are between illusions and reality.

Stoppard, the play's author, currently has another of his dramas, "Night and Day," playing on Broadway. He also authored the critically-acclaimed "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead" and "Jumpers."

Coward's "Ways and Means," which is from his collection of plays "Tonight at 8:30," is being directed by Doris P. Goehring, assistant professor of speech and theatre.

Also a comedy, "Ways and Means" portrays a very sophisticated British couple who are embarrassed because of the debts they have incurred. Their honor is saved, but by a chauffeur who embarrasses them further by trying to rob them of something they do not have.

"Not Enough Rope," a "gray comedy with a little bite," is being directed by Dr. Howard H. Crouch, professor of education. It portrays three individuals attempting, without much success, to interact with one another in a flea-bitten boarding house.

Although their story is expressed with comic overtones, on a more serious level the play deals with how people become so engrossed in their own problems that they are unable to reach out to help a neighbor.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

Mike Wallace hopped out of the CBS sound truck as it screeched to a halt in front of Ellis Hall. The newsman was elated to have made his arrival at tiny Juniata College before any of the other reporters from the nationally-renowned TV journal, "60 Minutes." Actually, none of his colleagues was the least bit interested in the penciled note that Wallace had received from one Joe Zippo, a student at Juniata. The note claimed that Zippo had information that would make the Boston University report of two weeks ago look like a bunch of fourth graders picking on a sixth-grade amputee.

As he entered Ellis Hall, he was met with a multiude of confused stares. "Darn it!" he muttered. "I was hoping to remain incognito in this one!"

"It's not really your fault," said a nearby student. "I believe it was those guys behind you with the TV cameras and mikes that blew it."

"Well, I'm looking for Joseph L. Zippo. Do you know him?"

"He might be in the dining room eating," replied the student.

Wallace, followed by his crew, strolled up to the front of the line, and nonchalantly stepped in behind someone. A very bored woman asked him for a student ID card or money, and he gladly paid when he found he could have all the ice cream and soft drinks he wanted.

Once in the serving line, he was spotted by Jeff DeWalt, who would not permit a sound and camera crew inside the Food Service's domain. He drove Wallace away with a hefty bribe and a story about "losing my job." But he did grant Wallace's request of a heaping plateful of ice cream and seven glasses of soda pop. "Come back next year," pleaded DeWalt. "We're planning on maybe having a steak night." Having found out Zippo's room number, Mike and his boys trotted on over to the Cloister to pay him a visit.

Joe's room was a quad, and when the students in the room found out that "60 Minutes" had come to see Zippo, there was a mad panic that lasted several minutes. Wallace heard a screen ripping and (apparently) many things from the room being hurriedly tossed outside.

The reporter effortlessly kicked in the door just as one student was slamming the window down. The other two students seemed to be trying to look normal. "All right, where is he? The public must be informed that you are trying to conceal something!" barked Wallace suspiciously.

The most bookish of the three seemed to have given in to the pressure; he was squirming uncomfortably and sniffling quietly. Reaching into his pocket for the penciled note, Wallace said, "I have a document here . . ."

"I have nothing to do with it!" screamed the bookish one. "Joey does it all by himself, life! I mean, i don't even smoke cigarettes!"

"Where is Mr. Zippo right now?" snapped the famous reporter.

"He's down at the Felonial," drawled a second roomie.

"What's the Felonial?" asked Wallace.

"I don't know!" whimpered the first roommate. "I don't know anything! I just live here! Honest! I . . ."

"It's a social center," said the second roomie.

"It is not! It's a dive, the PITS!" stated the third student. "Joey goes down there every day after lunch, and comes back for breakfast!"

When Wallace finally got to the Felonial, he surmised that Zippo was part of a revolutionary counter-culture, as Joe was seated between a pair of Fidel Castro look-alikes.

As the cameras were set up, Wallace ordered a Martini. The bartender reeled to the liquor shelves in a fit of laughter. After poking half-heartedly through the collection of bottles, he shouted, between violent chuckles, "I'm afraid we're fresh out of vermouth. You want some Ripple instead?"

Zippo slowly came to the realization that he had seen Wallace somewhere before. When shown the penciled note, Joe began to giggle uncontrollably. After a trip to the Men's Room, he began to explain his story.

"Well, i used to be like a Physics major at ol' JC. But the goin' was rough so now i'm takin' Art. But thassa 'nother story. See, when i was studyin', i mean like, i was a Physics nurd. I was even in a secret society of hearty studiers. An' we came up with a way to like make the weather always to be super crummy. Like we figured, if us Physics people hadda always stay inside an' study, so should everybody else!"

"I see," said Wallace with an expression of extreme interest on his face. "And how did this project operate?"

"You mean like, how's it work? Oh, it works purty good. I think maybe they've perfected it this year. The one major drawback is, we could only do it when we're in school. You ever notice how nice the weather is over breaks, and how crummy it was as soon as we came back? I'd say it works purty good."

"I meant to ask the question

PINK FLOYD —
The Wall Columbia 36183

The Wall is the latest release from Pink Floyd since Animals was released in 1977. The Wall is a neatly packaged double album set with the title apparently symbolic of the separation between performer and audience. And even though there are other analogies that can be made as to The Wall's meaning, one important thing remains constant and that is Pink Floyd's ability to produce good music.

Of all the music contained in the LP most songs are rather short, and run both ends of the continuum-from refined rock tunes to futuristic tracks of acoustic pieces. A lot of tracks contain voice overs (a la Wish You Were Here) and orchestral backing, along with an abundance of electronics, always a keystone in the Pink Floyd musical structure. As usual, Roger Waters' lyrics are a main attraction and of course the music itself is incredibly tight.

Pink Floyd is one of the few groups in existence that can constantly change within their musical spectrum and still remain popular with their followers. The Wall as a whole is a musical concept that resorts to styles in the band's pre-Dark Side Of The Moon days, and at the same time are continually experimenting with new styles and sounds. Traces of Relics, Piper at the Gates of Dawn, Meddle, and even Atom Heart Mother are heard throughout the LP, but the band also progresses into a dimension beyond Dark Side Of The Moon, Wish You Were Here, and even Animals.

All in all this latest Pink Floyd album ranks about the same as their previous releases-a worthwhile, completely enjoyable listening experience. One will not be disappointed in Pink Floyd's The Wall despite its double album price. The Wall receives an A minus from Fresh Tracks.

differently. Let me rephrase it: What equipment and methods does this secret society utilize to achieve its goal of undesirable meteorological patterns?"

"You mean like, how's it work?"

"What methods . . ." prompted Wallace.

"Oh yeah. Well uh . . . first of all, we, uh . . . see it was like we started out by, uh . . ." stammered Zippo.

"He's talkin' a buncha dirty boggie doo!" bellowed one of the Castro twins. "He ain't got no idea about it at all. I, on the other hand, happen to know all the details."

"Please, feel free to reveal such vital information, sir. The public is ever-anxious!" declared Wallace.

"No problem. No problem at all. See, them there Russians got what ya call a big, huge electro-magnet. Now, them guys is purty smart. What they aims to do with it is, they wanna turn it on, real slow-like. What happens is, the North Pole ends up in Des Moines, Iowa and the Equator ends up runnin' right smack through Siberia! That's why the weather's so messed up!"

"What do we do now, boss?" asked the cameraman.

"I guess we should follow another lead i have," replied the reporter. "A girl who lives next to Three Mile Island claims she became pregnant as a result of last year's radiation leak . . ."

Out & About

by John George

Louie's Coral Lounge and Italian Restaurant, located on U.S. route 22 west of Huntingdon, offers the traveler and the dining enthusiast a unique opportunity to enjoy good food at reasonable prices, a rare thing for route 22 which specializes in fast food places and greasy truck stops.

Included on the Italian portion of the menu are eight different varieties of spaghetti. Some types of sauce include meatball, mushroom, and chicken. For the choosing there is thin spaghetti and Louie's homemade spaghetti noodles which are especially recommended by Mr. Glenn Beasley, a Juniata student and connoisseur of fine Italian food. The prices of the spaghetti range from $2.75 to $6.00.

Ravioli, Gnocchi, Rigatoni, Veal Scaloppine, Chicken Ala Cacciatora, and Veal Parmigiana are also offered along with Italian lines. The average price of these is about $5.75.

Under the dinners heading are approximately eight different versions of steak, which range from the $4.50 hamburger steak dinner to the 12 oz. fillet mignon. The large 20 oz. porterhouse steak is offered for an incredibly low price of $8.00. A choice of salad and one vegetable also comes with the dinner.

Ms. Moore had the spaghetti and Italian Sausage, and thought for the price ($5.50) the amount presented was very generous. The sauce, although not spiced enough, was rich in taste. There were three large pieces of sausage and the spaghetti was not glued together as often found in Baker Refractory.

Mr. George opted for the Ravioli Special which was unique in that it gave him a pleasing combination of meat, cheese, and noodle, with just the right seasoning that he found thoroughly enjoyable. A fresh salad with quartered tomatoes and your choice of dressing was relished along with the ravioli.

Three choices of lobster and crab plus scallops, oyster, fish, shrimp, and clams can be had singularly or in platter form.

For the light eater, 34 varieties of delectable sandwiches, eggs of several varieties, salads, soups, and side orders are all again offered at an unusually paltry sum. Pizza, either small or large with all the toppings, can also be ordered.

We thought we had struck a gold mine in the drinks department when we saw the list of nine wines, twenty-four mixed drinks, eighteen beers, and seven after dinner cordials, but were disappointed when we tasted the chablis, which was flavorless.

For desert, cake roll, sherbert, spumoni, and New York cheese cake with blueberry, cherry, or strawberry toppings were presented to us. We choose the cake roll and cheese cake with blueberrys. Both were unfresh and they ended an above average meal in a manner that was disappointing.

You would find the atmosphere both interesting and unusual. The dining room provides space for dancing if you enjoy dancing to the sounds of the Inkspots and Conway Twitty. The decor is centered around the taste of the middle aged, which were the only other patrons at the time we were there.

Despite the incorrigible country and western atmosphere, the evening was enjoyable considering the fine food we were served.

Summer Camp Jobs Available

Remember when summers were fun? It was before college, maybe even before high school when you did not have to earn money for next semester. The American Camping Association believes that you can still have fun AND earn money. How? By working in a summer camp. Not possible? The ACA's New York Section runs a free Camp Staff Placement Service that was used by over 125 camp directors throughout the Northeast, from Maine to Pennsylvania, operating private or organizational/agency camps; resident, day and some travel camps. By the start of last summer, over 500 applicants had found camp jobs through the Placement Service.

Directors need qualified responsible staff to teach and supervise activities and skills from land and water sports to creative and performing arts, to environmental studies and wilderness crafts. Leadership opportunities are open for Program Directors, Head Counselors, Unit Leaders and General Counselors. If you enrolled in an appropriate degree program (Physical Education, Social Work, Outdoor Education) you may be able to arrange academic credit for your summer "field work".

All camp salaries depend on age, experience and position. All resident camp offer room and board, use of facilities and ample social outlets. All ACA camps meet Accreditation Standards and those include staff working conditions and training.

To obtain an application and more information, visit your Placement Office or send a stamped, self-addressed business envelope to:

Movies Purchased for Videotape

by Chris Corry

A Billy Joel concert is going to be performed in Ellis College center. A Fleetwood Mac concert, the M.A.S.H. movie, and "A Man for All Seasons" will also be shown on the recently purchased videotape machine. Six more tapes — Carnal Knowledge, The Graduate, High Noon, Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, African Queen, and Patton — are already ordered and on their way. These tapes are purchased jointly by the Library and Juniata Center Board. A group of students, Director of Programming, Wayne Justham, and Library Director Eyman select the tapes.

The films will be shown at several posted times and will be available, given advance notice, for individual viewing.

As soon as possible the Video machine will be moved into what is now the Pinball room. The Pinball machines will be transported to the Green room and the T.V. set will be put back in the Ellis Lounge. Once this is done, a film can be shown on the Video machine and a Football game on the T.V., simultaneously.

Times when very popular T.V. events such as Sports events or movies are scheduled will be reserved to be sure they can be seen on the big screen. It is also possible to tape T.V. events for later viewing.

Increased student input in decisions concerning the Video machine is welcome. Wayne Justham desires "anybody interested in any aspect" to contact him. Suggestions for films are seriously considered. Films may also be rented. Most films are available at $10 to $15 for five days.

The Godfather, The Exorcist, Superman, the original King Kong, Amos and Andy shows, Charlie Chaplin films and many others are under consideration for purchasing.

Wayne Justham foresees no major problems with non-students taking advantage of the Video machine "because we don't advertise what we're doing. We would continue to screen that as much as possible."

Wayne also commented on the distance most students sit from the machine. "They're used to sitting close to the T.V. Quality begins 15 feet back." The machine gives a good picture up to 80 feet away.

"I'm very optimistic about the video program. One can really do a heck of a lot with it," the director of Programming says, "It's mind boggling what we could possibly do."

The recently purchased large screen television will be moved to the room in Ellis that now contains pinball machines. See story this page.

themselves and others around them.

The main cause of suicidal tendencies in college stems from large amounts of stress and pressure which the individual does not know how to handle. Although stress is practically impossible to avoid at college Dr. Buchanan believes that stress should be given a positive outlet.

Inappropriate ways of dealing with stress include the abuse of drugs and alcohol. Dr. Buchanan would like to see more people take out their frustrations from stress in some form of recreation or exercise.

Another way to help eliminate the negative aspects of stress is to be more confident. Don't allow situations or other people to control you. Learn to be assertive and take charge of a situation. The successful students are those who have learned to deal with stress according to Dr. Buchanan.

It is important to remember that we all should feel a sense of responsibility for each other's welfare along with our own. If we can help others and ourselves to deal with stress in a more positive way, everyone will benefit.

Fund Established for Pre-law Students

The Juniata College Board of Trustees has approved the establishment of a $50,000 Memorial Fund in honor of the late C. Jewett Henry, immediate past chairman of Juniata's board and prominent Huntingdon attorney.

Announced by Board Chairman Charles C. Ellis, RCA senior vice president-finance and a 1940 Juniata graduate, the C. Jewett Henry Memorial Fund will be used to establish scholarship assistance for third-year Juniata students who have decided to pursue a career in law.

"It was the board's opinion," says Ellis, "that the establishment of this fund would be a most suitable way to perpetuate the memory of C. Jewett Henry and to remind others of the deep and genuine respect Juniata will always have for this outstanding campus and community leader."

Mr. Henry, who practiced law in Huntingdon for 46 years, served on Juniata's board since 1959, chairing it since 1976. He retired from his position as chairman during the board's spring meeting last May.

A native of Alexandria and a 1929 Juniata graduate, Mr. Henry received his law degree from the University of Pittsburgh and practiced privately in Huntingdon from 1933-46.

From 1946-70, he was a partner in the Huntingdon firm of Henry & Corcelius, formed with A. Lynn Corcelius, a 1938 Juniata graduate. The firm was expanded in 1970 to Henry, Corcelius & Gates, and in 1974 to Henry, Corcelius, Gates & Gill.

He was admitted to practice before the U.S. Supreme Court, was a member of the Pennsylvania and American Bar Associations, and twice served as president of the Huntingdon County Bar Association (1952 to 1966).

Active in church and civic affairs, Mr. Henry was a past president of the J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital Board, treasurer of the Huntingdon Throwing Mills, Inc., Board, and a director of numerous other organizations, including the Penn Central National Bank.

He was a member of the Masons, Odd Fellows, Shriners and Kiwanis, having served as president of the latter group, and was a past Church Council president at St. James.

Persons interested in learning more about the C. Jewett Henry Memorial Fund are cordially invited to request further information from the office of development, Juniata College.

lounge, however is used as the site for many campus parties, any improvements might be considered as useless.

Suggestions were then made to have the student group having a party, held responsible for any damages by having them sign a paper that must meet approval through Wayne Justham's office. It was also suggested that if the lounge on the whole looked better students might respect it more.

Another new possibility of renting the Pink Palace for non-residential living if the dorms are not full was also brought up along with the purchase of the Hess Apartments located at 14 and Washington Streets that will hold 35-40 students.

Other improvements that were rated as "high priority" were the possibilities of buying curtains for Lesher and South Dorms, changing the old locks in South, getting new screens for one dorm per year, and purchasing weather stripping for Lesher to cut down on drafts.

The paving of a parking lot on the east side of Sherwood and the possibility of paving the lot across the street from South.

More suggestions included: repairs on ill-fitting exterior doors; getting names for the outside of dorms similar to Cloister; putting up a new room doors in Cloister and replacing the bathroom doors; purchasing new T.V.s, more ping-pong tables, and newer vacuum cleaners; getting dorm kitchens in working order; paneling the interior of Cloister; purchasing louder fire alarms in North; and possibly installing sprinkler systems in all dorms.

ction Film" and screen his film, High School". It is notable that ur own Professor Hochberg tended the very school that iseman filmed. His visit to uniata will conclude on January with an 8:15 p.m. lecture and reening of his film, "Juvenile ourt."

Wiseman, a Boston law rofessor before becoming a film aker, has won critical acclaim y producing a number of cumentary films, most of which cus upon American institutions.

He is celebrated by critics for veloping what he terms "the ew Documentary," a departure om the traditional "star-film" cumentary in that audience terest is not centered upon one ntral character, nor upon a otagonist who is famous in his vn right. Rather, Wiseman rtrays the process of places, of cial institutions. In his films, the dience views the relationships rather anonymous people to the nolithic social structures herent in actual life.

For example, "Titicut llies" — which was judged best m at the Mannheim ternational Filmweek (1967) and est Film Dealing with the man Condition" at the Festival i Popoli (Florence, 1967) — uses upon the harsh realities of e in a familiar American titution, the mental hospital.

"High School," the first of the o films to be screened on January 21, provides insights into American society via another, if somewhat more familiar, institution.

And, as "Newsweek's" Peter Janssen observes, it too captures some harsh realities: " 'High School' shows no stretching of minds. It does show the overwhelming dreariness of administrators and teachers who confuse learning with discipline. The school somehow takes warm, breathing teenagers and tries to turn them into 40-year-old mental eunuchs."

Wiseman's "Juvenile Court," which will be screened during his concluding lecture on January 21, was the recipient of the 1974 Dupont Award from the Columbia School of Journalism for Excellence in Broadcast Journalism.

Wiseman's January 21 appearances at Juniata, as well as the January 20 screening of "Titicut Follies," are sponsored, in part, by the departments of sociology and political science. Wiseman was brought to campus by the Humanities (Division 1) Visiting Artists Program.

D. Bruce Davis reminds area residents that "the department is pleased to extend a cordial invitation to interested persons to share the visit to Juniata of one of America's foremost film makers." There will be no charge for admission to any of the four programs.

Continuing Education Program Offers Aerobic Fitness Course

An opportunity to improve one's physical fitness — without jogging in snow or doing sit-ups on the living room floor — is being offered through a new course in Juniata College's Continuing Education Program.

The course, "Aerobic Fitness and Dance Class," will provide instruction in a new program of exercise that strengthens the cardiovascular system with vigorous dance movements.

Set to begin Tuesday, Jan. 15, the course will consist of eight sessions and meet on Tuesday and Friday afternoons, from 4 to 5, in the Ballroom in Ellis College Center. The dates of the eight sessions are Jan. 15, 18, 22, 25 and 29, and Feb. 1, 5 and 8.

Carole Thompson, a former Juniata physical education instructor and holder of an M.Ed. degree in health and physical education from The Pennsylvania State University, will provide the instruction.

"Aerobic dance is an enjoyable means of exercising," Mrs. Thompson says, explaining that in addition to "stretching, sliding and swinging, members of the class also will learn dance movements such as the Hustle, the Charleston, boogie and disco."

She adds that appropriate attire for the class includes tennis shoes and sweat suits, shorts, and leotards or tights.

The fee for the eight-session course is $20, and the registration deadline is Jan. 12. In the event the minimum enrollment for the course is not met, the full fee will be refunded.

Persons desiring further information about the "Aerobic Fitness and Dance Class" may contact Dr. Duane F. Stroman, director of continuing education, by telephoning 643-4310, extension 11.

Hurlbut Named to PR/Sports Position

J. Stevens Hurlbut, a 1979 Lafayette College graduate, has been named assistant in public relations at Juniata College, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder announced this week.

In his new post, effective January 2, Hurlbut will handle the college's sports information program, edit portions of the quarterly Alumni Bulletin, and assist in general news bureau operations.

A Florida native, Hurlbut is a 1975 Naples High School graduate. He received his bachelor of arts degree from Lafayette last spring, having majored in government.

He had served the college as a student assistant in sports information, as sports editor of the student newspaper, and as a member of the rugby and wrestling teams.

A member of Theta Delta Chi social fraternity, he was also president of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, a senior class gift committee group captain, an alumni fund drive phonathon chairman, and a member of the Student Government Joint Athletic Committee.

Since his graduation, Hurlbut has remained in Easton, substitute teaching and assisting in a volunteer role with Lafayette's sports information and soccer programs.

Hurlbut is the son of Mrs. Jane Kelso of Marietta, Ohio.

Rossi Leaves Post

Dean Rossi, Juniata College head football and track coach, has resigned those posts to assume a college development position, Juniata president Frederick M. Binder announced January 5.

Rossi's resignation follows eight years on the Indian athletic staff, none of which involved a losing team. He spent seven seasons with the track squad, five as gridiron offensive coordinator, and three as head football coach. He also handled multi-sport recruitment.

His new job, effective Jan. 14, will involve fund-raising for the college's new Sports & Recreation Center, part of a $13-million development campaign announced last month. Other duties will include generating support for additional capital projects, according to Foster G. Ulrich, Jr., vice-president for development.

"The decision did not come easily," Rossi said prior to leaving for the NCAA-American Football Coaches Association Convention in New Orleans, where he and Athletic Director Bill Berrier will begin the search for Rossi's successor.

"My years in coaching — 19 now — have been extremely fulfilling, especially at Juniata. But I feel it's time to pursue another career. I had always planned to change fields at about this point, and this opportunity is very attractive to me."

Rossi, guided his Indian football teams to a 15-13 record, including a 5-4 mark this fall. As offensive coordinator under Walt Nadzak, he helped five squads to a 35-13 mark, one Middle Atlantic Conference title, and a runner-up finish for the 1973 NCAA Division III national championship.

As track coach, Rossi won 40 of 50 meets, including all five last spring, plus the 1973 MAC title. An assistant professor of physical education, he further co-directed for five years Juniata's intramural program, which presently involves more than 80% of Juniata's students.

Rossi came to Juniata in 1972 from Dickinson College, where he spent a year as offensive backfield and baseball coach. From 1968-70, he was head football coach at Derry Area High School, having spent the seven previous years as a football, wrestling and track assistant at Altoona High School.

A Bellwood native, he is a 1958 Penn State graduate, earning his degree in hotel administration. He also holds bachelor's and master's degrees in physical education from Penn State and West Virginia University, respectively.

"I will miss coaching," Rossi concluded. "I've worked with some outstanding young men and women here who will surely be successful in many more ways. But I'm proud to have helped attract them to the college, and would like to think I've helped establish a standard. And I know I'll be helping our students still in campaigning for the Center."

According to Berrier, Rossi's successor will continue as head football coach, though other roles have yet to be determined. Some track post, as assistant or head coach, is one possibility, as is an intramural spot.

The search will begin in New Orleans, Berrier also notes, but will not be limited to prospects contacted here.

Women Mark Perfect Record

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Juniata women's basketball team, off to its best start in years, streaked to a 6-1 record for the early part of the season. The only spoiler was the Scranton Royals who won a hard fought contest in Long Center.

The Bullets of Gettysburg College invaded Indian territory Thursday night and left with their fifth loss against one win. JC's defense was outstanding once again. The first Bullet score came seven minutes into the game, with the score standing at 17-0. The Tribe used a zone press forcing numerous turnovers and built a 43-21 half time lead.

JC seemed to lose momentum after the intermission and was outscored 39-31. After shooting 55% during the first half, their average fell to 39% after the break. Gettysburg seemed to hit on every shot and pulled within eight, before losing 74-60.

Julie George and Nancy Zinkham each scored 15 points and Nancy Roach chipped in 14. Zinkham led all rebounders with 11, while George grabbed caroms.

With an undefeated streak on the line, the College Hill Gang ventured to Scranton on Saturday. The Juniata lady dribblers played a great defensive game, forcing 31 turnovers. Nancy Zinkham had seven steals and Judy Pepoy had five, while the team had 18 as a whole. The press, which has been so effective all season, came through again.

Scranton scored first and never gave up the lead, but the Indians never gave up either. Down by 11, JC fought back to within one with only 8½ minutes left in the half. Despite poor shooting (20% for the half), the Tribe was only down by eight at the intermission, 26-18. With 11½ minutes left to play, the Royals had the biggest lead of the game. They were up by 17 points but JC would not pack up and leave. The Indians outscored their opponents 7-1 in the last 2 minutes of the game, but lost 6 52.

Julie George led the scoring attack with 13 points, while Teri Eckenrode, Judy Pepoy, and Nancy Zinkham all contributed eight points. Ms. Zinkham and Ms. George led all rebounders with eleven a piece.

JC's downfall came in its shooting, or maybe its lack of good shooting. The College Hill Gang hit on only 21 of 61 shots from the field for 33% and 10 of 19 from the charity stripe for 53%.

Coach Nancy Latimore feels a little disappointed in the performance of the team during the last two games, but we've had a spectacular year so far. We have exceptional talent, so I expect the rest of the year to be successful.

The Juniata lady dribblers return to the hardwoods tonight at Messiah College and return to Memorial Gym on Tuesday for a league encounter with Susquehanna.

Indians Skid at 7

by Pat Conroy

Trying to end their recent losing streak, Juniata's basketball team employed a patient offense. It almost worked, but almost is not good enough. The patient offense is supposed to enhance the shot selection, and the Indians proved it as they took more shots than Scranton (51-37). The cold shooting so prevalent through the season plagued the Indians once more.

Phil Fortino's basket with 8 seconds to play cut the Scranton lead which they had held the whole game, to three points. A Juniata foul led to two free throws for the Royals and a final score of 43-38. In the game, Juniata shot a dismal 29%. They won the rebounding battle 35-25 which was contributed by a matchup zone, leading to excellent position for caroms.

Coach Frazier felt that his matchup zone was very effective but added "the first six minutes of the second half decided the game-we scored only one basket during that time." Scranton's lead, which was only three at halftime, luckily only jumped to seven during this period. Juniata, determined not to give up, moved within five, 39-34, with ten minutes to go. Scranton then stalled for the remainder of the game.

Coach Frazier used his bench at will, substituting freely. They return home tonight to play Messiah.

Grapplers Remain Undefeated

by Doug Williams

Juniata's wrestling squad maintained their unbeaten record with a win and a draw in a triangular meet last Saturday.

By defeating Rhode Island College 24-17 and tying King's College 20-20, the Indians lifted their record to 6-0-1.

In the first match against Kings, Bruce Amig (118) got things going with a pin, and after Rob Funk (142) scored a superior decision the score stood at 14-3. Kings battled back and going into the 190 lb. match the score was 17-17. Keith Sherbine, wrestling for the first time this year, got a decision, but the Kings heavyweight managed a decision over Dan Jendrzejewski giving them a 20-20 tie.

Against Rhode Island the lower weight classes provided the scoring punch as a pin by Joe Paskill (150) capped an 18 point spree by Bob Gay (126), Todd Roadman (134), and Funk. Chris Young (177) got the decision to insure a 24-17 win for the Indians.

The lower weights continue to dominate stats as the first five weight classes have 42 of the team's 59 wins. Paskill remains undefeated at 10-0, and Gay leads the team with four pins and 33 team points.

The Indians will try to keep their perfect record alive on Wednesday night.

No Giveaways

The $25.00 football poll on all the bowl games was not to be a gift. The $25.00 stays in the newspaper budget because the editors beat the campus. Pat Conroy got 8 out of 12 right, which tied with two others, but he was the only one of the three to pick Alabama to be National Champions. It marks the only time this year the campus did not beat the editors and it came when the pot was largest. However you can win $10.00 of that money by picking the exact score of the Super Bowl and the team that will win.

Faculty Organizes

by Cathy Creswell

The Juniata faculty has recently started their own association, the Juniata Faculty Professional Association (JFPA).

According to Dr. Rhodes, the secretary of the Creative Activities group within JFPA, a sense of community was missing between faculty members and, this was causing lack of communication between faculty members and also between the administration and faculty.

Dr. Rhodes added that the formation of the JFPA was to be a constructive way for the faculty to get together and discern common problems and thereby create a more effective way to voice their concerns and opinions to the administration. The JFPA is trying to get new ideas and fresh input from faculty members who can contribute to the college but just not have been asked for input before.

Initial meetings for the group occurred last spring and the association began meeting officially at the beginning of the school year. Approximately 55 faculty members have joined the JFPA which means that the association is supported by 70% of the faculty.

In the JFPA membership, there is good representation from all three areas of concentration: the natural sciences, the social sciences, and the humanities. In this way the JFPA hopes to reduce misunderstandings that can occur between faculty members working in different areas.

The JFPA acts as a forum to support the rights of interest groups formed within the association. Ideas brought up by the interest groups are voted on by members and each interest group is to be represented on the Executive Committee of the JFPA.

There are three permanent interest groups set up in the JFPA at this time. The Benefits group is concerned with faculty salaries and benefits. One of the primary reasons behind the origin of the JFPA was economic.

As the cost of living has been increasing in the past few years, professors' salaries have not been keeping up with the increase. As a result, some of the traditional events that are sponsored by faculty members might have to be discontinued.

The Benefits group has been working to collect data relating to faculty salaries and benefits at other colleges in comparison with those at Juniata. This data is then to be presented to members of the administration. According to data collected by the group so far, faculty salaries at Juniata average about 19% lower than those at colleges with a comparable academic standing to Juniata.

The Social Events group works to promote social activities to the entire Juniata community and

by Cherise Kent

At the Student Affairs Council meeting on January 21, Wayne Justham, director of programming, brought the proposed All Class Night modifications before the council for approval. (See article this page.)

Justham briefly outlined the proposals and the council approved the modifications by a vote of six in favor and one dissent.

According to Justham, the modifications are "designed to make the entire evening more attractive." He also noted that these proposals were "based on the assumption that the vast majority of students" felt the evening should be salvaged and that the event "should be modified." This assumption was based on the findings of a student survey.

While these modifications aim at improving the conduct of students and the quality of the plays, it was stressed at the meeting that in the end it is generally up to the student body to put forth an effort to upgrade the event.

ACN Revised

by Cherise Kent
and John George

Based on the results of a survey conducted by the Social Science Research Methods class of Dr. Duane Stroman, the All Class Night Steering Committee (ACNSC) has drawn up the following proposals which are designed to improve the quality of All Class Night, which is currently on probation:

A review committee composed of the four class advisors and Dr. Sue Esch will screen the class scripts. The committee will review the plays with regard to theatrical quality. If the play fails this initial screening, the class may revise the script and resubmit it to the committee for a second consideration. If the play does not pass the second review, the class will not appear in the competition.

The evening will begin earlier. The ACNSC has requested the Steering Committee from each dorm to plan a cocktail party prior to the dinner hour for their respective dorm. The committee has also recommended that the time of the parties be staggered so as to avoid overcrowding in the dining hall during the dinner hour.

ACNSC has also approached the Hallmark Food service with a request for a "special meal . . . something along the line of a buffet" during the night of the event.

The balcony in Oller Hall will be reserved for the actors and judges and the audience will be limited to seating in the lower level. The Weight Lifting Club has agreed to monitor the hall during the performance. Only as many tickets as there are seats will be available to students. A student

Discipline Reports

by Dale Wetzel

The student services office has compiled information of all reported infractions on various disciplinary cases from Sept. 4, 1979 to January 11, 1980 and the results follow:

Two infractions of the damage policy occurred during that time period, both were damage to school property and both resulted in a $100.00 fine and warning of expulsion.

The alcohol policy was violated eight times, the infractions ranging from keg size limitations, keg prohibition on a weekday evening, hosting a social function not contained to a residence hall room, charging admission to a social function without professional entertainment and sponsoring a weekday evening lounge party not meeting the required resident/guest ratio.

The sanctions given for the varied infractions include one warning, four sanctions of warning and restraint from hosting social functions and three sanctions of the $30.00 fine as described in the alcohol policy.

The majority of the infractions occurred under the general misconduct category with a total of 10 violations. Some of these involve abuse of video amusement machines, attempted theft of school property, verbal abuse of a Resident Assistant and tampering with school and borough property. Sanctions vary extensively from

Carter Issues Olympic Ultimatum

Unless the Soviet Union withdraws all of its troops from Afghanistan within a month, President Carter warned, he would recommend a U.S. boycott of the 1980 Summer Olympic games in Moscow. The President also asserted that the United States is prepared to use "Military Force, if necessary" to protect Pakistan.

At the beginning of the week Soviet tanks and armored personnel carriers rolled into the Afganistan capital of Kabul while troops were airlifted into the city.

According to defense Department officials in Washington, thousands of Afghan army troops have defected to the side of the Muslim Afghan rebels, who have been fighting what they regard as a holy war against a succession of three Marxist governments that have held rule in their country for the past 20 months and against the 3½ week occupation of Soviet troops. Editorial:

Money, money and more money. That almost seems to be the bottom line here at Juniata. The almighty dollar seems to have more power at this school than any administrator ever even thought about. Every segment of the college is under the coins thump, but does this mean we must accept it as a wooden nickel?

The Beeghly Library has instituted a fine system this year for overdue books. Perhaps the $3.00 might be of better use in the gas tanks of the hundreds of students who find they must travel to State College to find the material they need.

Hallmark Food Service had a 17% increase for the 1979-80 school year and will probably get another increase next year. Isn't it strange that this increase doesn't make itself apparent in the food they dish out to the nonplussed students.

Did you ever wonder where the $5.00 you spent on a highly official Juniata parking ticket went to. Certainly not for lighting, security, or even a guaranteed parking space. But in some areas like the North Dorm parking lot where construction has been taking place for some time it seems to guarantee them a hit-and-run accident.

Course payment is another such instance of this ultra money consciousness. Doesn't it seem logical to pay for two courses if you take two courses or three courses if you take three courses? The school obviously doesn't think so because you pay for three courses even if you take only two courses.

Students unfortunate enough to have to take an HEH course this term were quite dismayed at the outrageous $12.00 plus cost of the course reading packets. This disgusting price covers some of the cost of field trips — if you can go or not.

The price of books used for courses which is charged by the college book store is always a subject of endless discussion. Also the number of books which some professors require their students to have is in a lot of cases ridiculous. This is especially true when you are only required to read two chapters or in even more extreme cases only the preface of a book required for a course. You usually can't use these books from the library because our extensive library doesn't have them or in rare cases when it does, it has only one copy.

Lab fees are just another irritation to the financial situation. Can it be assumed that these lab fees are "donations?" They certainly can't be labeled extra because here at Juniata we are led to believe we have an "All Inclusive Fee." The only way we see to interpret that phrase is to assume they mean "all inclusive" in your wallet and more.

Even if you manage to save money somehow, you can put it in the student bank. With no interest. Or if you have an account somewhere else it will cost 10¢ to cash a check at Juniata — unless of course it's a Juniata check.

But probably the worst instance of this money-oriented thinking which hits the student the hardest is the sub-minimum wage paid to those students unfortunate enough to work for the school. Minimum wage rose to $3.10 an hour in January so the school has raised their wage an entire 17 cents to $2.64 per hour. People all over the United States and even in Huntingdon get minimum wage for such complicated jobs as picking fly feces out of pepper — but for desk attendants, postal clerks, admissions guides, etc., Juniata College pays $2.64.

All of this discussion of money is depressing. If one agrees with the adage — "you get what you pay for", — we should each be a registered genius upon graduation.

But there is one area where money does not seem to be of any concern, and that is student safety. Last year a female student was knocked unconscious by a swinging door in East Houses by another student going in the opposite direction. The door swings two ways and is solid, restricting the vision of anyone coming the other way. This girl was admitted to J.C. Blair Hospital and awarded 13 stitches above her right eye. This cost the school money for medical expenses last year, not to mention what it cost the student. No money or effort has been spent to take the doors off or to put windows in for visibility. The subject has been under discussion at the last few Student Government meetings with Arnie Tilden and Wayne Justham present — but the doors remain. The residential life of Student Government later addressed the issue to Juniata's very own Director of Housing, Jack Linetty, three weeks ago — but the doors remain. Is the college so intensely concerned with money that it doesn't want to spend a few dollars toward student safety? Or does student safety take a low second to the almighty dollar? Certainly this means money must be spent and if this is the case hopefully the problem will be solved. But the priority system at Juniata seems to go against all natural principles. Let's see all those dimes students give to cash checks at Juniata spent on student safety and related causes, not notorious little schemes to take their money which Juniata is more than efficient in doing so.

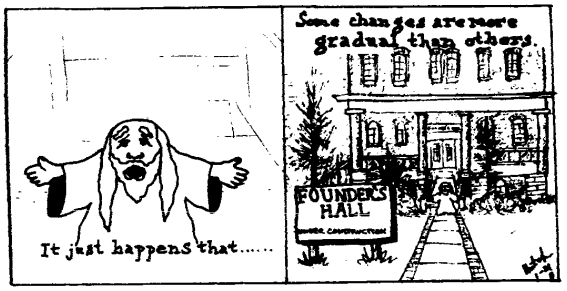
BCA Available

by Tricia Abbott

There is a misconception among Juniata College students that the Brethren Colleges Abroad (BCA) Program, which is available to send students abroad to England, France, and Germany, is for education majors only. Dr. Dolnikowski and Dr. Crouch, directors of the program, wish to dispell the myth and let students know that the program is available to any student who wishes to apply regardless of his or her field of study.

In the past it was true that only education majors were involved but for the past two or three years the program was opened up to all students, provided they meet the application requirements.

The program involves students studying at one of the overseas colleges for one term (or possibly a whole year if arrangements can be made) with credit courses taken being transferred back to Juniata. Any student who is interested in the program should see Dr. Dolnikowski, Dr. Crouch or Dr. Russey.



by Jeff Boulton

This column is so short this week because we don't have enough rock concerts at Juniata College.

It is as a protest that I haven't written very much this week. It is also because I put it off to the last minute. It is also because there's not too much to write about. But it is mainly because there aren't enough concerts here.

Three years ago we had three concerts: Styx, Jennifer Warnes with Dave Mason, and Pure Prairier League. Two years ago we had two concerts: Johnny's Dance Band and the New Riders of the Purple Sage. One year ago we had one concert: Maynard Ferguson. If it keeps up like this, we won't even have coffee houses in a few years.

The reasons for this decline in the number of popular music events are probably too numerous to mention. However, nasty rumors have it that something happened at the Jennifer Warnes-Dave Mason concert, something which spurred the Board of Trustees to attend the Pure Prairie League concert. One of our Trustees' children was supposedly on hand during a very disgusting occurrence, of which it would be unwise to give an account based on hearsay. All I can say is this: I'm glad it wasn't me!

I don't know for a fact that this occurrence, were it actually true, could directly cause a cutback in concert programming at Juniata. It really does take large-scale coordinated planning and effort to schedule a concert. It also takes money, at least in the beginning. But it's such an inconvenience to have to drive to PSU or IUP or even to Harrisburg just to see a concert! Not to mention the hemorrhoids you get as a result of driving for hours to get tickets a week in advance only to find they've been sold out to people who live within walking distance of the box office.

It's almost enough for some people to start going to school within walking distance of a busy box office!

Maybe it isn't good to have a campus full of concert-goers. They probably have a lot of undesirable personal characteristics. Perhaps they even have lower IQ and SAT test scores than people who stay at home. There's a good possibility of this. But how am I supposed to get a lengthy article in to the Editor when I've had three tests in the last four days of class, and the Weather Report concert is starting three hours from now the whole way up in State College in some auditorium the location of which is a complete mystery to me?!?

Now, if I could just get somebody to type this, maybe I could get up there on time!

Sound System Scars Coffeehouse

by John George

Laughing Bush Enterprises presented their second coffeehouse of the winter term this past Saturday, January 19 in the basement lounge at South Hall. Included in the evening's program were Marcia Rhoads, Glenn Beasley, Mike Donoghue, Tom Concilus, Steve Daniels, John Ferlin, Cindy Goldstein, Robin Wilson, Rick Mayher, and Karen Ripley.

Leading off the evening was Marcia Rhoades with her first song entitled Dream. Immediately this reporter took note of her clear, resonant voice and extraordinary command of her musical material. She quickly then ran through Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young's Helplessly Hoping, but her next number, a tune about a woman left husbandless due to the Vietnam war, left most of the audience mesmerized. I was told by an anonymous source that Hilaire and Jennifer (members of the enraptured audience) were given chills by Marcia's touching rendition of the song. Marcia then proceeded to do a Merle Haggard tune, Good Time by John Prine, Long May You Ran by Neil Young, House on Pooh Corner by Loggins and Messina, then two songs by John Denver — Isabelle and Country Roads. All of Marcia's songs were performed with the same unique consistency and brilliancy as the first song. The Outlaw by Prine ended an excellent opening set.

Next in the spotlight was Mr. Glenn Beasley. It should be noted here that the sound system was not up to its usual clarity. Anyway, Mr. Beasley opened his set with Bob Dylan's The Times They Are A' Changin and Young's Heart of Gold. As compared to the previous Laughing Bush coffeehouse, Mr. Beasley's voice did not fare quite as well. It seemed that the sound system was partly responsible for this, but his high nasal voice added much to the misinterpretation of the words. However Mr. Beasley's usual competency on the acoustic guitar almost completely compromised for the muddy voicings. Joining Mr. Beasley after his first two songs was Mike Donoghue, a student from the University of Pittsburgh at Johnstown. They went on to do Wild Horses by the Rolling Stones, My My Hey Hey (Out of the Blue) by Young, the Stone's No Expectations, and one of Mike's own numbers. The voice was still muffled ad unintelligible, but on Mike's untitled song a very repititious but melodic sound was extracted from his guitar. At this point in time the audience held itself to a barely distinguishable chatter which led to a very relaxed atmosphere conducive to easy listening. Mr. Beasley and Mike then went through several more songs that were of the same style and manner as before — Black Diamond Babe by Dylan, a song by the New Riders of the Purple Sage, Take a Last Lonely Look at the Eagle, and Dylan's You Make Me Lonesome When You're Gone.

Steve Daniels was next on the agenda with his twelve-string Yamaha acoustic guitar. Although Steve is an accomplished guitarist, his singing of the first few songs was very low and indistinguishable. Also, he failed to mention the titles and artists for many of the songs! Otherwise, Steve has a unique voice and puts forth much feeling into his songs.

Guitarist John Ferlin, along with other students, performed at the Laughing Bush Coffeehouse on Saturday night. (See story this page.)

The tunes that he played that I could pick out were Helpless and 4 + 20 by Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, another David Crosby tune and Gordon Lightfoot's Sundown which was expertly done. For a deserved encore, Steve returned to another Lightfoot song. A major disappointment at this time was the depletion of the supply of popcorn which had added much flavor to the evening. I suppose that we were lucky to stay well-supplied in beverage or else a few performers might have been more coherent.

Entertaining on the stage with the show seemingly already in his hands, John Ferlin gave the best performance of the evening. Playing the guitar virtually flawlessly and singing in a subdued but unclouded voice, John led off with Crazy Love of Mine by Dan Fogleburg and then ventured into three songs of his own composition. Cindy Goldstein then joined John in a song by Neil Young in which Cindy played the part of Nicolette Larson as a backup singer. John then completed the next songs by himself in his usual inimitable style. The songs were: a Three Dog Night tune, Be On Your Way by Fogleburg, Helpless once again (even better), and The Gambler by Fogleburg.

For Neil Young's There Comes a

Joe Jackson — I'm The Man
A&M SP 4794

That both Joe Jackson's debut album, Look Sharp and its sublime single, Is She Really Going Out With Him?, made substantial chart rankings and ever garnered AM airplay should have come to no surprise to anyone. This accomplishment is something few New Wave acts have been able to do except for Blondie, who cheated by doing a disco prototype.

But Joe Jackson is as sharp-eyed a social critic as any of his more activist contemporaries; (the Clash, Boomtown Rats and Nick Lowe) he just doesn't make a big deal out of it. And more important is the band's music. This can hardly be overstressed. What makes the Clash and similar groups exciting is, among other things, that they are unschooled musicians playing well beyond their limits. Joe Jackson and company achieve a comparable excitement by coming from the opposite direction: they are players of enormous accomplishment trying their best to strip their music down to the elemental essentials.

Don't Wanna Be Like That is a song that denotes pure kinetic rock and roll that needs no description.

One-Acts to Open Tonight

The third edition of the Theater Department's one-act play presentations opens this evening in Oller Hall and runs through Sunday. The catch-all title for the evening is "Yet Another Evening of One-Act Plays," and as in the past the directors for the three plays that make up the program are Doris Goehring and Bruce Davis of the Speech and Theater Department and Howard Crouch from Education.

All three plays this year are comedies. The curtain-raiser is Tom Stoppard's The Real Inspector Hound, which Professor Davis says is "about British mysteries, the role of the critic in art, and illusion and reality. In that order, I think."

Professor Goehring's entry is "Ways and Means," one of the playlets from the famous Noel Coward collection Tonight at Eight-Thirty. As is usual with Coward, "Ways and Means" finds a group of very English, very wealthy, very thirties characters manfully shouldering the burdens of life in the upper crust.

Lest the British playwrights get all the laughs, the evening ends with Elaine May's Not Enough Rope. The humor here, not surprisingly, is of a blacker sort, but the play caps the evening off nicely.

The audience will once again be invited up on the stage with the actors, with the plays being performed in three-quarter round. Seating will be limited to fewer than 200 each night. Since there was a sell-out problem last year, theatergoers presently without tickets are already in danger of becoming something other than theatergoers. Hie yourselves up to the Ellis Hall desk, where a few tickets are still available. The price is .50 for students, faculty, townspeople, children, everybody.

Center Board, believed that students should be reminded that ACN is on probation this year. A council member added that "if the evening does not meet certain standards, then the possibility of cancelling ACN will be real."

The weight of authority that the monitors should possess was questioned by Dean of Students Arnie Tilden. No immediate guidelines for the monitors could be given at the meeting. It was decided that the question would be passed on to the All Class Night Steering Committee for consideration.

The proposals were generally received favorably by the majority of council members. Doris Goehring questioned the 30 minute length for the plays, believing that most classes could not produce a good 30 minute play.

There is presently a hitch in the scheduling of the event. ACN is scheduled for April 18, which is four days after students return from spring break. Oller Hall is reserved by an outside group on one of those four nights, leaving the auditorium available for class practices only three days prior to the event. This problem will also be brought before the ACNSC.

Tilden commented that he believed these modifications gave ACN "more structure rather than more restrictions."

restraint of use of school property, charging for repairs, $100.00 and $50.00 fines, warning, social probation, etc.

In a period of 15 weeks a total of 20 cases occurred involving 59 students and 1 non-student. Four of the cases were appealed to the judicial board, 1 upheld and 3 modified to a lesser degree.

Arnold J. Tilden, dean of student services stated, "It is fair to say that 20 cases (are active). The large amount of referrals by staff and security of those violating the social code is effective."

"Due process and rights are given the students and we are careful to let them know what their rights are. More students have a better idea of how the judicial system works — the right to appeal starts with the administrative hearing and then J-board. The student is given a notice of a hearing 48 hours in advance to provide evidence and assistance."

Tilden also stated that most of the policies are developed by students, largely Student Affairs Council (SAC), along with various other sanctions. Students also comprise a large portion of the Judicial Board which reviews all appeals.

Commission Recommends Language Requirements

by Cherise Kent

Last November the President's Commission on Foreign Language and International Studies concluded that the status of the United States as a world leader is jeopardized because so few of its citizens can speak a foreign language. The declaration was made following a year long study of the nation's language skills.

The commission urged colleges to offer undergraduate requirements in international studies and networks of undergraduate and graduate centers to "strengthen and sustain" international studies. The commission stated that colleges and universities "should require at least two or three courses in international studies of all bachelor's-degree candidates."

Several of the commission's findings which lead to the recommendation are:

— Only 15 percent of students in public high schools in the U.S. study a foreign language, compared with 24 percent in 1965. Only 1 student in 20 pursues French, German, or Russian beyond the second year.

— Fewer than 900 U.S. business people working in Japan speak Japanese, while nearly 10,000 Japanese on assignment in the U.S. are proficient in English.

The commission regarded this incompetence as "scandalous". They professed the incompetence has helped to create a "dangerously inadequate understanding of world affairs" thereby damaging U.S. economic and diplomatic influence. The experts claim the nation's security is at issue.

In its report the commission urged that the federal government allocate $178-million more than the $67-million appropriated in the 1979 fiscal year for foreign languages and international studies.

Kinky?

Some people have to do some very peculiar things to enjoy themselves – like get

These gruesome expressions evolved for a reason. Excessive drinking is very simply and seriously a way of hurting yourself.

You've learned to distrust the soundness of accepted notions in other areas: ecology, nutrition, politics for example. Why blindly follow without question the myths about alcohol? What some adults consider "socially acceptable" drinking is a serious abuse of a drug.

Test it for yourself. Maybe you don't need so much to join the fun. Maybe some of you will decide you don't need any at all to have a good time.

By learning to set a reasonable limit, you'll help create a more enjoyable time for yourself and all those around you.

JUNIATA CASE

THE TODAY PTA

Upcoming 'Macbeth' Examines the Nature of Evil

William Shakespeare wrote "Macbeth" more than 370 years ago, but the intervening years have not diminished the validity — or the importance — of the great morality play's examination of the nature of evil.

Fear, horror, deranging emotions and violence, all linked to the nature of evil are still very much a part of the human condition. And, as psychological stresses continue to increase in today's world, so do the breakdowns that result in manifestations of violence and evil.

These breakdowns, stemming from the isolation and insecurity inherent in our complex, dehumanizing society, are examined for contemporary audiences by The Independent Eye, which will present its powerful staging of "Macbeth" at Juniata College on Jan. 30.

The production, set for 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium, is the fifth of eight 1979-80 Juniata College Artist Series programs. The public is cordially invited to attend.

The Independent Eye, a national touring theatre company based in Lancaster, was drawn to "Macbeth" through its experience of producing "Dessie," an original character drama about an only-too-common manifestation of evil, child abuse. And like "Dessie," The Independent Eye's "Macbeth" traces the degeneration of a human being into a perpetrator of inhuman acts.

Although Shakespeare's compelling language has not been altered, this production of "Macbeth" is unique in that it is performed, in its entirety, by just three actors who use some 35 masks and large, European-style "marotte" puppets to portray the kaleidoscope of Shakespeare's whirlwind action.

Portrayed as the three Witches, the actors participate in a ritual of violence which takes place in their fantasy. Actress and company co-founder Linda Bishop, the child-abuser in "Dessie," says that "the same isolation and frustrations that cause a woman to beat a child produce the violence of 'Macbeth.'

"The real-life witches in Elizabethean England were the most powerless of the powerless. They were the people everyone despised — the crazy old hags on the edge of town or the neighbor behind closed doors. The Witches embraced violence in order to feel power."

Each Witch, she observes, is an individual creation out of present-day experience. One is a blind bag-lady, so beaten and embittered that she turns to violent ritual as a release for her frustrations.

Another is a young woman who is lost in fantasy or drugs and who grasps at anything that will provide her with an identity. The third is a young man whose sexual confusion and social defenses drive him to taste any experience in a search for an illusion of power.

The Independent Eye's "Macbeth" has been cast in a style closely akin to dreams. The puppets are manipulated in open space, with the actors' bodies serving as the puppet stage. The puppets are in the European "marotte" style, with near-lifesize, sculptured heads on cloth bodies. The actors' own real hands serve as the puppets' hands.

With the eerie images of Shakespeare's text supplemented by an original music score for voice and synthesizer, the lines and planes of the puppets' heads, as they move under special lighting effects, create an impression of living movement.

The puppet characters fragment and coalesce with the distorted reality of hullucination. This production style enables the drama to move with the speed of television or film editing, a tempo attuned to the modern audience's media-conditioned response.

Director and company co-founder Conrad Bishop further observes that "the production style is derived from several sources, including the use of doll

Wiseman Regards Films as Novels

by Bob Kemper

Fredrick Wiseman, acclaimed documentary film director and producer, offered insight into his approach to documentary films recently in a lecture under the direction of Professors Baldino and Vocke. Wiseman's lecture was part of a three day visit to Juniata.

Since he has been in the field of documentary films, Wiseman has made thirteen films all of which collaborate to form what he calls his "Institutional Series." All of the films in this series were filmed within the boundaries of the institutions themselves and include the fields of: Health and Medicine, Social Science, Youth, Criminology, The Law, The Military, Foreign Policy, and Organizational Behavior.

Wiseman said that most people incorrectly assume that the purpose of documentaries is to promote social change. He added that he himself entered the field "naively" in an attempt to bring social change, his intentions have changed drastically since. Says Wiseman, "If you are interested in social change then you should work at a police station . . . you don't make movies."

Wiseman went on to explain his own filming technique which is to simpily take a camera into the institution and start shooting, piecing the footage together later in the editing room. Although Wiseman admits that he can not be objective, he claims that his films are not made to support some preconceived idea he has had about any one institution. They are instead portrayals of what he has learned from his research of the institution.

Because his technique consists of acquiring large amounts of footage (his film "Titicut Follies" consisted of 100,000 feet of film, or 50 hours, before editing) and designing the final product through editing, he feels he is more of a playwright/novelist than a director. According to Wiseman his films are "more like novels than movies."

Senators Argue Over Lounge Condition

On Wednesday, January 16, a meeting of Student Government was held and the two dominating themes were the discussion of dorm renovation and the changes proposed for all class night.

Cherise Kent, speaking for the Residential Life Committee, reported on a meeting held with the Housing Director Jack Linetty, and Susan Twombly, assistant dean, where discussion was centered around priorities in dorm renovation. Suggested changes were a new company to handle the washing machine service on campus. It was felt that the present company is not taking adequate responsibility for the upkeep of the campus laundry facilities. The purchase of bunk beds was discussed as well as an appropriate location. It was suggested that the remainder of Cloister be furnished with the bunk beds and then to move on to furnish Sherwood. It is a long range plan that all dorms be supplied with new bunks.

The question most discussed was which dorm lounge should receive the new furniture scheduled to arrive at the end of the month. Terrace Senator, Jeff Keffer, expressed the strong need for Tussey Terrace lounge to be refurnished. It was brought up, however, that Tussey-Terrace lounge was the largest lounge and was used for the majority of large parties held on campus and that any new furniture would be in danger of quick destruction. Keffer, along with Tussey Senator Anji Worth, expressed the sentiment of the residents of those dorms-that they were being penalized by not having a nice lounge because of the parties held in that lounge. No decision was reached regarding the placement of the new furniture.

Also at the meeting, the All Class Night Steering Committee reported the proposed changes for All Class Night. The changes centered around making All Class Night a more formal evening with the plays being only one of several events scheduled for the evening. The suggestions consisted of: holding a semi-formal cocktail party sponsored by the dorm steering committees prior to a special evening meal served buffet style in the cafeteria, followed by the plays in the evening and a wine and cheese party held afterwards. Other considerations to help improve the event were strict screenings of the play scripts, strict surveillance of afternoon keg parties and making the seats in the balcony available to judges and members of the cast only.

Other business of the meeting was the transference of funds from the contingency fund to the speaker fund to cover the costs of bringing Godspell to campus. The availability of Emergency Student Loans through student Government was announced. Loans can be applied for on Monday and Wednesday afternoons between 12:30 and 3:00 and will be distributed to students only on Wednesday. The Financial Aid department is working in cooperation with Student Government to ensure the repayment of the loans within thirty days by withholding grades and registration at the accounting office until the loans are paid back.

The Creative Activities group wants to encourage and promote such scholarly activities of the faculty. Research and innovative teaching are not always given adequate support or recognition on campus. The group wants to show the potential of the Juniata faculty.

About once a month they have a professional aspect that he or she finds interesting. These talks are open to the entire campus. As a part of this program Dr. Russey will be speaking about the Foreign Exchange program at 3:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge on Friday, Jan. 25.

Besides the ongoing activities of the interest groups there are several other topics being discussed by the JFPA. This includes the extent of control that Juniata College has over faculty activities during the academic year especially those activities that are not related to Juniata College. The JFPA is also planning an assessment of football as the major sport at a small college like Juniata.

WKVR Announces Winter Schedule

by John George

The Juniata College radio station, WKVR, has just recently announced their new full-time hours starting Thursday, January 17, 1980. Located in Founders Hall earlier and now in the Communications "Boulevard" in the basement of Ellis Hall, WKVR has listed it's listening hours as follows: Monday-Thursday from noon to midnight; Friday from noon to 2 a.m.; Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2 a.m.; and Sunday from 9 a.m. to midnight.

On Saturday and Sunday mornings from 9 a.m. to noon, there is a special for classical music lovers. Proficient D.J.'s spin the platters on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday nights from 10 p.m. for the Juniata Jazz jammers. From 10 p.m. to midnight on Wednesdays bluegrass sashays out of Ellis Hall.

Also, WKVR plans to broadcast all of the home basketball games.

For any individual interested in joining the WKVR staff, there are openings in the production and news departments.

effigies in voodoo magic and the use of puppets in therapy with schizophrenics. The character of Macbeth is a projection of the impulses of the Witches. As they destroy the puppet characters, they also destroy themselves."

Remarking that the Independent Eye "does not wish to commercialize violence" in its production of "Macbeth," Bishop says that instead, the company wishes to "increase, as Shakespeare did, understanding of the human condition.

"We're all more and more aware of violence, but since there's very little reportage about the human roots of these acts, we read the newspaper and feel very helpless. Shakespeare is the great news reporter about 'why' people do what they do. Understanding that can make us all feel a little more in control of our own lives."

Founded in 1974 by Conrad and Linda Bishop, The Independent Eye has presented more than 1,000 performances and workshops in 32 states. After an initial season at Chicago's Body Politic Theatre, the company decided to tour full-time, and in 1977, it moved its base of operations from Chicago to Lancaster.

Wide recognition came to the company for its production of "Dessie," which has been featured at national conferences about child abuse and which has been performed for staff members of the U.S. Office of Child Development. Additionally, a Wisconsin telecast of "Dessie" was awarded a citation from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

The Independent Eye is funded, in part, by grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, and the Public Committee for the Humanities in Pennsylvania.

As part of the 1979-80 Artist Series, the Eye's Jan. 30 appearance in Oller Auditorium is sponsored by Juniata through the Cultural Events Committee and the Fine Arts Committee of the College Center Board. It is made possible by the Ellis Humanities Endowment, the Fogelsanger-Murphy Endowment, other sponsors, patrons and the sale of season tickets.

A sense of humor that is pointed without being nasty is evident in The Band Wore Blue Shirts; a wry tale of Joe's days as a lounge pianist.

Kinda Kute is a self-aware pop revisionism, the title song is one of the neatest critiques of consumerism ever, and It's Different for Girls is a haunting, delicate sexual satire.

Fresh tracks predicts Joe Jackson may well become (and deservedly) the first platinum star of the post punk era, not because he's somehow pulled punks' teeth but because he's an original with something interesting to express musically and lyrically, and he has a wonderfully sly grin to temper his sincere put-downs. Joe Jackson's I'm The Man receives an A minus from Fresh Tracks.

Series Scheduled

The department of Peace and Conflict studies has once again scheduled a series of World Issues Luncheons here at Juniata.

On Wednesday, January 30 Eva Wampler will discuss "The Southeast Asian Refugee Problem". This will be the second luncheon of the series.

Lunch trays can be taken into the faculty lounge which adjoins the Baker Refectory. The program will begin at noon.

Without your help, we can't afford to win.

Coffeehouse

Time and Sugar Mountain, John was accompanied by Rick Mayher, another accomplished guitarist and vocalist. I noted that John sounded very much like Neil Young. After a thunderous ovation, John Ferlin left the stage with the audience's heartfelt appreciation in his sweaty hands. With much precision and aplomb, Rick sang John Denver's Rocky Mountain High, much to the delight of the audience; a Doobie Brother's song, and Castles Burning by Young. Now Robin Wilson, another campus product, joined Rick to form a very melodious team. Together they sang The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald by Lightfoot, and A Horse With No Name by America. Even though Robin's guitar was somewhat muffled, Robin and Rick managed to get the audience to participate by singing along. After a little ditty of Rick's own writing, Tom Concilus, the eminent harmonica player, came onstage to accompany Rick with one song.

With Tom remaining on the stage, Mr. Beasley, Mike Donoghue, and yet another campus guitarist, Karen Ripley, delved into the electrical spectrum of the medium. Some of their songs included Dear Doctor by the Rolling Stones and All Along the Watchtower by Dylan. Their most prominent problem was again with the sound system. Mr. Beasley's vocals and Karen's acoustic guitar could hardly be heard over Mr. Beasley's raucous lead electric guitar. With Mike on the bass and Tom on the harmonica, the impromptu group tried their best to end an otherwise successful coffeehouse on an appropriate note but due again to a poor sound system and a diminishing audience, they quickly disbanded even after the unexpected appearance of the ghost bassist who vainly tried to jam with the musicians.

Faced with seemingly insurmountable problems just a few hours prior to the start of the coffeehouse, Laughing Bush and the Coffeehouse Committee are to be highly commended for producing an evening of fine entertainment at a low cost. Laughing in the face of adversity, Laughing Bush comes through again.

Juniata: "A Good Example"

Juniata College, one of seven Region 7 institutions of higher education recently visited by a Pennsylvania House of Representatives sub-committee, has been cited for the "success of its mission."

In a comprehensive report to the House, Rep. Elinor Z. Taylor, chairman of the sub-committee on higher education, praised all Region 7 institutions for effective leadership and cooperation, mentioning Juniata "as a good example" of an institution using a successful, threefold-cycle approach to higher education.

This cycle, she says, includes well-planned admissions efforts, high-quality educational programs and a high placement level of graduates.

Comments Rep. Taylor: "Juniata offers a good example of successfully utilizing this approach. The college stresses practical career preparation and the personal growth of its students. Its mission is to take relatively good students and bring out the very best in them."

Elaborating on how Juniata effectively utilizes the "threefold cycle," Rep. Taylor says that "in its admissions efforts, (Juniata) selects the kind of student (who) can best be served by a 'program of emphasis' tailored to (the goals of individual students)."

Rep. Taylor notes that after students are admitted to Juniata, "every effort is made to ensure a satisfactory educational experience. This (includes) a flexible academic program, excellence of faculty, effective teaching, good career planning and counseling, the establishment of a good relationship with advisers, the encouragement of participation in student government, and the well-rounded selection of recreational and cultural opportunities offered by the college."

Sport Shop:

by Rob Morris

It was ten years ago, almost to the day, that the Kansas City Chiefs beat the Minnesota Vikings 23-7 to win Super Bowl IV. It marked the beginning of the 70's, labeled by winning coach Hank Stram as the decade of experiment. But that year also marked something else; the Steelers went 1-13 that year, and by the virtue of a predestined coin toss, drafted the superlative Terry Bradshaw out of Louisiana Tech. The big blonde immediately stuck his foot in his mouth by stating, "I wanted to go with a loser." In two years, Chuck Noll had transformed these losers into the seeds of a dynasty, and perhaps it is only fitting that the eighties started off with Terry Bradshaw leading the Steelers to victory in Super Bowl XIV.

The Super Bowl lived up to its name, and when it was over, a lot of predictors were eating crow. Anybody that points to the score is either trying to claim his debt or avoid the issue. The Steelers had to fight the Rams every inch of the way to gain their fourth Super Bowl ring in as many tries, and no one can begrudge the two teams the credit they so richly deserve.

Perhaps because of the fact that everybody was set to switch the channels at the point when Pittsburgh slapped a 2-touchdown lead on the Rams, it was truly just that one couldn't leave his seat anytime for trivialities. From the beginning, the two teams grabbed you with their spirit and the intensity of their play. And the heroes came from everywhere. The interceptions by the Ram defense, the running of Wendell Tyler behind his stellar offensive line, the long bombs to Stallworth and Swann, and countless unsung others, all seemed to indicate the level at which these players were playing. The ultimate game had both teams playing like they would fight to the end for the ring. The urgency of getting ahead, of proving their mettle to their counterparts on the field, seemed to force them to their highest potential.

It was, in this author's opinion, one of the best Super Bowls in the history of the game. Indeed it is fitting that the crown lies on the Steelers heads, for they were truly the team of the seventies. And in our every-enlightening hindsight, it rings of fate that the most-valuable-player should be the man who falsely marked the beginning of the Steeler era.

Ladies Up Record to 8-1

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Two more teams fell victim to the powerful women's basketball team of Juniata College. The Red Flash of St. Francis lost again to the mighty ladies, as did Messiah College. JC's record now stands at 8-1.

Having lost by 49 points (79-30) on the home court, The Red Flash was looking for revenge when they invaded Indian territory. They left with a 3-4 record after dropping the contest 72-45 (27 points).

One can't say enough about the Tribe's zone press and the scrappy defense. JC forced 40 turnovers, including several bad passes. The Tribe managed 30 steals — 10 by Nancy Zinkham and six for Judy Pepoy — and six blocked shots.

The College Hill Gang had built a 16-0 lead before St. Francis got into the scoring column at the 13:40 mark. JC kept the momentum going, and had a 19 point bulge with less than four minutes in the half. Susan Benusa came off the bench to score eight points before the intermission. The Indians went into the lockerroom with a 37-19 scoring advantage.

The Tribe returned to the court with the same aggressiveness, and was up by 25 with 11:34 left in the game. Suddenly it looked like the JC lady dribblers ran into a brick wall. During the next four minutes, they were out scored 15-4, including a period of 10 unanswered points. Sloppy play was the culprit — bad passes, lots of fouls (ten of St. Francis' 15 points were from the charity stripe), and a sudden increase in turnovers.

After another two minutes of sloppy play where neither team scored, Judy Pepoy broke the ice with an outside jumper, and JC recovered from its tailspin. Pepoy pumped in eight points in the final five minutes of the game.

Twelve of the Indians saw action, with nine of them entering the scoring column. Only Aimee Brua who was nursing an injured ankle watched the game from the sidelines. Once again, Julie George led the scoring attack with 18 points, followed by Judy Pepoy with 16. George also led the rebounders with 17.

After only one day's rest, the Indians travelled to Grantham to face the tough Messiah team. Even though not fully taking control until the second half, JC only lost the lead once, 26-25, toward the end of the first half. The half time score stood at 33-28, after a 40% shooting effort by the Indians.

The defense put on a show by itself. JC stole the ball 16 times from their opponent; Julie George led the thievery with six. The College Hill Five also shut down Messiah's top scorer, Judy Jacobs. Jacobs had two points on the night, both from the charity stripe.

The Indians shot 46% after the intermission and outscored Messiah 34-18 to gain their eighth win by a 69-46 score. JC held their opponents scoreless for the last 5:17 of the game. Nancy Zinkham led the Tribe attack with 20 points, 15 rebounds, and two blocked shots. Julie George followed closely with 19 tallies and 11 caroms, and Judy Pepoy chipped in 16 and grabbed 12 rebounds.

Coach Nancy Latimore was thrilled by the team's latest victory. "The Messiah game was a real big one for us. I think when we are able to beat teams of this calibre, it reinforces out belief that we can beat the top teams and win the big games."

The Indians face Mt. Aloysius tonight at 8:00 in Memorial Gym and Shippensburg State in the final game of the home stand on Saturday at 2:00.

Indians: Still Looking

by Patrick Conroy

Different player combinations and better shot selection was the mood in last week's two games but the losing streak continued. Although it might end by the time this article goes to press, Juniata took two lumps last week. Against a quick Messiah team, JC got blown out at home 69-48. They shot their best at Delaware Valley and lost by one point, no thanks to some homecourt refereeing.

Messiah owned a quick guard named Mike Matto who controlled the tempo of the game. He scored 20 points and kept JC behind all game. "We can't get out inside game going," commented Coach Frazier after the game. The shooting did improve for the Indians, up to 39%, hardly enough to take them to victory. Scott Johnson was a bright spot in the line-up hitting 7 of 9 shots for 14 points. Johnson was the only Indian in double figures.

At Delaware Valley, Juniata led most of the game, gave up the lead at 3:30 to go in the game (54-53), tied it at 54 with 3 minutes to go and lost the game with one second to go. They shot 55% their highest for the year. However turnovers haunted them as they gave up 22 chances. Again JC had trouble at the foul line hitting 6 of 13 and missing two crucial one-and-one situations in the final 3 minutes, the last one with 7 seconds to go. At this point, the Aggies called time out and came up with a plan for a shot. The plan failed and it looked like overtime but the refs called a foul away from the ball and JC lost their ninth straight as Mark Werkiser sank the first shot of a one-and-one situation. The Indians' Scott Johnson was the hot hand again as he hit 9 of 13 for 19 points. Big man Roger Arnold had 10 rebounds and 12 points to aid the Indian scoring attack.

As evidenced by the crowd at the last few home games, Juniata is fast losing its student support. Let's hope that by the time you read this, the !&!&!* losing streak is over, and the fans are there for the last three home games. It'll make it a lot easier writing articles for a victory.

Registration Adequate?

by Heather MacCrindle

According to the Registrar's Office, any problems that students experienced while registering for spring term classes were the result of not reading the memo distributed to all students on January 2.

It was stated on the memo that "all students must be cleared by the Accounting Office before they will be permitted to register," but many upperclassmen were still bewildered upon not receiving their registration material. During Winter Term registration a member of the Accounting Office checked all students as they entered Ellis ballroom to see if their finances were settled. Dr. Nolan, Juniata's Registrar, felt that this held up those students who were all paid up and lengthened the registration process unnecessarily.

To enforce this rule more thoroughly, a "list of those students who hadn't settled their money matters" was sent to the Registrar's office before Spring registration. These students' registration cards were pulled and sent to the Accounting Office where they had to be picked up. The process will be done this way from now on, so that students will have to go to the Accounting Office to receive their card in order to register.

Although this may make students "a little more annoyed," said Nolan, "it's just because the school is trying to be a little more careful in enforcing rules." Over all, Dr. Nolan believes this method to be "fairer to all students."

Also stated in the memo was the fact that "pre-registration will establish the priorities for entrance into Spring Term units," not that it will ensure all students who pre-register a spot in that class. This is one of the "toughest myths to break" says Nolan, because it is true and unavoidable that there is a limited supply of faculty to teach courses and a lack of large lecture rooms and labs here at Juniata.

Due to closed classes registration "looked like chaos" to many freshmen trying to take all the prerequisites they needed. In fact, many of the classes "closed" on Monday afternoon were re-opened Tuesday morning after Dr. Nolan had taken class registration numbers from the computer and juggled classrooms to provide more space for the classes that were over-subscribed. Already, larger classrooms have been found to accommodate U.S. History, Intro. to Sociology, Intro. to Anthropology, and an additional laboratory for Chem Lab Techniques is under planning.

"Adjustments are made immediately," explains Nolan so

Exchange Program Expanded

by Tammy Helwig

On Friday, January 25 at 3:30 p.m., in the Faculty Lounge, Dr. Russey spoke on behalf of the Foreign Exchange Committee. The meeting dealt with the increasing growth in the Junior Year Abroad Program here at Juniata.

Our program is very unique in that when our students are exchanged with students from a foreign country, they are not simply there to study various subjects but can study specifically in their field. Dr. Russey stressed the fact that he felt in the past students have been reluctant to participate in the exchange program because they thought they would lose courses needed for completion of their P.O.E. Students can take courses compatible to ones which would fall into the departmental course schedule at Juniata plus gain a broad background in another country's culture.

The foreign countries which we currently have exchanges with are France, Spain, Germany, and England. The main departments open to the exchange program are chemistry, business, political science, biology, and geology. It should be noted however, that if interest would be shown from students in other areas of study, it is possible arrangements could be made to involve various other departments.

The advantages to studying abroad are innumerable. Students would learn to speak another language fluently. They would become more aware of another country's culture, and they would be able to realize America's position in world affairs from a different perspective.

The exchange students are not threatened as foreigners when they are placed in the country of their choice. They become students of that country. The simplicity of this program is

by Cherise Kent

Dr. Arnie Tilden, dean of student services, announced earlier this week that the renovation of Tussey-Terrace lounge will be assessed by the residential life committee in conjunction with the office of student services. His statements were in response to concerns aired by Student Government senators (see January 24 issue of The Juniatian) and residents of Tussey-Terrace dorm.

According to Tilden, "if any lounge is done (renovated)" Tussey-Terrace lounge will receive the highest priority of any dorm.

Tilden added that he would like to handle the renovation of the lounge just like the renovation of Cloister's Ranch. He would like to see funds for the renovation provided by the school and the plans and work coming from the students.

The lounge has become a popular site for major campus parties over the past few years, resulting in complaints from dorm residents over the delapidating condition of the facility.

One of the major problems includes poor post-party clean-up. Tilden stated he has contacted the maintenance department and they have offered to supply the dorm with better cleaning apparatus

Surprise! It's Mountain Day

by Patty Rauschenberger

The original tradition of Mountain Day was to surprise students and faculty with a day off from books and classes. Recently, however, this element of surprise has not existed. The policy has been to choose two dates for Mountain Day with the second being a rain date. The problems with this system comes from the numerous pre-parties and damage that occurs the night before a scheduled Mountain Day. Furthermore, if it does rain and Mountain Day is postponed a school day has been lost giving the students two days off.

A new change has been made in hopes to eliminate these problems by establishing a two week period in mid October when Mountain Day can be held. No pre-arranged date will be set. Possible days for Mountain Day would be Tuesdays, Wednesdays, or Thursday.

This would give the Mountain Day Committee six possible dates to work with thus eliminating the rain date. The committee would then watch the weather forecast in order to choose the best day. If it should rain only the Committee would know of the cancellation and school would carry on as usual.

Wayne Justham, Director of Programming, said this change has the "support of the faculty" and hopes this will increase student participation.

Hense, next year when you wake up one October morning, not wanting to go to class, a big sign may greet you at the Cateteria saying, "Mountain Day is today."

At the start of a three-day emergency meeting of Islamic foreign ministries Pakistani president General Mohammed Zia ul-Huq claimed the Soviet military intervention of Afghanistan threatened world peace and the security of small nations elsewhere. Editorial:

For the past few years the condition of the Tussey-Terrace lounge has gone unnoticed, or has been ignored by Administrators of the College. That is until recently. Within the past few months pressure from dorm senators, resident assistants and dorm residents had been exerted on the office of student services and the residential life committee of student government to assess the deteriorated condition of the lounge.

But more importantly the students are requesting the aforementioned offices to assess the needs of the students. The lounge is divided into two sections — carpeted and uncarpeted. While both sections of the lounge have taken a turn for the worse the dilapidated condition of the carpeted lounge disturbs the residents the most.

Unlike the carpeted dorms of Lesher and South, it is permissable to schedule a party for the carpeted lounge of Tussey-Terrace and serve beer. The residents of Tussey-Terrace want to change this. They are endorsing a policy that would close off the carpeted section of the Tussey-Terrace lounge during parties.

The residents are obviously reacting to the former stand of the administration which regarded any funding for renovation of the carpeted area as frivolous — claiming if steps were to be taken to improve the lounge, the lounge will once again deteriorate to it's present condition due to the large parties that take place in the lounge. And the residents obviously agree.

Although Dr. Tilden believes a facility to accomodate larger parties (like Tussey-Terrace) is needed, the larger lounges in Sherwood (now Catharsis, and originally refurbished for this reason) and South can certainly handle larger functions.

Dr. Tilden feels certain a viable solution can be found to insure that groups who sponsor parties in the Tussey-Terrace Lounge which includes the carpeted area, clean-up properly following their function. Perhaps, but as the current situation attests, this is doubtful. Most of the groups who sponsor parties in the lounges of Tussey-Terrace are non-dorm residents. They have few reasons to possess an interest in the condition of the lounge.

Therefore, the most viable solution seems to be to close-off the carpeted lounge. Since when did partying become a priority of the administration? Especially where Tussey-Terrace is concerned?

(The following is a political message paid for jointly by the Idiots for Alexander Haig and the Society for the Advancement of Slander. It is their sincere hope that you swallow this whole thing. It is by no means intended to be funny. It's pretty supid, but what do you expect from Idiots?)

Hi, i'm Jimmy Carter and it looks unavoidable that i'm going to be President again! Yippie! The American public has been getting so bored of late that it was actually paying attention to politics! Imagine that! When people start doing that sort of thing it is inevitable that all young anal-retentive voters adhere to political beliefs opposing those of their parents. This is known as the Generation Gap. What we need in this case is a nice war!

Hi-ho, hi-ho!
It's off to war we go!
Pick up your gun,
Let's have some fun!
Hi-ho, hi-ho!

The most effective and time-tested cure for a generation gap is to have a war. This will not only unite everyone against a common enemy and kill off some of our unruly youngsters, it will also make me look great as a President: "Don't change horses in the middle of the race," or something like that.

Hi-ho, hi-ho!
To Pakistan we go!
Afghanistan,
And then Iran!
Hi-ho, hi-ho!

Wouldn't it be great if we could just get Russia to take over Iran and maybe Saudi Arabia? We could go in there and take it all over, and rename our country OPEC. It would definitely protect any interests we might have anywhere in the world. With all that oil we might even be able to balance our trade deficit! And think of how much fun we could have doing it!

Hi-ho, hi-ho!
To Persia we shall go!
There's oil and more
As spoils of war!
Hi-ho, hi-ho!

The least we could do is to get some governments to be on our side again! Our country has lost a lot of friends in the last fifteen years. We almost lost our enemies, too. But thanks to the recent stupid moves of the USSR, we are now in a position where we can pretty well do as we please, and make friends in the process.

Dear Editor:

There is a strange phenomena on this campus. Just the sound of one word can strike fear in the hearts of many students here at J.C. What is this "thing" that causes so many to cringe with the sound, to fearfully anticipate rising in the morning? What is this mysterious science to which many have devoted their lives? ORGANIC. Yes by just using this simple three-syllable word many a heart beats faster . . . and others may stop.

There are many of us however who do not understand this "science" nor fully appreciate the awesome power it has over our peers. We cannot deal with the simple word "ORGANIC." We

This week's question was:
Are you in favor of an American boycott of the 1980 summer Olympics?

Yes, I support the American boycott of the 1980 Olympic games because I feel the United States and the American people should pull together and take a more defensive stand against the Soviet Union.

Mike Drauschak '80

No, I believe that this event should be held regardless of the political aspects of the country. By boycotting the Olympics America might be further aleinating itself from the rest of the world.

Kim Swanson '81

No, I would not support the boycott, I feel that the Olympics games should not be affected by international politics.

Elizabeth Martin '82

Yes, I feel that ignoring what's going on in the world and allowing Russia to get away with what they are doing is hypocracy. I feel moving the Olympics to a neutral site is the only condition under which the U.S. should participate.

Chris Manion '83

No, because I don't think that politics should be involved in sports events. The athletes train too hard to let our political problems interfere.

Hi-ho, hi-ho!
Tehran's the place to go!
We'll change the law,
And crown the Shah!
Hi-ho, hi-ho!

If any American goes to Moscow this year, it may not be to win a Gold Medal, but rather to get a Purple Heart. Hopefully our Russian counterparts won't come to Lake Placid with similar ploys in mind. And maybe we'll be really lucky and the Kremlin will forget to push the mushroom cloud button!

Hi-ho, hi-ho!
Olympics? We say no!
The Moscow Games
Go up in flames!
Hi-ho, hi-ho!

Just think! We could overrun the whole of Russia, and really have a blast! Imagine the friends we'd have then! Wouldn't that be fun! I, as President of the United States of America, would become the most powerful man of all time! And maybe Rosalyn would like me again. She might even stop going on trips and making ridiculous campaign promises in my name! Just picture it — Nobody could beat me at election time!

Hi-ho, hi-ho!
A-voting we shall go!
We hate the rest
'Cause Jimmy's best!
Hi-ho, hi-ho!

Do you like my campaign song? Billy made it up, with a little help from my Mama, Lady Lillian. Amy says she's going to write a verse, too. And Jeanie, my sister, is going to go on an evangelistic tour. My initials will help me out in that respect. Besides, i never drive cars off bridges.

Ho-hum, ho-hum.
Ted Kennedy is dumb.
He drives and drinks,
His driving stinks.
Ho-hum, ho-hum

I really like that verse. Billy was really inspired! I can never thank him enough. I think i'll get him some whiskey — he writes pretty well with just beer, but maybe he'll do even better with some good stuff. Amy too, for that matter . . . She always a little more creative than Billy. Ah, but just wait until we all have free caviar and vodka . . .

But i digress. Let me pledge my continued perseverance. I hereby promise lower taxes, increased Social Security benefits, more federal programs, less military spending, lower gasoline prices, free college education, lower crime rates in all cities, free beer, a two-day work week, and bigger peanuts. You don't believe me? Just ask Rosalyn. She has all the details.

Oh yeah, one other thing — if you don't vote for me, you're making a big mistake. See, i'm holding fifty of your friends and relatives as hostages in Iran, and i'll have them all killed if i lose.

Ha-ha! April Fool! You really believed it, didn't you? I guess i ought to watch what i say; people could vote for me for the wrong reasons!

Godspell Coming

by Tricia Abbott

On March 14, 1980, Student Government will present the musical production Godspell, performed by the Daedalus theatre company in Oller Hall.

Student Government is subsidizing the programs as a "service to students," in order to keep the cost of tickets reasonable. The sum of $3,000 is being allocated from the special projects fund through the speaker fund in order to provide the Juniata campus with this event. Chairman of the special committee organizing this project, Don DiArmitt, says "they are hoping for a sell-out crowd."

This is the first year tht Daedalus is presenting Godspell. Previous performances nationwide over the past seven years include, Dracula, The Diary of a Madman, and most recently the group toured the Royal Shakespeare Company's Sylvia Plath and New York comedy hit Vanities. They have performed at various colleges including Rutgers, Wheaton, and Hofstra Universities.

Admission to the event will be $2.00 for all members of the Juniata community and slightly more for non-college members.

Out & About

By Anita Moore

A place frequented by many Juniata College students is the Original Italian Pizza shop in downtown Huntingdon. It is located on Washington Street in the center of the business district.

OIP offers a fourteen and a sixteen inch pizza with the usual variety of toppings including pepperoni, sausage, anchovies, and mushrooms. The party of four I was with enjoyed the large pizza with extra cheese.

Tom Concilus and Bob Blackwood, two J.C. students, sampled the restaurants subs and tossed salads and found them to be filling and fresh. Another student, Yael Goldschmidt, had a chef's salad and described it in much the same way. The restaurant also offers spaghetti and lasagne dinners and meatball and sausage subs.

The prices at OIP are relatively inexpensive considering our group of four ate for under fifteen dollars including 32 ounce soft drinks.

The Original Italian Pizza shop hasn't much to offer in the atmosphere department but is recommended for any student looking for an inexpensive Italian meal in the local area.

McLane endorsed the draft for women by commenting the draft must "undeniably" include women.

FABULOUS POODLES — THINK PINK EPIC 36256

The Fabulous Poodles, although not quite fabulous, are indeed-at the very least — accomplished. Despite their disgusting title, the band should go a long way toward giving New Wave a good name. This band's literate in a way that hasn't been heard since the mid and late sixties. There aren't any real melodies in the Poodles' songs, but the arrangements and the energy of their performance make melody unneccessary. Melody would in fact be an unwelcome intrusion on their adventureousness. This adventureousness combined with a cynical sense of humor is what makes the Fabulous Poodles a group to be recognized.

Man With Money is a song written by the Every Brothers — the gist being "I'm nothing to my girl without money so I think I'll break into a store and steal me some." The Poodles' use of this song is an expression of third generation anger.

The Poodles' own material is cynical — and hilarious. Bionic Man is about a car crash victim who is transformed by a medical miracle into a freak with an ersatz body, Cossack Cowboy is a portrait of a disco stud (the disco stud is, as in real life, a flaming ass hole), Suicide Bridge considers the pros and cons of self-destruction, Anna Rexia, a hilarious tune, deals with the nervous disease (anorexia) in which people obsessed with the phantom of being overweight starve themselves to death, Vampire Rock is a satire on the audiences' devotion to the music, Any Port In A Storm is a frank description of a one-night-stand, and Pink City Twist, a deliberately monotonous instrumental with spoken inserts — slices three generations of rock and roll mediocrity.

All of the songs on the album retlect the band's ability to show the humor and ridiculousness in every-day occurences. Think Pink by the Fabulous Poodles is an album worth listening to and receives a B from Fresh Tracks.

Bus Service Continues

That Saturday buses to Penn State will continue to run was decided by the Juniata College Center Board on Wednesday, January 23. Trips will be made on February 2 and 9, and March 8, 15, 22, and 29. The charge will remain at one dollar each way. As pre-Christmas buses had some problems with overcrowding, busdrivers will, in the future, be instructed to limit the number of students they permit to board the bus.

It was also decided that a Spring Semi-Formal will be held this year. The Faculty and Administration will be invited in an effort to promote a feeling of community on campus. Center Board also voted to sponsor the touring group Comedy Tonight for early March.

There will be no Valentine's Dance this year. The Dance commity felt that, judging by the poor attendence of past years, the event would be a waste of time and money.

must have two in to deal with this phenomena. ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. We, the uninformed, now at least know where this discipline is based. But still we cannot really help. We can only guess at the pain it causes and lend an ignorant ear. For we (the uninformed, isn't it a pity?) cannot begin to understand chemical structures, alkylhalides, bases, acids, positive and negative charges, and the chemical structure of the Pill. Oh the list is endless. How we pity our classmates although our understanding of this science is zilch.

Will there ever be a cure for this "unsocial" disease? Will there people ever recover? Will the sixty or so students in "Wild Bill's" class ever see spring term. There and other questions will be answered next week when we deal with the problem "Howdy-Doody, man or myth?"

that textbooks can be ordered quickly and gotten in on time. This is also done so that the registrar's office can notify certain departments that more space has been found for their classes. The departments can in turn look at students' "pink slips" and set their priorities on whom will be admitted into the class first. Dr. Nolan suggests that students who have gotten "pink slips" should go to those classes the first day of Spring Term and if room is available, register that same afternoon in the Registrar's Office.

The larger freshman class did "throw off the age-old estimates" of the demand for classes, stated Nolan, especially during this third term when freshmen had all three free choices." Adjustments in teaching staff might also have to be made but this is up to the individual departments and Dean Hartman. These decisions are now being discussed, but according to Dr. Nolan, "In the ten years I've been here at Juniata, the faculty, Dean and President have been most cooperative in giving students the classes they want."

Held on a Monday this term instead of the traditional Wednesday, the registration date was changed because of a suggestion made by the Faculty and Curriculum Committee. Proposed to allow more time for book orders to be received and not to interrupt Wednesday field trips, Dr. Nolan has already decided to change future registrations back to Wednesdays in order to interrupt fewer classes. He had set up registration times for each class to overlap a two hour span but felt that this idea too, when held on a Monday during afternoon classes did not provide adequate time for registration.

I CAN EAT 100 EGGS.

Excessive behavior like this proves: (a) stick-to-it-tiveness, (b) strength of will, (c) the ability to pursue a goal (d) the exact opposite of what was intended.

Often people sense that it indicates the opposite. And what's true for eggs is true for booze. Showy drinking beyond a sensible limit makes the same point about a person. Someone who isn't sure of his manliness is overdoing it to try to prove otherwise.

And what about someone who drinks when he doesn't want to, just because of what others might think? Doesn't having strong qualities have a lot to do with setting your own values, making your own decisions, and being firm enough to stick to them? That's character, and that's what people respect.

The next time you drink to prove something, consider what you have just proven.

another of its assets. Students from Juniata pay the amount of money necessary to spend a year here (i.e. room, board, and tuition) while the foreign students do the same at their college. The only other necessary cost to the student is that of plane fare.

When students from Juniata arrive in a foreign country they each have a room and a bank account established in their names with enough money for them to live comfortably. Students are insured contact with a faculty member in their area of study so as to be able to more accurately deal with their specific needs. A student would also have contact with the family of the student he is "replacing" for the ten month period.

Obviously, students must have some foreign language fluency to be able to participate in the program since they will have to deal with actually studying within foreign language structure. If students have any thoughts at all about taking part in the Junior Year Abroad Program, they should plan on taking language courses both their freshmen and sophomore years.

All Class Night Changes Finalized

by John George

On Friday January 25, 1980, the All Class Night Steering Committee (ACNSC) met in the Blue Room in Ellis Hall to further discuss and iron out the final details of All Class Night (ACN), which will be held Friday April 18, 1980. Member sof the ACNSC present were Bob Reilly, Howard Crouch, Bruce Davis, Wayne Justham, Dawna Yannacci, Sue Esch, and Ned Erlich.

Currently on probation, ACN will be held on the Friday following the students' return from Easter break. That leaves only four days for the students to rehearse and practice their skits. Oller Hall will only be available Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights. On Tuesday night Alumni Hall might be used by the performers to practice. Friday is nonetheless a bad date, but all Fridays at Oller are filled until sometime next year, according to Wayne Justham.

Resolved at the meeting was that there will be a screening of each of the class scripts, a 30 minute time limit for each skit which is to be based on a literary theme, plus several guidelines previously approved by the Student Affairs Council.

These set guidelines proclaim that members of the Weight Lifting Club will use their discretion in disciplining any vociferous member of the audience. If this fails to alleviate the situation, a student services representative will take over. If it becomes necessary, audience members may be ejected.

The general prevailing rules are that there will be no smoking, eating, or drinking in Oller Hall. Swearing and general boisterousness will not be tolerated. Disallowed actions will not be allowed. These are actions that could possibly disturb or offend the audience who have the right to view the show without any interuptions. If any alcohol is found, school policy will be the final word.

Also resolved was that the buffet meal will be dropped in favor of a regular meal. Planned are cocktail parties in each of the dorms before ACN plus an all campus party afterwards.

You can save a lot of gasoline—and a lot of money—if you use the phone before you use your car.

By calling ahead, you can be sure the restaurant is open . . . the store has what you want . . . or the friend you want to visit is home—before you waste time, gas and money on an unnecessary trip. On the average, you waste about a dollar's worth of gas on every unnecessary trip—and just two wasted trips a week can cost you more than $100 worth of gas a year.

Saving energy is easier than you think, and with the rising energy costs we're facing today, it's never been more important. So the next time you pick up your car keys and head for the door, ask yourself whether a phone call could save you the trip—and the wasted gas.

Women B-Ball Team Keeps Rolling

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

After being derailed by the Scranton Royals, the Juniata women got back on the track with five straight victories including three last week. The Indians outscored their opponents 258-136 enroute to lifting their season record to 11-1.

On January 22, the Cursaders of Susquehanna entered Memorial Gym with a 0-3 record. They left with a 92-43 drubbing in the league encounter.

JC got off to a quick start on a Julie George bucket just 25 seconds into the game. The Tribe held their opponents scoreless until the 13:43 mark, when the score stood at 23-2. The lead was between 26 and 31 points throughout the half, with the score 50-19 at intermission.

Coach Nancy Latimore was able to substitute liberally throughout the game, with all 13 Indians seeing action. Twelve team members entered the scoring column, led by junior captain Julie George who moved into second place in career scoring with 722 points. She follows only senior captain Nancy Zinkham who has tallied 829 points.

The College Hill Gang set a new record for points — 92 — beating the record of 83 set last year against Kings. A new mark was also set for most free throws in a game — 28 — eclipsing the record of 27 set against Frostburg in this year's season opener.

George once again led the Indian attack, scoring 29 points and grabbing 16 rebounds. Aimee Brua chipped in 14 points and Zinkham added 7 caroms, two blocked shots, and four steals. Judy Pepoy also had four steals.

The 1-7 Mount Aloysius Mounties were the tenth team to fall victim to JC this year — a new record. Five other records fell in the 104-46 victory, including most points (beat the record set the previous game). The other new marks include points scored in a half — 53; winning margin — 58; 43 field goals (beat the 38 set last year against Kings); and 51.2% field goal percentage (43/84).

Nancy Zinkham opened the scoring by sinking two free throws just 21 seconds into the game, and the Mounties tied it 37 seconds later on a bucket. After a slow start, the Tribe built momentum and once again all 13 Indians saw plenty of playing time, 12 scoring in the lopsided victory. The half time score stood at 52-23.

Julie George excelled, scoring 27 points and snatching 23 rebounds. Nancy Zinkham followed with 16 points (4/4 from the charity stripe) and eight caroms. Terri Eckenrode hit on 6/7 from the floor for 12 points and Nancy Roach added five steals to the winner's stats.

The Shippensburg Raiderettes put their 7-3 record on the line against the Indians on Saturday, but they too lost to the mighty Indians. In a hard fought game, the JC Lady Dribblers pulled out a 62-47 victory. The Tribe didn't take control until the 9:55 mark, when the score was 13-10. Juniata ran off ten unanswered points; Shippensburg responded with two free throws at the 3:45 mark. The half time score was 26-16.

The Indians took to the court after the break, but could have stayed in the locker room. Partly due to bad passing, the Raiderettes pulled within two, 26-24, during the first four minutes. One minute later, the score was knotted 28-28. The Tribe recovered and outscored their opponents 16-4 during the next eight minutes of play.

Julie George led the scoring with 22 points and Aimee Brua added 16 tallies. Nancy Zinkham grabbed 14 rebounds and Julie George had 13 caroms. Zinkham also had four of the team's seven steals.

After the first twelve games, JC has outscored their opponents 861-590. That means the offense is scoring 71.8 points a game, while the defense has allowed only 49.2 points a game.

Coach Latimore has a lot to be proud of this year. "I was really pleased with the way we were able to maintain our poise when Shippensburg came back at us in the second half. We were able to build up the lead and eventually win the game. For a young team, it really says something that they are able to play with such poise. I was very pleased with the performance of our basketball team and quite proud of them."

The JC Lady Dribblers travel to Kings College this Saturday and to Bucknell on Tuesday as part of the long road swing. The next home game is on the 13th against York College.

Unnoticed Wrestlers Set Record

by Doug Williams

One year ago the Juniata wrestling team was in the midst of a 4-9-1 season, and not many people noticed. This year there still aren't too many people who know about the team, but their record is quite different.

With a win Tuesday night against Penn State's Dubois team, who the Indians' second team beat 39-7, the grapplers will set an all-time Juniata record with nine wins. Coach Bill Berrier feels that "at worst we'll be 10-5-1 for the season."

Why this apparently sudden success? Coach Berrier contends he could see it coming last year. He explained that while he had good talent in the lower weights (118 to 150 pounds), the upper weights, except at heavyweight, weren't strong enough to provide the points needed for wins.

This year, along with the solid strength of the lower weights, Berrier has added several freshmen with good high school backgrounds to the upper weights providing "a balanced team that is competitive at each weight".

The freshmen Berrier was talking about are Chris Young (167), Joel Beach (177), Keith Sherbine (190), and Rich Brown (190) who, when added to the veterans Bruce Amig (118), Bob Gay (126), Todd Roadman (134), Rob Funk (142), Joe Paskill (150), and heavyweight Dan Jendrzejewski, provide the balance the coach mentioned.

The talented squad lost their second match of the season last Saturday to the University of Pittsburgh at Johnstown by a wide margin which could have had a disheartening effect on the team. However, Berrier pointed out that UPJ was a Division II squad with four All-Americans, and so the loss, while disappointing, wasn't as bad as it sounded.

With the record for wins in hand, the team starts to look ahead to the MAC's. Here a team's season record that doesn't mean a thing and every squad has a chance to win.

Joe Paskill, MAC champ for the past two years and an All-American, looks strong for a repeat performance. He is presently 14-0 and according to Berrier "is in a class by himself".

The coach also named five other wrestlers who could do well, maybe even go all the way, depending on where they were seeded in the tournament. Berrier explained that seeding was determined by your individual season record and felt the closer to the middle you were, the better chance you had. The wrestlers with the best chances are Gay, Roadman, Funk, Young, and Jendrzejewski. If these wrestlers do well, the team could easily finish in the top three in the conference giving them some well-deserved publicity.

The grapplers have their last home meet next Tuesday night against Messiah college. Although Berrier acknowledged that Messiah was a tough squad, he felt that if the Indians got the fans to support their last home appearance the team would get a real lift.

So come out next Tuesday and see what could well be the best wrestling team Juniata has ever had. Give them the support, appreciation, and recognition they have deserved all year and boost them into the MAC's.

Chuba Ends Losing Streak

by Pat Conroy

The Juniata Basketball team won their first game in 1980 and it took 5 extra minutes to do it. Against Lycoming last week, JC won the contest 46-44 in overtime in a game nobody wanted to win. Nobody but sophomoe Joe Chuba. The 6'5" Chuba sank two foul shots with on second left in the overtime period to end JC's losing streak at ten.

The game was marred with poor shooting as both teams shot 32%. There were countless missed layups for both teams, and the turnovers seemed to indicate a lack of concentration. Lycoming had 16 turnovers, including two very untimely ones. Up by 4 points with three minutes to go in the game, the Warriors committed two mistakes to allow JC to tie the game at 42-42 with 2:28 left in the contest. Lycoming missed their next shot and Coach Pat Frazier opted to hold on to the ball for the last two minutes so as to take the last shot. This proved useless when with just 15 seconds remaining Juniata ran a play that fizzled and the missed attempt pushed the game into overtime. Chuba's heroics ended the game and he finished the game with 14 points. Help early on came in the guise of Dave Bender who got hot at the right time in the second half, led all scorers with 15 points.

With the streak gone, the Indians had to go up against the fourth best team in the nation at the Division III level. Coach Frazier, quoted after the Lycoming game as saying that the "defense is untouchable", proved to be the prophet of his own fate. Juniata went down to an ignoble 88-63 defeat. Although they were only down by seven points with 12:45 to go in the battle, JC lost control of the Lions. Albright got very hot, hitting 57% for the game and had 15 more rebounds than the JC squad. They really put it in high gear down the stretch, hitting mostly from outside. Four players had 15 points or more for Albright while Kerry Walsh led the Indians in scoring with 12 points. Dave Bender contributed 11.

JC is on the road all this week. Frostburg last night and at King's College Saturday afternoon.

Orators Excel

by Cathy Creswell

Ester Doyle's Oral Interpretation class has been giving an hour of readings the last two Wednesdays. These readings have been open to the public. The members of the class have presented their own personal reading selections.

Oral interpretation is a difficult art. The reader is not to perform his selection but is to present the work in an honest and open way that enhances the meaning of the selection. The reader should not be conscious of himself, only of the work he is portraying. The selfless attitude is difficult to achieve but the students who read did a good job of portraying the works and not themselves.

The voice is of primary importance. Tone, modulation and diction play an important part in the reading of literature. To this extent there were two students who I felt had excellent voices. Allison Keller and Rick Mayher. Both have clear voices and their diction was not slurred in their presentations. Although Rick's reading could have been a little slower and more thoughtfully, he did a good reading of Apple Picking by Robert Frost. And Allison Keller's reading of I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud by William Wadsworth was done with grace and control.

Robin Wilson's presentation of a selection from James Herriott's All Creatures Great and Small was also expertly done. Most impressive was her voicing of the Yorkshire dialect, however, at times she did appear to be performing the work rather than just presenting it.

Although not as dramatic in voice, Wendy Chamberlain's reading of My Last Duchess by Robert Browning was done well without any pretentiousness or overstatement.

The most dramatic and impressive work was done by Phil Jones and John Kuriyan in their reading from Julius Caesar. Phil Jones read the part of Cassius while John Kuriyan read the part of Brutus from Act IV, Scene III. At this point in the play Cassius and Brutus are arguing in front of their respective armies.

John Kuriyan displayed remarkable control over his voice and was able to raise his voice and lower it, seemingly without any effort. And though they were reading from a play, both John and Phil were able to bring out the meaning and richness of their separate characters without making it appear like they were doing a performance.

College Purchases New System

by Patty Rauschenberger

Installation of a new phone system has just been completed on Juniata Campus. Admittedly there are problems, as with any new change, but according to Mrs. Carolyn English, the college switchboard operator, "everyday we are learning more about the system." According to her, this phone system is "definitely a better system."

According to Mr. Bill Alexander, business manager, a study was done on the old system to help decide if a new system should be installed. The old system was 30 years old and had been in use at Juniata for 18 years. In the spring of 1978 the old system was failing to provide a dial tone 14 percent of the time. With a trend towards greater use this was presenting a lot of problems.

The new system is called a Dimension 400 by Bell Telephone. The cost of this system in the long run is less than the old system. The way this works is that the college is prepaying a perpetual lease over ten years. After ten years the payments will drop considerably. Right now the system costs $48.00 more than the old system, including first time service charges, but after the ten year period the phone system will cost $66.00 less than the old system.

The biggest advantage to this system is the increased efficiency it provides. Some new features include a three-way conference call, automatic call back, the ability to forward calls to other offices and each faculty member now has their own extension. The watts line has been greatly improved. No longer does Mrs. English have to record on paper every watts line call made and Admissions does not dominate the watts lines for three hours in the afternoon. Instead, everyone can make their own calls and a waiting list is kept automatically. When you are to use the watts line, your phone will ring.

Safety has also been improved by the new phone system. Phones have been installed in the Science

Appalachia In Concert

Appalachia, a four-man southern rock band, will perform in concert at Juniata College on Friday, Feb. 8, at 10:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

The band plays music from groups such as the Outlaws, the Eagles, the Marshall Tucker Band and the Beatles, as well as original works.

Well-known in the Harrisburg area for its enthusiastic performances in nightclubs, Appalachia made its debut regionally at The Pennsylvania State University's "Gentle Thursday."

The Juniata concert is sponsored by the college's ski club. Mick Stone, president of the organization, urges all rock 'n' roll fans to "come up to Oller Auditorium for excellent music and an excellent time."

Tickets can be purchased the week before the concert for $2 in the Lobby of Ellis College Center from 11:45 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. and from 5 to 6 p.m. They also will be sold at the Information Desk, also in Ellis.

Tickets will be available at the door the night of the concert for $2.50.

Mandatory Attendance Sparks Concern

by Mike Ford

Recently freshmen were required to attend both a night of One-Act plays and the Independant Eye's production of MacBeth. Many conflicts arose because of this required attendance, including that many upperclassmen were upset at not being able to purchase a ticket for the One Acts. In addition, many freshmen felt it unfair that they were required to attend.

Dr. Wilfred Norris, head of the Logic and Language staff that required the attendance, said that the purpose behind this was "to get them familiar with drama." Norris said that many of the freshmen have never seen live drama or had a dramatic experience before and providing this was the intention of the required attendance. More specifically, Dr. Norris stated that the One Acts, which were followed by class discussions, were to give freshmen a warm-up experience and a criteria to apply criticism to their second play, MacBeth, which was followed by a paper assignment. When asked if it was fair to charge the freshmen $3.50 for the plays, staff professor Janet Lewis said that they had been required to buy fewer books than in past years, and the cost of the plays was justified as simply being part of the total cost for course materials.

Dr. Norris added that when freshmen are required to go to such events, they acquire "some appreciation from it later on."

One of the obvious conflicts that arose was the availability of tickets. Many freshmen were involved in a last minute rush for MacBeth tickets, which, according to the staff, was their own fault. Logic and Language staff members stated that both play requirements were listed on the course syllabus, and frequent reminders were given to freshmen to purchase tickets ahead of time to avoid a last minute rush. Dr. Norris was particularly upset with the "rumors" that were spread about the unavailability of MacBeth tickets. Norris maintained that if people had come to the box office at 8:15, they could have gotten a ticket, for "at the last minute, we accomodated everybody." This last minute ticket sale did create a substantial delay in the starting time of MacBeth. Though one staff member said the 8:15 play started at 8:18. Norris admitted that there was at least a five minute delay.

In addition, it was obvious at both the One Acts and MacBeth that the audience was often restless and rude, a reaction many students expressed in their resentment of being required to attend. Logic and Language staff felt that "there are plusses and minuses on either side," and these

Editorial:

The mandatory freshmen attendance at recent cultural events on campus had resulted in speculation by members of all classes of the student body.

The aforementioned attendance is a requirement for freshmen who are presently enrolled in the revised Logic and Language course. As indicated on their syllabus for the course, the freshmen are required to attend the theatre department's presentation Yet Another Evening of One-Act Plays and the seventh Artist Series performance, MacBeth.

While it is admirable that the intent of this requirement was to familiarize the freshmen with the dramatic genre, several underlying problems arose as a result of this mandatory attendance. Most of these difficulties involved the evening of one-act plays.

One-hundred and sixty seats were available for each evening performance of the one-acts. With a total of approximately 400 freshmen enrolled in Logic and Language, and assuming all of these students obtained tickets to one of the four productions, only sixty seats were left for each evening performance to be divided among the remaining students, faculty, administration and staff.

Upperclassmen were particularly irritated with this situation. Tickets were virtually impossible to come by. And adding to the dismay of not being able to purchase a ticket were the moans of freshmen which expressed disguntled feeling resulting from the required attendance. Thus, many students who possessed a sincere interest in the plays were not able to attend because many students who did not want to go had to go.

The mandatory attendance also posed a problem for the actors and actresses involved with the one-acts. Several performers pointed out it was extremely difficult to perform to a disinterested audience.

With respect to the unavailability of tickets for upperclassmen one faculty member was quoted as saying "that's life" and "there are other plays" that they (upperclassmen) can attend. This seems rather strange coming from a member of the faculty. For years the Juniata theatre department, as well as other academic departments, complained of empty seats during performances with cultural significance. Due to this condition students were regarded as apathetic.

In the case of the one-acts there was a sincere interest among certain segments of the student population to attend such events and they were indirectly denied seats.

Prior to the MacBeth production many freshmen discovered it was difficult to obtain tickets, thereby resulting in several unexpected and unnoticed problems. Rumors were circulating that upperclassmen were "scalping" MacBeth tickets to freshmen. One freshmen reported that once inside many freshmen walked out of the hall with their ticket stub and a stub of a friend who remained inside. Once outside the extra stub was given to a student who was unable to secure a ticket to the performance. An action such as this could lead to overcrowding in the building, resulting in a safety violation.

With behaviour such as this, it is doubtful that the benefit of observing the performance out-weighs the means by which one must go in order to see the production.

Our Readers Speak — an article sent in by Mrs. Rosalyn C., a Washington, D.C. housewife, about her favorite (only) subject of show-and-tell.

I possess a unique animal: Half-kitten, half-lamb. I inherited her from my father. When my father had her, she was more lamb than cat; but she has become more trained and fully-developed since I have had her, and now she seems to an equal mixture between the two. She has the head and claws of a cat, while she is the size and shape of a lamb. Her wild, twinkling eyes come from both breeds. Her fleece is soft and short, and her movements range from prowling and slinking to gamboling.

In the sun, on the windowsill, she purrs and arches her back; out in the meadows she frolics like crazy — you can hardly catch her. While she runs away from cats, she will attack a lamb. She likes to walk the back alleys in the moonlight — that is her preferred domain. She knows that is where she can go if she does not want to be found. She does not know how to meow, and she is thoroughly disgusted by rodents. She can lie around for hours on watch by the chicken coop, but she has never had the ocassion nor the temptation to kill any of the birds.

This is because I keep her well-fed. I feed her on sugared milk, the diet which suits her best and which she loves. She takes long, large gulps of it through her carnivore's teeth. Naturally, she is a big attraction for the children. They come and see her every Sunday morning. I hold the little beast on my lap and all the little

There is a certain obstinance "innate" in the human character. Often our behavior is channelled in direct opposition to something we're told we must do. Never are we so motivated to do something as we are when we're told not to do it. (This leads me to wonder if procrastination would be as prevalent if deadlines were abandoned.)

Our obstinance stems mainly from a reaction against a perceived outside threat, be it real or illusionary. These threats appear to be challenging our freedom of choice, our individuality. Sometimes our "reactance" against these threats is justified, sometimes our obstinance is good and healthy . . . but sometimes there is no threat, but just pointless human obstinance accompanied by ignorant, often destructive behavior.

Those who were present at the one act plays this week might be acquainted with this latter type of behavior. Apparently there was a particular group of "adults" who were required to attend the one act plays. Now, while not all of us would see this stipulation as a fate worse than death, some of these 400 did. Not only was their apathetic behavior unsettling to the actors and the rest of the audience, but their immature comments during the plays showed their ignorance as well as their lack of respect for the theatre and for their fellow Juniata students. What's so ironic about the whole thing is that some of these 400 could have enjoyed themselves if the plays had not been required.

This group of 400, the majority of whom were so involved with reacting against a perceived threat upon their freedom of choice, were so wrapped up in being "cool" that they missed out

Perplexing Puppets Perform Poorly

by Spencer

I don't like writing bad reviews, but after having seen the Independent Eye's production of MacBeth on January 30th, I walked away with mixed emotions. I was not really sure that what I had seen was a performance of MacBeth at all. In fact, I doubt that Shakespeare would have recognized the performance as one of his plays.

To begin with, there were only three parts that were actually played by human beings — those of the three witches. The rest of the parts were played by puppets, with the three players supplying the movements and voices. The set looked like an above-ground swimming pool with one side cut away. Ribbons were strung around and over the set in the shape of a star. The lighting was dim, probably so one could feel the mood of despair present in the play, and also so that the audience could try to forget that the puppets were being held and controlled by the players.

I'm still not sure if the puppets themselves were meant to show the control the witches might have had over the other characters. This could have been the motive for using puppets, but if it was, it failed miserably. All the puppets managed to do was confuse the audience. Half the time I couldn't tell which puppet was supposed to be talking, and the other half I wasn't sure which characters were supposed to be present on stage.

The lighting and background music were effective in setting the mood of the play, but at times the lighting was so dim I couldn't even see the puppet let alone the person operating it. This also led to confusion.

The meaning of the star was vague at best. Perhaps it represented the emergence of MacBeth's ambition. Perhaps it didn't. I'm frankly not sure that it was even meant to be a symbol. As with the rest of the play, it proved to be exceedingly confusing.

The play was not all bad news, though. If one had relatively extensive knowledge of the play before he or she saw it, the methods for setting the mood of the play would have been interesting to analyze. The dancing movements of the players were also effective in conveying the emotional essence of the play, but probably washed out as useless detail for one who didn't understand the play before he or she entered Oller.

Being relatively familiar with MacBeth, I found the Independent Eye's interpretation of the play interesting but ineffective on the whole. This is because the very methods that were supposedly being used to enhance the meaning behind the production, proved to confuse the audience to the point that the events of the play were lost in the shuffle. A thorough knowledge of MacBeth was essential for a meaningful interpretation of the performance, and that, I feel, should not be the case in a play of this sort; the play must first be effectively communicated to the audience at its most basic levels before additional levels of communication are attempted. It is this primary duty that I believe the Independent Eye ignored and one I hope they will pay more attention to in the future.

disturbances, though quite unfair to actors and interested audience members, were outweighed by the positive aspects of seeing the play.

Perhaps the most disgruntled students in the situation were the many upperclassmen who were denied seeing the One Acts because the tickets were sold out. The One Acts ran for four nights with 180 seats a night, 400 of which were sold to freshmen, leaving a maximum of 80 seats a night for the rest of Juniata's 850 students. When asked her feeling concerning upperclassmen who couldn't get One Acts tickets, Professor Janet Lewis said that they were "denied, unfortunately, this one time," but "that's life," and "there are other plays" that they can go to. Dr. Norris "hoped we could have more than four performances" so that more students could see the One Acts, but admitted that this would have overworked the actors. Despite these conflicts, Norris concluded by saying that if the One Acts happen at the right time again next year, the Logic and Language staff would plan on requiring freshmen to go again.

kids in the neighborhood surround me. The little girls just think she's wonderful.

The little ones always ask me the strangest questions, the kind nobody can answer: "Why is there only one animal like that in the world? Why should you be the one to possess her? Were there ever any animals like her before? What will happen to her when she dies? Isn't she lonesome? Why doesn't she have any babies? What's her name?"

I can not be bothered to answer their pointless questions; I am quite happy just showing them what I have. Several times the children have brought cats with them, and one time they even brought two lambs. But, for all their expectations, these encounters provoked no signs of recognition. The pets regarded each other with the greatest of calm: They accepted their existence reciprocally as gifts of their Creator.

When she is on my lap, my little beast ignores all fear and aggression. She is next to me, glued to me. That is when she feels the most comfortable. She feels attached to the family that raised her. It is not so much that she is extraordinarily loyal, but rather that she has that instinct shared by all animals who, having been nursed by their mothers but raised by man, have perhaps not one single companion in the whole word and, consequently, she considers the protection afforded her by our family to be sacred.

I cannot keep myself from laughing when I see her sniffing at my pantlegs. She wriggles wildly when I catch her between my legs and she cannot get away from me. Not happy being merely lamb and cat, one might say she would like to be a dog! One day, I could not resolve some of my business difficulties and the resulting problems — it happens to all of us, occasionally — and, wishing I could get away from it all, I went home and sat down in my luxurious easy chair, my little critter lying on my lap. Looking down at her, I saw tears streaming down her fuzzy little face. Were they my tears? Were they hers? This cat who had the heart of a lamb, did she possess human ambition as well? . . . I did not inherit a lot of things from my father, but this one thing I am proud to show off.

My pet has a mixture of two very different ways of playing — that of a cat and that of a lamb. Sometimes I think her skin must fit her a bit too tightly. She often jumps up beside me on the arms of my chair, puts her front paws on my shoulder, and sticks her muzzle in my ear. You could almost say she was trying to talk to me! As a matter of fact, after doing this, she stands in front of me and looks into my eyes as if to read my impressions of what she said to me. Just to make her happy, I always act as though I understand what she said by shaking my head. Then she jumps up and down and runs in circles around me.

Maybe the butcher's knife would be a blessing in disguise for her, but I feel as though I ought to keep her away from that kind of an end. Is she not an heirloom, part of my heritage? Therefore, she must await the day when she passes away by herself, even though she sometimes looks at me with human eyes, intelligent eyes, which beg for a reasonable act. But I still need something to show to the little ones in the neighborhood, in any case.

The Boomtown Rats-The Fine Art Of Surfacing Columbia 36248

The Boomtown Rats appear as trendy, shameless lightweights upon first glance, but a closer look reveals that this first impression does not deviate far from the truth. But the other side of the coin reveals that they do not — unlike some of their more sanctimonious New Wave colleagues — pretend to be anything more than six clowns out to make a fast dollar. Their music reflects that feeling, being functional while sprinkled with bits and pieces of whatever is "in" at the moment. But because they're clever and energetic quite often (purely by accident) the results are marvelous.

Everything here is imitative, fashionable, fits together and it even works well. Even I Don't Like Mondays, which is brilliantly commercial in its attempt to be controversial and UNcommercial, tends to say that the Rats will hold up better over the next ten years than Pere Ubu Or Devo or the like.

Some of the best cuts on the album include Keep It Up, (quite

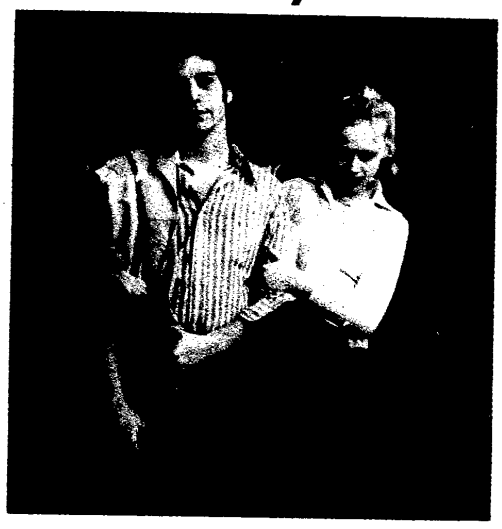
'Alcohol makes her feel sexy.'



Part of being attractive has to do with being alive and present, being with someone, not half-gone.

Learn to question the myths about drinking.

A bit of alcohol can make being together more pleasant for many people. Too much of it can also make those some people extremely unpleasant. It's hard enough to see yourself as others do when you're clear, let alone high. You may think you're coming across as warm and witty, when you're being embarrassing and obnoxious.

Alcohol may make you feel more confident, less anxious, less up-tight about being close. But as Shakespeare said about excessive drinking, it provokes the desire, but diminishes the performance.

Those who love you want you to take care of yourself. How you are is part of how they are.

To Go Or Not To Go

by Rob Morris

The 1980 Olympics are almost at hand and it seems the realization has not yet dawned upon us that this is the most crucial year in the existence of the modern-day Olympics. President Carter has expressed the sentiment that if the Soviets do not withdraw their troops from Afghanistan, he would strongly recommend the boycott of the Olympics in Moscow by the American athletes.

The statement and its meaning is clear; the Olympics are ultimately a tool of politics. There are those who argue, with staunch support, that in today's world the ink of politics colors all facets of life. Sport and politics have become so intertwined that to deny it is to wear rose-colored glasses. Will Munich ever be forgiven for the terrorists who turned it into a memorial to eleven athletes in 1972? Will South Africa ever forget the 1976 Olympics when they weren't permitted to participate? Critics point to such instances to indicate that politics and the Olympics cannot be separated. How easily the struggle for supremacy in each Olypmics is shown, not just by the athletes, but by the eagerness with which each country totals its athletes' medals. Politics surely plays a part by funding and supporting the participants that represent each country, but unfortunately the role it plays has come to dominate and thus obscure the significance of conducting an Olympic competition.

Thus there are those of us in the opposite camp that believe sport should be separated and transcend the politics of each nation. In its conception, the Olympics were meant to be a showcase, and the reward of the Greeks was to the individual, who represented himself. And yes, it is true that this idea may no longer be held in high esteem, but that only seems to indicate that the Olympics are in need of a critical review and a subsequent restructuring.

It makes sense to this writer that if the Olympics are a vehicle of the political machine, the International Olympic Committee should be the party of effect the initial separation. It is possible to imagine a time in the future when all athletes will be considered neutral in the Olympics, and all remuneration from the Games, if not already located in a permanent neutral site, to be set in a private Olympic fund.

The bottom line in the present suggested boycott is that all is to be sacrificed in the face of any chance of a war. No one can argue that human life is precious above all else, but if sport is to be used as a mechanism by governments, then sport no longer exists, only politics in disguise.

Women Up Streak To Seven

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Indians are still on the rampage defeating Frostburg State and Kings College during the first half of the road swing.

Despite off shooting and an unusually flat defense, the Juniata Lady Cagers managed to pull out a 75-68 win down in Maryland. Fortunately, JC had plenty of opportunity to score from the foul line.

The Tribe's press was also quite ineffective so Coach Nancy Latimore dropped in early in the game. JC somehow took a 40-27 lead into the lockerroom at the half.

After the break, The College Hill Gang built the lead to 20, before mentally relaxing. The Bobkittens also switched from man-to-man to a zone defense. Those two almost proved too much for the young Indians.

Frostburg cut the lead to just four, 65-61, with just over five minutes remaining. The Bobkittens' generosity then took over. Juniata hit on 29/40 from the charity stripe (15/20 in the final period) for 72.5%. Their opponents hit on 52%. The 29 points via free throws set another Juniata record.

Both teams had poor shooting nights — the Lady Dribblers hit 32% from the floor, while Frostburg hit 36% of their shots. Judy Pepoy led all shooters with 20 points. Other Indians in double figures were Julie George with 18 tallies, Aimee Brua who chipped in 16, and Nancy Zinkham with 14 more points for the winning cause. George also led the rebounding, grabbing 19.

On Saturday night, the Blue and Gold travelled to Wilkes-Barre to face the Monarch's of Kings College in the second game of the men's/women's doubleheader. The Indians won their 13th game against one loss by a 64-51 score.

Once again the defense, and particularly the press, proved unequal to the task at hand. The Indians switched from the full court press to a half-court press early in the game, before finally abandoning it all together. Sloppy play was popular for both teams — the College Hill Five managed 36 turnovers, while the Monarchs gave the ball away 42 times.

The half time score stood at 29-19 in favor of the victors. Julie George led the Indian attack with 21 points and 24 rebounds. Terri Eckenrode added 10 points and Nancy Zinkham grabbed 14 caroms.

Juniata placed several players on the MAC standings for the week ending January 26. (The standings after last week's play were not available at press time). It is based on MAC games only.

Julie George was fifth in scoring with a 19.8 average, and sixth in rebounding with 11.8. Nancy Zinkham was seventh in rebounding with 10.5. Aimee Brua was sixth in field goal percentage with a .486, followed by Nancy Zinkham with 87.5%. Zinkham was also second in free throw percentage with 87.5%, Terri Eckenrode was fourth with a .778, and Julie George was ninth with a 70% effort.

The Indians are also currently on top of their division with a 2-0 record, and are ranked sixth in the eastern region. If they can win their division, they will host the first MAC play-off game. They will also host a first round game of the eastern regional play-offs, if they remain in the top six of the standings.

JC faced the Bison of Bucknell Tuesday night and will close out the road swing Saturday night at Lycoming in the final divisional contest. The Indians return to the home court on Wednesday, when they host York College in another women's/men's doubleheader. Tip-off is at 6:00.

Indians Split Week

by Patrick Conroy

Juniata College's basketball team had their hottest night of the season last week. JC shot 70% (28 for 40) to blow out Frostburg State 65-46. The Indians shooting was attributed to better shot selections. They jumped ahead early and never relinguished the lead. The Bobcats, who JC beat twice this year to bring their record to 5-12, cut the lead to two points at the half 30-28. The Tribe's biggest lead was six points until the final 5 minutes. With the score 52-46, Juniata scored the last 13 points of the contest.

Although JC had 23 turnovers, it was obviously overwhelmed by their 70% shooting. Scott Johnson was the hottest of all shooters, hitting 7 of 8 shots from the field and scoring 16 points. Scott Lehigh added 10 points, while the Indians kept up their hot shooting at the line, connecting on 9 of 11.

At King's on Saturday afternoon, King's came out on fire. Hitting 11 of their first 12 shots, the Monarch's opened up a 9-0 lead and did not look back. They won 61-54 but Juniata did manage to cut the lead to 4 points. At one point JC trailed 51-38 but they scored ten points to King's one. It was here that costly turnovers and an untimely cool hand halted the Indian comeback.

Kerry Walsh had his highest point production of the year with 12 points, hitting 8 of 15 from the field and 5 of 6 from the line. Joe Chuba hit 6 of 11 to add 12 points. Roger Arnold and Scott Johnson each had 7 rebounds to lead JC on the boards. As a team, the Indians cooled off from the last game, shooting 43% from the field.

Juniata opened a three game final home-stand last night against Elizabethtown. Saturday they go up against Shippensburg State.

But it's time to play fair with this majority of the 400. Why should they be told to go and attend some function they might have no interest in? If they are in college, they are assumed to be adults who are able to make rational decisions for themselves. It's a reasonable argument, but it fails to explain or excuse any of the childish behavior that was displayed during those evenings of the one acts.

If you of the 400 are going to react against an impossed threat upon your freedom, react against required attendance and required classes, and at least show some guts or maturity during your acts of rebellion. Don't come if it bothers you that much — if you believe it to be so unfair. Either that or play along with the game and don't ruin everyone else's evening.

(Note: Let us not delude ourselves and think that this body of 400 is the only group which reacts pointlessly to requirements. SVS is still plagued with shrugs of apathy and we're seniors. I'd be interested to see the enthusiasm toward this course and toward Language and Logic if they were not required courses. Then our freedom would not be on the line.)

self-explanatory) with sexual overtones, When The Night Comes, also with sexual overtones is dealing with the fantasies of office workers, Having My Picture Taken, a synchronization of man and machine, and Nice And Neat, a song dedicated to religion and/or lack of it.

All in all The Fine Art Of Surfacing isn't really a fine art at all but rather a smooth attempt at commercialism and a good attempt at that. This is one album that is definitely worth a listen and receives a B from Fresh Tracks.

Swanson Re-elected

The Juniata College radio station, WKVR, held its annual election for the upcoming year of business. Each candidate, in front of a sparse audience of radio personnel, presented his or her own view on radio procedure and the way the station should be run.

All of the opinions expressed were unique in that they reflected the candidates position on the subject. However, some views displayed too much of a liberal tone, and these plans of action were shot down at the counting of the ballots. It seemed that the attitude chosen showed little deviation from the current practices at the radio station.

In store for WKVR are some minor changes; particularly in the Business Department, where abuse of normal practices and outright ineptitude ruled previously. Mark Coakley, the new Business Manager, plans to bring the accounting books back into a respectable state.

Jeff Boulton, who was the previous Business Manager, will be helping Mark with the books to alleviate the many problems that have arisen due to the carelessness of the manager who took over before Jeff.

Laundry Service Reviewed by SG

by Tammy Helwig

One of the worst chores of any college student is doing laundry. Lately, this has been compounded by the fact that when students decide to do wash, they are often prevented from it because some, or at times the majority, of the machines are broken. Machines get broken two ways. The first is that the machines break because of mechanical malfunction. And secondly, the machines are damaged by students. Many times the damage done by students is accidental but sometimes the damage is purposeful and occurs while someone is simply taking out anger on the machine. When students attempt to fix a machine to work, free, they also are taking a risk of breaking it. The damage may occur while the person is fixing it or afterwards it may provoke a malfunction.

Student Government is trying to help alleviate this problem. They are in the process of working with the company who services the machines to get a better line of communication going between the school and the company. When a machine breaks, the student should notify his dorm senator or RA and they will call the physical plant to report the damage. When money is lost because of one of the machines students should go to the information desk for refunds.

Tussey-Terrace Students "Fed Up"

On Wednesday, Feb. 6, the Residential Life Committee of Student Government, along with Dr. Arnie Tilden, dean of students, associate dean of students Susan Twombley and director of programming Wayne Justham met with the residents of Tussey-Terrace Dorm to discuss the possible renovation of the lounge. The lounge is divided into two sections, carpeted and uncarpeted.

The carpeted portion had been previously abused, according to the dorm's residents, by organizations and individuals who had sponsored campus and private parties.

The residents of Tussey-Terrace are "fed up" with the damage to the residence hall by persons who they believe attend the parties and then roam the halls after the parties.

The residents expressed that they wanted the carpeted area to be restricted from the campus parties and just to be used by the dorm residents. They stated, in petitions and verbally at the meeting, that the dorm has no area comparable to the lounges in other residence halls.

They maintain that the room's furniture is constantly being thrown out of the lounge to make room for the upcoming party. The residents want to renovate the lounge by obtaining new furniture and carpeting, but maintained that the area should not be used by outside clubs and individuals, even if a deposit is taken to guard against damage when the lounge is signed out.

The Residential Life Committee will review both sides of the issue on Feb. 13 and will decide whether the carpeted lounge will be restricted to organizations and individuals who want to sponsor parties. Dr. Tilden added that he wanted the decision to be a fair one, and that many options are available for discussion and possible implementation.

The Residential Life Committee will be stressing to organizations that other lounges are available for social functions as alternatives to Tussey-Terrace lounge in an attempt to reduce the number of parties sponsored in that lounge.

Bank Fees Explained

Lately there have been on the Juniata campus many deragatory remarks directed towards the Student Bank and its enforcement of the "10 cents per check-cashed" rule.

Many students on the Juniata campus as of late have been expressing their dismay or dislike towards the Student Bank in Ellis Hall. The bank, located next to the student Post Office for increased efficiency has been charged 10 cents for each personal check that is cashed.

Mr. William Alexander, the business manager, states that the charge, although quite minimal, is used to help cover such costs as a new accounting machine, at least one full-time salary, and processing. The bank, however, operates at a loss and the deficit is subsidized by the college.

The reason the Student Bank charges 10 cents and the accounting office does not is that Mr. Alexander and the college regard the bank as a special service for specific use by the student body for depositing and withdrawing monies. The bank, conveniently located at a place where students normally congregate, serves the student body.

The money that is gathered at the bank, i.e. the 10 cents charges and the $3.00 charge for opening an account are channeled into a general common fund that is applied to the college s expenditures, such as heating, which now costs as much as $40,000 per month. Payment of the college's employees also falls under this heading. The fund totals approximately $1200.

The money from this account is placed on a bidding block and is bid on by competing banks. The money then gathers interest and is either placed into the aforementioned common fund or transferred into negotiated certificates of deposit which are left untouched for 30 days. This account makes much more money and the rates of interest are seasonally adjusted.

Correction

In the article College Purchases New System, February 7, 1980-the figures should have read $6,600 and $4,800 and not $66.00 and $48.00. The Juniatian regrets this mistake.

Editorial:

The Residential Life Committee of Student Government is currently working on a proposition which concerns increased maintenance and repair for the laundry facilities of Juniata College. A proposition of this sort has been severly needed for some time and it should be supported and implemented at all costs.

With all the pressures and problems a college student must face, the added grief of laundry machines that do not work is not only frustrating, but expensive as well. The frustrations are obvious. One of the most entertaining events of a student's typical night is going to check a load of laundry that has mysteriously been washed in hot water (even though cold water has been selected) and magically turned into an incredible shade of red. Another joyful occurence is finding that one's clothes are all wet and three out of four dryers are broken, with the fourth being fought over by three screaming girls and a senior guy who has a hot date with a freshmen.

The expenses of inefficient facilities range from very small to, sometimes, rather large amounts. Losing thirty-five cents to a broken washing machine can be a traumatic experience for a student who just spent two hours turning the room upside down in order to find a quarter and another half-hour sweet talking a friend into a ten cent loan. Going beyond this common everyday experience, there are the increasingly numerous occasions where one's whole load of wash is ruined, including the only good pair of pants one could afford after paying off last term's tuition bill.

While the aforementioned difficulties are definite problems, perhaps the worst problem of all occurs when one tries to report a damaged machine. In an attempt to contact the appropriate source, one may start by talking to the R.A., who refers one to the dorm senator, who refers one to Student Services, who refers one to the Housing Office, who refers one to the Physical Plant, who refers one to a maintenance person in the physical plant, who refers one to the laundry machine company, who refers one to a secretary, who puts one on hold until they either hang up or die of starvation. Although most of these places never bother listening to the problem, if one is lucky enough to have this happen, the outrageous mission of describing which machine is afflicted becomes a mirage of ridiculously subjective descriptions. A typical interaction goes like this: "It's the third machine from the wall." "Which wall?" "The wall with the door." "Okay, which side?" "The right." "Now let me get this straight, it's the third machine from the right wall." "No, no, it's the third machine on the right, away from the wall with the door in it." "What dorm did you say were from. . . . ?"

But seriously, the current proposition being considered focuses upon not only the communication process involved in reporting damages, but also the easy identification of machines. It is the hope of the committee that the implementation of the proposed policy will result in increased maintenance as well as quick and efficient service. It is the hope of this newspaper that the proposition be upheld by all and formulated into a policy as soon as possible.

Tim awoke to the sound of his stomach grumbling. He ground his eyelashes together for all the crumbs to roll down his cheek until he could separate his eyelids. The sight that met his eyes was not a welcome one: The floor was buried under a layer of soiled clothing, every ashtray was overflowing with discarded oral gratification, empty beer bottles stood guard over every available square inch of table space, and the meager sunlight passed through a filter of nimbostratus cloudiness and nicotine-encrusted windowpanes. Tim's heart warmed for a moment, however, upon observing that there were no textbooks in sight.

"Hey, Saki!" he piped, in his favorite falsetto. A ball of grey fur poked out from under the down vest which lay in front of the cast-iron radiator. The cat regarded the tiny room in much the same spirit as had her owner, similarly pleased at the pronounced lack of studying paraphernalia.

Saki was reluctant to recall her preferred playmate's former condition. When she had first come into Tim's ownership as a young kitten, he was half-seriously studying to become an anatomical artist, one of those fellows who draw intensely intricate illustrations in pre-med textbooks and medical trade journals. This entailed his attendance in courses, which meant that at least three mornings a week Tim would leave her all alone in the third-floor Cloister cubicle with the overly-serious Saul, Tim's business major roommate. But under Saki's tutelage, Tim had changed his major from Anatomical Art to just plain Art, and had finally quit

Letter to the Editor:

The educational process is not simply an exercise in "freedom", not even in "free will." It is not simply a democratic process, nor a process engaged in by persons who are in all regards equals. I regret if these statements offend some of you, insult others or even enrage a few of you.

When an educational system is at its best it both prescribes and proscribes activities for the students and faculty alike. Neither group does simply what it wants to do. Each group expects of the other sensitivity, good judgement and civility, and expects to give the same in return. And each group works for the intellectual, social and personal growth of the student.

If students are asked to write a paper, read a book, see a play, perform an experiment in lab, take a field trip, engage in a research project, it is presumed that these are prescribed in order that the student gain some

As A senior who has taken SVS (Senior Value Studies) do you feel it was a worthwhile experience? Why?

Yes. SVS challenges the student to actually think instead of the usual memorizing and spitting the material back. It forces one to examine or search for values that are usually hidden.

Teal Telep '80

Yes, in a way. It forced me to put in writing some aspects of my values that had never received adequate attention. I strongly feel though, that the course should not be graded. Any grades awarded, other than pass/fail, would be too subjective.

Bill Beard '80

Yes. It gave me the opportunity to really take a good look at myself and what I believe in. It was well worth the time.

Bruce Rothenberger '80

Depending on the attitude taken by the students, this course has the potential to be one of the most interesting and challenging courses in Juniata's Liberal Arts Curriculum. I feel that examination of our values as they relate to situations which will be encountered throughout life, but which we are largely sheltered from in our college campus atmosphere, is an important aspect of our college education.

going to classes after about two weeks of spring term classes. He had also cached his none-too-numerous textbooks under his bottle-cap collection and Pass-Out game board on the floor of his closet, where mice could inflict their insistent dental damage upon them.

The furry feline shuddered at the memory of Tim's beginnings at Juniata College. He had been a pre-med student living in a cinderblock dormitorium amid echoes of bouncing basketballs and blown-out speakers blasting badly-beaten Bee-Gees albums.

After having relocated himself in his present den, Tim had felt his familiar longing for feline companionship. A fellow floormate's cat had recently given birth to a tidy litter of seven, and Tim seized the opportunity gratefully. Tim, although slightly demented, was still ambitiously trying to keep a clean room, and hoped his young cat could kill the mice that constantly spread turdlings throughout his new abode.

Like the time when Tim was doubting the practicality of Anatomical Art as a prospective career. She told him to drop the "Anatomical" part. And when he got bored with Juniata in March, she convinced him that he should enjoy himself before dropping out. Tim giggled in delight at that one. That was the day he hid his hideous books.

Saki gazed intently at her oversized playmate from beneath a feather-filled mountain. Are you ready to play or are you just playing around?

"I wanna pway wiff you wight now!" shrieked Tim, still in his playtime falsetto. Saki decided he was seriously playful and launched herself at his upper-bunk perch.

"Heeey! Cakey-toy! Do you still wanna be a pilot?" Of course i do, you ridiculous hominid! "Hee-heeeee!" Tim tossed the grey figure repeatedly into the air, and Saki responded by attempting to draw blood from his hands each time so he would do it faster.

Into the middle of this game strolled Saul, with his books under his arm. "Aren't you even out of bed yet? Don't you realize it's almost two o'clock?"

Tim answered both questions by holding Saki next to his own face and waving one of her paws. "Say hi to Saulie, cakey-toy!" he squealed. Saki slipped out of Tim's grip and took refuge behind the fridge to await Saul's hopefully hasty departure.

"What the heck does 'cakey-toy' mean, anyway?"

Tim cocked his head and changed his voice back to its habitual human tonality. "Well, you've got your cakey-toys, and your toy cakes. 'Cept toy cakes are no fun, 'cause you can't eat them or play with them too much. But cakey-toys are skitloads of fun!"

"Oh, yeah," mumbled Saul. "Well, i brought some bologna from the caf for, uh, Cakey-toy's lunch. Hey, Cat!" he hollered, holding his ill-gotten victuals near the refrigerator.

"Cakey-toy only eats if Timmy feeds her," squeaked Tim, again in his falsetto. Saul threw the dubious packet at Tim in the bunk. "Heee-yoo! Saki! Nine Lives!" The cat was almost instantly in the bed nibbling. "See, ya dumb Pollack?!"

Saul shook his head in disbelief. "There's nothing worse than getting stung by a WASP."

particular educational benefit. The assignments should not be made without thought and care, without deliberation about their educational value.

If there is to be a discussion about an assignment — be it a book, attendance at a play, a lab experiment or whatever — the discussion is a worthy one when we debate the educational merits of the assignment. To focus attention on such issues as "requirements" is to fail to distinguish educational from entertainment.

'I made it!'

I may be as high as the Himalayas, but I made it. My date made it, too. We made it because I didn't drive.

Maybe nothing would have happened. But being a little bent from drinking too much, I know I'm not as alert as usual. In this condition, it's easy to feel overconfident. To feel you can handle anything. To take a chance passing or to speed on a curve.

Drunk driving is the easiest way to blow it. More young people are killed in drunk driving accidents than in any other way.

There are other ways to get home when you're high. Have your date drive, if sober. Ask a sober friend for a lift. Take a cab. Make an agreement with your parents. They agree to provide a lift home or cabfare without any browbeating questions. You get home without hurting yourself, your friends or the car.

Growing is learning how to care for yourself and your friends. If you care, you will find another way.

Women Keep Winning

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Juniata women keep on rolling and have built a 15-1 season record, winning nine straight since the loss at Scranton. It is ironic that the latest streak equals total victories last season — and that was a record for most wins in a season.

JC traveled to Lewisburg to meet the Bison of Bucknell University on Tuesday, February 5. The Indians left with a 72-45 win, their second against a Division II school.

The Juniata women defeated Bucknell and Lycoming last week to build a 15-1 season record. Above, Susan Benusa goes to the line against Lycoming.

The Blue and Gold of College Hill started out sluggish, hitting only 11 of 36 from the floor, but held a slim 24-22 half time advantage. They returned to the hardwoods from the locker room as if they were a different team.

The Indians completely dominated the second half — outscoring their opponents 48-23 in the process. Aimee Brua and Terri Eckenrode sparked the team in the beginning of the second period. Their hot shooting coupled with a much more aggressive defense seemed to make the difference. However, senior captain Nancy Zinkham felt that "it was the fire and brimstone within. We're tired of being a mediocre team (as in past seasons), and have the killer instinct now."

Bucknell used a box-and-one defense which seemed to frustrate Julie George, the team's leading scorer. She still managed 12 points and 11 rebounds. Freshman Judy Pepoy led the destruction with 20 points, 11 rebounds, 6 steals, and 4 assists. Hot-handed Aimee Brua also chipped in 20. Ms. Zinkham added 8 caroms, 6 assists, 5 steals, and 2 blocked shots.

The Juniata lady cagers ended their four game road swing against Lycoming. The Saturday trip was the final divisional contest this season for the Indians, and they did it in style.

JC played their type of game — fast breaks on the offense and a tight pressure defense. Once again, the defense sparkled, forcing 31 turnovers, 13 more than the Tribe had. The College Hill Gang also had 11 steals to their 3. Nancy "Good Hands" Roach led the thievery with 5, followed by Judy Pepoy with 4.

A mere 16 point margin was on the scoreboard at the half, 47-31. Eleven of the twelve Indians who made the trip saw action. Only Nancy Zinkham, who is recuperating from a bout with the virus, watched from the sidelines.

Julie George rallied for 27 points, 21 rebounds, and 2 blocked shots. Aimee Brua tallied 16, 8 for 11 from the field. Judy Pepoy added 15 points, 11 rebounds, and dealt 8 assists. Ms. George set another record as well — 918 career field goal attempts (10 of 25 at Lycoming).

Coach Nancy Latimore recognized the importance of this last victory. "The Lycoming win was a big one for us. It gave us an undefeated record (3-0) in the north west division — we clinched the north west section with that victory. We are assured of a spot in the quarterfinals."

The Indians travel to Wilkes on Saturday for the last women's/men's doubleheader, then close out their regular season against the Red Devils of Dickinson College Tuesday night in Memorial Gym. On Wednesday night, JC hosts the quarterfinal action of MAC championship play. The Indians face either Upsala, Wilkes, or Kings at a time TBA. A victory there would assure them a trip to Scranton for the final 4 in the play offs.

Same Old Story

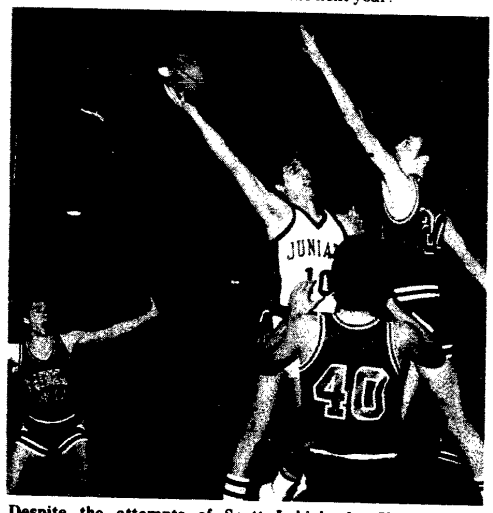
by Rob Morris

The Juniata Indians continued their losing ways in dropping two more decisions last week in Elizabethtown and Shippensburg.

Against Elizabethtown, JC took quick advantage of the fact that the opponents were sluggish after a long bus ride which also caused the game to be delayed for 45 minutes. Playing what Coach Frazier termed an "impeccable defense", otherwise seen as a well-played box-and-one on Doug Brown, the Indians held E-town to a .280 shooting percentage in the first half. By virtue of a slightly better shot selection, Juniata entered the locker room ahead 23-19 at the half. The second half started out even, but in a quick 9-minute stretch, Juniata's offensive punch slackened, as the Blue Jays outscored them 22-12. It became academic as opposing Coach Don Smith installed a four-corners stall, sinking JC to their 14th defeat 61-48. Coach Frazier remarked after the game that the "defense in the second half was as bad as it was good in the first half." Juniata was led from the floor by Dave Bender and Andy Dwyer, each scoring 10 points. Roger Arnold chipped in with 8 rebounds. The box-and-one fell apart as Doug Brown led E-town with 20 points, including a beautiful 12 for 12 from the foul line.

Saturday night's game against Shippensburg saw all the seniors starting, and performing quite well. Juniata went into the half tied at 29 but slowed down and with the hot shooting of the opponents went down to defeat once again, by a score of 63-55. Andy Dwyer once again led JC with 18 points, getting help from Joe Chuba and Dave Bender who together poured in 24 points. Chuba cleared the racks for 10 rebounds. Shippensburg also had 3 players in double figures, Ed Henninger leading with 17, as the team shot a torrid .609 for the game.

Juniata played its last home game last night, and in a couple more days it will be time to think about the past once again and plan for the next year.



Despite the attempts of Scott Lehigh the Shippensburg Raiders went on to defeat the Juniata men by a score of 63-55 last Saturday night.

Wrestlers End Best Season

by Doug Williams

The wrestling season is over and one of Juniata's best teams ever is looking to the MAC championships with high hopes. By ending at 11-4-1, the Indians own the best record in Juniata history.

The team's success peaked February 5, when the Indians wrestled Messiah in their last match this year at Memorial gym. Spurred on by a vocal crowd, Juniata beat last year's National Collegiate Christian Athletic Association champs.

Bob Gay, Todd Roadman, Rob Funk, and Joe Paskill pushed Juniata to a quick 13-6 lead, but Messiah roared back with two sudden pins and an 18-13 edge. Joel Beach was decisioned in the last seconds of his match to put Messiah on top 21-13 with two matches remaining. The stage was set for a finish, Coach Bill Berrier couldn't have planned any better.

Keith Sherbine who, according to Coach Berrier, has been the surprise of the season, came through with a much needed pin. It was all up to big Dan Jendrzejwski. He needed a decision against the man who had beaten him earlier in a tournament. Wrestling the way Berrier knew he could, Jendrzejwski kept moving, wore down his opponent, and pinned him, much to the delight of the enthused crowd. Final score: Juniata 25, Messiah 21.

With that big win behind them the Indians moved on to a tournament with Elizabethtown, Lycoming, and Lebanon Valley. Since E-town and Lycoming are two of the best squads in the MAC, Berrier decided to save his top wrestlers and go all out for one of them. When Elizabethtown beat Lycoming, the target was set, Lycoming.

It was close all the way, but the team Juniata has never beat came through again. After Paskill won at 150 lbs. to make it 12-8, Lycoming took the remaining matches to win 29-12. Berrier emphasized that the last four bouts were close and it could have gone either way, but Sherbine was pinned by an All-American with under 40 seconds left after he had managed a 3-2 edge, and Jendrzejwski also lost 3-2.

In the other matches, the Indians lost to Elizabethtown 36-12, and Juniata triumphed over Lebanon Valley 20-12.

However, Berrier was encouraged. He came close to beating Lycoming and did beat Messiah, both of whom wrestle Division I and II schools.

Going into the MAC's these victories can carry a psychological advantage. With Joe Paskill (150) becoming the first wrestler since 1964 to go undefeated and the only one to be 17-0, Berrier has the beginnings of a core of MAC placewinners. Others who will probably do well are Joe Funk (142) at 14-4, Todd Roadman (134) at 14-3, Bob Gay (126) who is 14-5, Dan Jendrzejwski (UNL) at 10-9, Keith Sherbine (190) who is 5-4, and Chris Young now at 167. The team has a good chance at the top three spots in the MAC. Also anyone who finishes in the top two spots in their weight class in the MAC's goes to the nationals.

Women Place Third

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Juniata met sixth seeded Philadelphia College of Textiles and Science on March 1 at 7:00 p.m. in Memorial Gym. The winner would advance to Millersville State College the following weekend to determine the regional champ.

Phillie Textile put its 14-2 record on the line against the 20-2 Indians. The first half was a battle down to the buzzer — JC took a one point lead (26-25) into the locker room.

The Tribe showed excellent form during the second period and outscored their opponents 40-24, on the way to a 66-49 victory. JC hit .842 from the charity stripe (16/19); they didn't step up to the line once during the first half.

Nancy Roach led the winners with 17 points. Aimee Brua and Judy Pepoy added 16 and 13 respectively. Julie George grabbed 16 caroms.

The College Hill Gang left for Lancaster on Friday morning, March 7. They were to face Scranton that night, while University of Pittsburgh-Johnstown squared off against East Stroudsburg. The Lady Royals had defeated Widener 78-58, to earn the honor of facing Juniata again.

Campus Women Organize

At the beginning of winter term, Patti Cook announced the first meeting of what is now known as the Women's Programming Organization. At the outset, Patti began with an idea which was developed last year with the help of Liz O'Connell, former Assistant Dean of Student Services. At that time, $750 was budgeted for an organization which was to be committed to programming activities for women during the 1979-80 year. Patti, who spent fall term studying in England, upon her return was disappointed to find that little had been done towards achieving this goal. Determined not to let the idea fade away and eventually be forgotten, Patti publicized a meeting for all those interested in women's programming and received an enthusiastic response.

The organization, which now meets approximately once every two weeks as a whole with frequent side meetings of small committees, is quite successful with a constituency of thirty to forty members. Several activities have been planned by this small, but dedicated, group of women.

A very successful panel discussion of alternative lifestyles for working women was held this past winter. Last Tuesday, March 11, a coffeehouse, organized by JoAnn Russell and Leslie Weaver, featuring women performers from the college, drew an audience of men and women alike.

Activities to come include a raffle for a "Basket of Cheer" which will be held sometime before Spring break. Tickets will be sold for 50 cents each.

Probably the most extensive project that the Women's Programming Organization has undertaken is a seminar for women to be held at Camp Blue

Graduation Fee A Must

by Chris Corry

The members of the graduating class of 1980 will each be charged a $35 graduation fee. Approximately 250 seniors are scheduled to graduate on Sunday, May 25, and 23 plan to finish in August. The fee is to "help defray the cost of graduating" according to Dean Hartman, and it will help cover a myriad of expenses. Expenses include cap and gown rental, cost of food and housing for the extra weekend for the seniors, and the cost of food and housing for the non-seniors who stay to help with graduation. Last year there were 70 non-seniors; this included 34 choir members, 20 ushers, 8 brass ensemble players, 5 desk attendants, and 3 others.

Other expenses are the diplomas and their covers, graduation programs, the reunion commencement ball (to which seniors receive complimentary tickets), the organist's fee, the cost of cleaning and setting up the gym, flowers for the gym, cost of setting up the sound systems, the cost of printing the meal tickets, possibly a speaker's fee and the added clerical work involved in the whole process of graduating. "All of those end of the year kind of things are included" says Dean Hartman. Even so, the fee does not completely cover all the expenses. Prices have been rising and the fee is the same as was charged last year.

Although individual costs may differ, all seniors are charged the same amount. It is "one of those fees you try to hit middle ground with" says the Dean. August graduate hopefuls are welcome to go through the ceremony and receive empty diplomas if they want. Off campus seniors will get food tickets and if any of them need housing for the weekend, "maybe, we could let them stay (on campus)," states a source from the Accounting Office.

Faculty Requests Salary Raise

by Mike Ford

For many years in the past Juniata faculty members have accepted very minimal increases in their annual salaries. Often the college might have a "bad year", things would be tight financially, and the faculty salary raises would suffer because of it.

Dr. Mitchell, head of the benefits interest group of the Juniata Faculty Professional Association, feels that the faculty has been understanding with the school's plight for some time, but now "we feel it's a situation that needs to be remedied."

Recently, the faculty presented the Administration with its requests for more significant salary raises, and Dr. Mitchell cited two main reasons for these requests. One is a "personal concern" — teachers find it difficult to live on their present salaries. Some professors make less now in terms of buying power than they did when they started here. In essence, this is like telling a new professor that his starting salary is the most money he will ever make at Juniata. In addition, when Juniata's annual faculty raises are compared to the national rates, it becomes obvious that "we're way behind," states Mitchell. Last year Juniata faculty received a wage increase of 8.2%, while the Consumer Price Index rose over 10%. In other words, faculty raises have far from kept up with the rising cost of living.

A second reason Mitchell cited for the wage increase requests is that low faculty salaries are bad for Juniata's image. Many prospective students judge a school and its faculty by how low or high their salaries are, and it "probably doesn't look good for Juniata" to be near the bottom of comparative salary lists. In fact, when compared to schools that Juniata is academically superior or comparable to, it is interesting to note that there is only one school (Ursinus) with average salaries lower than Juniata's. When considering that Juniata is second lowest to other colleges on a comparative salary list, it seems obvious that this low rating is indeed a disservice to Juniata's reputation and that the faculty members are "better than our salaries indicate," as Dr. Mitchell says.

Dr. Mitchell also stated that the Administration has been very supportive of the faculty requests and is currently working to do something. Mitchell observed that this is a good year for the college in terms of large classes and discretionary money in the budget, making circumstances beneficial for the faculty to get a raise.

Connally Drops GOP Race

John B. Connally, conceding that Ronald Reagan is the man to beat, withdrew from the race for the Republican presidential nomination earlier this week after he was soundly defeated by Reagan in their first primary battle in the South.

Connally, who became a candidate one year ago and spent nearly $10 million in a losing battle, said at a news conference in Houston that following his disappointing loss to Reagan in South Carolina on Saturday, it would no longer be "to the good of my party and the nation for me to continue my candidacy."

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Jeff Boulton

What is senioritis? Is it a real thing, or is it just something seniors invoke as justification for their apparently senseless activities during the last spring term of togetherness at Juniata? Can you catch it from dirty toilet seats?

I spoke with one of the most respected members of Huntingdon's medical community after church last Sunday, and he assured me that it is a real condition, and that its symptoms vary considerably according to the metabolism and mental health of the victim. But he urged an exercise in caution, because the exact cause of this mysterious malady has yet to be discovered.

In Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary, you'd expect to find the definition of a word so commonly used as senioritis. Unfortunately, the word remains undefined in the dictionary. But the word "senior" and the suffix "-itis" are in there. I'm going to attempt to synthesize a definition myself, as i am in need of a cure.

Using the dictionary's definition of "-itis," we could define our condition as "a malady arising from being a senior." Now that sounds like it's along the lines of what i think senioritis must be: "I act sick because i'm a senior." That's great! Or else, "forced endurance of being a senior . . . I act wild and crazy because i'm being forced to go through this phase." This one is even better because it projects the guilt upon some kind of enigmatic, established power. You can blame it on anybody, the Administration, professors, mom, your roommate, girlfriend, neighbor, car . . . "All of the above" is an acceptable attitude!

The "-itis" part was easy. But what is a "senior" after all? First of all, let's look at the dictionary: "A person older than another; a person with higher standing or rank." These are nice, good, okay and otherwise pretty neutral definitions. The biggie is the one that reads, "A student in the year preceding graduation from a school of secondary or higher level." Hoo-boy. I think that's where senioritis comes from: "I behave in a totally deranged manner because i am forced to endure the year preceding my graduation from Juniata." Sounds pretty laughable, doesn't it? How can you ever hope to graduate if you don't have to go through your senior year?

It would make more sense to scream, "I can't take it any more!" Everybody can relate to that, even freshmen!

Whom does Juniata consider to be a senior? I don't even want to get into that one. I'd rather read a dictionary in my spare time than the curriculum code. I've never even heard of HU's or CORE or Logic and Language or . . . how about HEA's which are now SVS? Do freshmen still pick between PR, EL and GE, or is it something else these days? How can you have a 3.4 average when i only get 3.0 for an "A?" It's best just to say a senior is someone who is going to graduate soon and ignore anything JC might have to say about it.

But let's get back to the issue of being a senior. Why does it make you lose it? Is it the result of peer pressure? I think it's a result of self-discipline, of painting yourself into what looked like a really cozy corner four years ago, but which appears pretty filthy as you paint yourself into it. What makes it worse is that you know that you left your sponge and the Ajax in the next room, but you can't go and get them without messing up the entire floor.

Luckily, Juniata College is a "liberal arts" school. That means that they make you take a toothbrush with you when you set out to paint yourself into the filthy corner of your misinformed dreams. It's not a sponge, but at least it's something!

When you've finally reached your corner, it's about time to graduate. You're a last-term senior. You've forgotten your sponge, what a bummer. That's senioritis, because you know they'll only give you a monogrammed hanky to hang in your little corner, and teach you a nice mantra to get you through times of trouble: "Alumnus, alumna, alumni, alumnae; Collegius Juniatiensis magnus est! Illi totam fortunam meam dabo! Caveat emptor!"

And if you don't think you can catch senioritis from toilet seats, where have you been sitting these past four years? "Eheu, fugaces labuntur anni." If this doesn't make any sense to you, it will when you catch the dreaded disease.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

As arrangements coordinator for the 1980 Concert Choir Tour (held during break), I am asking you to share with my 58 new friends the following letter.

Dear Choir:

I don't often "go public" with my letters of affection, but this is an exception. The purpose of this letter is to publicly tell you how great I think you are. Each of you promoted Juniata good will in 4 states over 9 grueling days and never lost the edge to a performance or the smile on your face. I was constantly astounded by the choir's plethora of individual talents and the dynamic group performances that produced many heartfelt standing ovations. At every concert, I was surrounded by loads of praise for you from hosts, audience members, and especially from zealous alumni who, after the concerts, were bursting their buttons with pride at being Juniatians.

The measure of the exultant feelings you created in those with whom you came in contact will remain imponderable, but the beautiful impressions you left are definitely there — in every place you stayed and performed. They are also a very special part of me. Thank you for making it so.

Kathryn M. Miller
Assistant Director of Development

Dear Juniatian,

We are five very fortunate Juniata students. What is so special about us? As exchange students, we are spending one of the most exciting years of our lives in Marburg, West Germany.

Perhaps many students are unaware of this exchange program between Marburg and Juniata. We are therefore writing in an attempt to share some of our new experiences.

One of the sharpest contrasts between life at Juniata and that in Marburg, is the independence one is forced to have here. As an example, student dorms are all equipped with kitchens since students must usually make meals twice a day for themselves. From this stems the need to know the location of the cheapest store, the schedule of the bus that is going to get you there, and the hours of your bank so you have the money to buy the food and the bus ticket.

Life in a foreign country can be interesting (and sometimes embarassing) when one is less than proficient in the language. Like when one goes to the bank and asks for his elevator (aufzug) instead of his balance (auszug). Other, more important points of interest, are the new insights one gains into the foreign culture as well as into his own. We have also found that meeting new people, and getting to know them despite the language and cultural differences is incredibly rewarding. (We are sure our exchange partners would be glad to tell you more about that!)

Naturally the academic life is likewise different. We have found that German students are much more responsible for their own education. They are free to attend

Center Board Granted Budget Increase

by Cherise Kent
and Heather MacCrindle

Dr. Arnold Tilden, dean of student services, announced earlier this week that the college Center Board (the campus activities board) will receive an increase in their budget for the 1980-81 academic year. The increase will bring the budget "in the neighborhood of $50,000". Tilden pointed out that this increase exceeds 100%; the Center Board budget this year totaled $20,000.

Tilden explained that the increase is the result of the administration coming under attack last year when students aired their concern over lack of funds for campus programs.

"The administration recognized the importance in bugeting more money to improve Juniata's programming," commented Tilden, "especially when the geographic location of Juniata is considered." Tilden feels that

Photos Exhibited

A collection of photographs by renowned French photographers — titled "A Certain Image of the French Photography" — is currently on display at Juniata College.

The photographs, representing the best works of some 25 French photographers, can be viewed through March 30 in the Shoemaker Galleries of Carnegie Hall, 17th and Moore Streets. There is no charge for admission, and the public is cordially invited to visit the exhibit.

Pierre de Fenoyl, director of France's Fondation Nationale de la Photographie — which has assembled the touring exhibit — says that while the photographs are in the tradition of photo-journalism, they go beyond it in the direction of a kind of photographic surrealism, achieving "a magical union of form and content."

Aware that "meaning, beauty and mature social commentary are important," de Fenoyl insists that "these young photographers' eagerness to explore their personal perceptions does not break with the classical reportage tradition.

"The photographers observe the most banal facet of everyday existence with the same passion they would bring to a battlefield," he adds.

Indeed, as Nancy Stevens notes in an article for "Voice": "Some of the best photographs in this show have been taken by photographers associated with the picture agencies, most notably Viva and Magnum.

"Magnum remains a legendary phenomenon in the world of international photography agencies: it was the first independent agency founded by and for free-lance photographers, many of whom were fed up covering bloody wars and battlefields for 'Life.' "

And, as Ms. Stevens also observes, this collection of French photographs — with its emphasis upon social concerns — can be very enlightening to its American audience, which is more prone to "find preoccupation with self to be a sufficiently compelling social cause."

The exhibit is on loan to Juniata from French Cultural Services in New York City.

Career Fair Planned

by John George

On Wednesday, April 23, Mr. William Martin and the Career Planning and Placement Center will present to all interested Juniata students the annual Career Fair held in the Baker Refectory. On campus from 11AM to 3PM will be about fifty recent alumni who will each represent a different job title. At least 95% of those coming to Juniata to discuss their jobs are alumni and most of them have graduated within the last three or four years. This gives the student a relevant and first-hand perspective on not only the positive aspects of their position but the possible undesirable facets of the job.

It should be noted that this is not a formal situation and the students are under no obligation to present their best aspect to the representatives. The student is encouraged to "table-hop" and to talk to as many representatives as possible. According to Martin, this is a rich and rewarding experience that can benefit any student who is still undecided about a career choice.

Open House

Dr. Binder invites students to attend an open-house in the newly renovated Founders Hall on Friday, March 14, from 3:30-5. Drawings of the planned Sports and Recreation Center will be on display. Refreshments will be served.

Quartet Performs Perfectly

by Spencer

The Lenox Quartet is comprised of two violinists, a violist, and a cellist. Such a commonplace musical conglomeration made me approach the second-to-last Artist Series' performance with some degree of skepticism — I mean, how could such a quartet provide any refreshing or unique entertainment? What I discovered in Oller Hall on March 9, however, was that a string quartet is very very versatile, and its success at holding an audience's interest lies in both the talent of each member and the coordination between these members as each musical work is interpreted.

The Lenox Quartet scored perfectly in both categories. Each musician was proficient and innovative in his own right; when performing as a unit, each member seemed to perfectly anticipate the next moves of the other three. In other words, the synchrony of the performance was flawless.

The evening started with a very conversational Beethovan work. Each instrumentalist complemented the others perfectly, bringing life to the balanced Beethoven melodies. The second piece was a Shostakovich quartet inspired by the fire-bombing of Dresden in World War II. Its foreboding and melancholy harmonies proved an interesting communicative device that was used effectively by the quartet to evoke feelings of tragedy and sorrow from the audience. More importantly, it showed that the quartet could use harmonies as effectively as melodies as a vehicle for communicating its musical interpretations to the audience.

The third piece was a more light-hearted, romantic excursion by Ravel, performed with the same precision as the first two pieces, moving from joy to sorrow and back to joy again via impressive, energetic harmonies. The fourth work was a Haydn movement that ended the night on a cheerful note, with the staccato notes of the main theme balancing the light harmonies perfectly, creating a jubilant effect.

At the beginning of the evening I was determined the performance would be one of the most boring I had ever attended; by the end of the night I had learned an important lesson of how the versatility of an art form depends upon the artists themselves. To be sure, the Lenox Quartet proved to be top-rate entertainment, bringing freshness to a relatively commonplace art form.

Concert Choir Completes Annual Tour

by Cathy Creswell

The concert choir, under the direction of Professor Bruce Hirsch, wound up its spring tour with a homecoming concert on March 4 in Oller Hall.

The choir sang in Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New Jersey, and New York this year. Their tour lasted for a week and included eleven performances. It was also the first year that the choir was invited to perform in New York City.

According to Professor Hirsch spring tour is the highlight of the year for the choir. The students who sing in the choir must be prepared to sing like professionals. Besides a heavy performance schedule, they are faced with singing in different rooms each night and have to learn how to adjust to these differences quickly.

It is the seniors in the choir who are the leaders of the group. While it may take the new members a day to fall into the routine of touring the seniors know what to expect. They help in the organizing of the tour and keep the tour running smoothly.

The material used on tour this year contained more solo parts than in the past. For the first time solo parts were switched on different nights. This could be done Professor Hirsch said because of the prolific individual talent in the choir this year. It also allowed more people the chance to sing solo in front of an audience.

The concert choir consists of sixty students. Auditioning is necessary and Professor Hirsch estimates that he usually has to listen to 125 voices auditioning when the average turnover rate in the choir is only ten to fifteen places per year. Auditions are held in the summer for freshmen and in the fall for upper classmen, although upper classmen are sometimes asked to audition in the spring.

Of course the choir is not organized for touring only. The concert choir becomes the core group for any other musical productions. This would include shows, operas, musicals or large scale productions that would require a larger number of singers. Aside from an annual tour the choir also performs for Parents Weekend, the Madrigal Dinner, and Commencement.

Professor Hirsch emphasized that while the students put a lot of time and effort into the choir they receive no official recognition. Juniata is one of the few colleges that does not give credit to students who are in choir. Senior choir members are not even presented with awards; the only recognition they receive comes from audience applause.

Choir members feel that being in choir is one of the best experiences they have had at Juniata regardless of the lack of recognition.

Choir members also seem to be in agreement that Professor Hirsch is an excellent director. Gwen Sterling who is a senior in the choir said, "Choir members put out and do their best for Professor Hirsch; they have to. He demands perfection and is never satisfied."

The dissatisfaction aired by choir members comes from the lack of support shown to them by the college. They feel that they are only supported by friends, public relations and the development department. In fact most choir members indicated that the support shown by the Huntingdon community excelled that given by the college.

This causes a feeling of resentment throughout the choir as they are used as public relations representatives for the college during their tour. But while the choir does just as valuable a job as the football team in representing Juniata to the outside community, they are not given as high a priority as the football team. The choir does not receive a large budget from the administration. They are given minimal financial support for food and lodgings when they tour. The football team never has to worry about these things.

David Miller, a junior in the choir, pointed out that while the administration had a new humanities center built and have decided to build a new gym complex, the choir still has no place to rehearse. They have been using Ellis Ballroom but the acoustics in the ballroom are not good and make it hard for the choir to know how they really sound.

But the most disappointing aspect of the administration is that they do not support the choir by attending their concerts. At the Homecoming concert very few people in the administration came out to listen to the choir. Choir members feel that they have been slighted by the administration and in the future hope that the administration will at least attend their concerts.

because of the isolated location of the college, student's must find "stimulation" on campus, and an improved schedule of campus activities is one of the best ways to satisfy this need.

Where will all of this money be channeled? Wayne Justham director of college programming has outlined a list of proposed activities for next year which will be submitted to Center Board for approval.

Justham would "like to do some major concerts that we (Center Board) would subsidize, that is we would go in expecting to loose money."

Mini concerts, featuring groups that are good but not well known, are also among the proposed programs for next year. These concerts would be designed for Oller Auditorium and admission would be in the one dollar range.

Justham added that he would like to see the board pursue what he calls alternate programming. One example of such programming is the addition of art films and classical films to the schedule of films that Center Board already sponsors. These are films that "won't make money but are part of a well rounded program" stated Justham.

Other areas of alternate programming would be more coffeehouses, formal and semi-formal dances, lectures, and subsidizing groups that produce a program for "the advantage of the campus." Justham feels that Center Board should be involved with providing the funds for these groups and not Student Government. These programs would include the recent forum on the Iranian situation sponsored by Tussey-Terrace residents, or the open houses that took place in Sherwood and Cloister dorms.

Center Board organizes and sponsors annual events like Mountain Day, Madrigal Dinner, Homecoming, May Day and the Artist Series, but Justham stresses that the Board is interested in any ideas for programs initiated by members of the student body.

"All it takes is initiative by students to put on any program," stated Justham, "there is usually enough money around to do something!"

Center Board is currently composed of two standing committees — the Fine Arts Committee and the Film Committee. With the budget increase slated for next year, and the likelihood of scheduling added concerts to next year's schedule of events, the number of standing committees would be increased to three with the addition of a Concert Committee.

Center Board actively recruits people to help on promptu committees every time a new event is added. Lack of proper publicity has, however, had a negative effect on Center Board's recruiting job and students' getting involved in planning committees.

Center Board's budget comes mainly from funding from the college, money collected at school events, and partly from the money generated on pinball machines and billiard tables. This last source was in danger of being taken away, due to vandalism to pinball machines in the game room of Ellis Hall. To provide more security a closed circuit TV has been installed in the game room.

Center Board's major claim to fame this year was its purchase of the large screen TV. It has also along with the library, bought video tapes that will be shown afternoons and evenings on selected days. "MASH", "The Graduate", "Patton", and "Carnal Knowledge" are some of the tapes that have been purchased. When these movies are scheduled to be shown, no admission will be charged and posters informing students the date and time will be put up.

According to Justham, Center Board is a policy making organization composed of only eight standing members that requires student support and interest to get its programs off the ground. Elections for Center Board Chairperson, Vice-chairperson, and secretary will be taking place on March 19.

GODSPELL comes to Juniata

"Godspell," the smash musical that ran for a record-breaking five years on Broadway, will be performed at Juniata College on Friday evening, March 14.

Daedalus Productions of New York City will present the show, which begins at 8:15 p.m. in Juniata's Oller Auditorium. The public is cordially invited to attend.

First performed on Broadway a decade ago — and now hailed as "classic musical theatre" — "Godspell" uses magic, mime and exultant rock 'n' roll music to express, in contemporary fashion, the story of the Gospel of St. Matthew.

"Godspell," often considered "the most celebrated musical of the past decade," tells the story of nine contemporary young people and their attraction to — and final belief in — the man-god Jesus who appears in their midst.

It is through dancing, music and dramatic retelling of the parables from the Gospel of St. Matthew that Jesus leads this unruly, boisterous flock to salvation.

However, the touring version to be presented at Juniata differs in several important ways from previous presentations of the musical. Comments Mark D'Alessio, director:

"First, though we don't change the original book or score, we've developed completely new staging and choreography. Also, we've scrapped the much-copied playground setting and hippie characters of the original version. In our 'Godspell,' the play takes place in a circus ring, a setting much more suited to the show's blend of magic, vaudeville and high drama."

Continuing, he explains that "past productions have often relied on a series of skits — like a revue. Here, we're following the development of nine different people, their doubts about Jesus, their attraction to him, and finally, their conversion to his way of life.

"We're not downplaying the fun in the show — the mime, the nightclub turns, and production numbers — but we're letting the human stories shine through. I feel this increases the audience's emotional involvement and enjoyment of the entire show."

Currently on its 1980 spring tour, Daedalus Productions has toured for the past seven years, earning a reputation as "one of America's leading touring troupes."

In addition to its recent productions of the Royal Shakespeare Company's "Sylvia Plath" and the New York comedy hit "Vanities," the company has performed "Dracula," "The Diary of a Madman" and "Lovers and Other Strangers."

Well known for performance excellence, the troupe's work has received consistent praise, which is perhaps best summed up by Rutgers University's comment that Daedalus is "one of the best theatre companies the university has ever seen."

Daedalus Production's presentation of "Godspell" at Juniata is being sponsored by the college's Student Government. Admission is $5 for adults and $3 for high school students.

"In every child who is born, under no matter what circumstances, and of no matter what parents, the potentiality of the human race is born again; and in him, too, once more, and of each of us, our terrific responsibility towards human life; towards the utmost idea of goodness, of the horror of error, and of God."

WKVR Celebrates Anniversary

by Cathy Hunt

Juniata College radio marks some important dates this month and WKVR, Juniata's progressive station, is prepared to celebrate.

Twenty-five years ago this college had no music of its own crossing the wires until a group of students got together and created WJC-Juniata's first AM radio station. Two years ago, after a brief period off the air JC radio returned to the air as WKVR-FM.

This Saturday, March 15, the staff and management, under the direction of station manager Kim Swanson, intends to celebrate both anniversaries with an open house of the new station. The Communications wing of Ellis College Center will be the location of the ribbon cutting ceremony at 2 p.m. with tours of the station, history highlights of Juniata radio, and refreshments to follow.

WJC began as a "dream" of student Eugene Hyssong '55, a physics major from Altoona.

In September of 1954 WJC made its first official broadcast. It contained a staff of 24 and cost approximately $150 to complete.

WJC continued successfully until the early 1970's when carrier current troubles developed and in 1975 WJC began plans for a 10 watt station. In the summer of 1976 the old equipment was sold and WJC broadcasted on cable FM until the end of the 1976 school year. The station then left the air, until the FCC approved the license for WKVR. March 6, 1978 had Juniata College turned on again to the sounds of progressive music.

Now WKVR has made a final move to the Ellis College Center and is back to a full broadcasting schedule. The station has a staff of about 70 people, is on the air 7 days a week and broadcasts over a 12 mile listening radius in Huntingdon County.

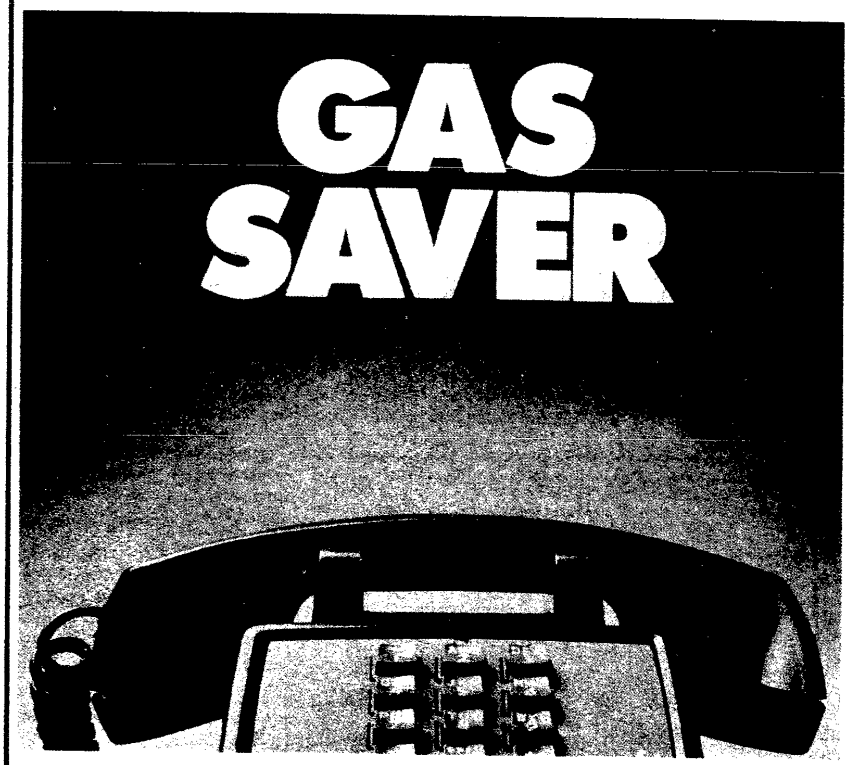
GAS SAVER



You can save a lot of gasoline—and a lot of money—if you use the phone before you use your car.

By calling ahead, you can be sure the restaurant is open . . . the store has what you want . . . or the friend you want to visit is home—before you waste time, gas and money on an unnecessary trip. On the average, you waste about a dollar's worth of gas on every unnecessary trip—and just two wasted trips a week can cost you more than $100 worth of gas a year.

Saving energy is easier than you think, and with the rising energy costs we're facing today, it's never been more important. So the next time you pick up your car keys and head for the door, ask yourself whether a phone call could save you the trip—and the wasted gas.

History of Photography Exhibited

The 1980 History of Photography Events, from March 19 through April 9 at The Pennsylvania State University, will feature five lectures by professors of photojournalism, art and art history from universities around the country.

In conjunction with the events, an exhibition of 19th century Photographic Books and Other Memorabilia arranged by Charles Mann, head of Special Collections at Pattee Library, will be on display in the Rare Books Room from March 19 through April 2.

The events will open with a lecture by Keith McElroy on "Early Photography in Peru" at 8 p.m. Wednesday, March 19 in room 101 of the Kern Graduate Building.

Dr. McElroy, assistant professor of art at the University of Arizona at Tucson, will discuss the impact of photography on cultural and social life in 19th-century Lima and its influence on the development of photography abroad.

Dr. McElroy, who organized a major exhibition in Lima in 1975, has spent many years in Peru and has written numerous articles on photography and architecture.

"The Style of Life: The Influence of European Photographers and Picture Editors on Life magazine" will be discussed by Zoe Smith-Nesterenko, instructor in communications at the University of Tulsa, at 8 p.m. Thursday, March 20 in 101 Kern.

According to Ms. Smith-Nesterenko, a photographer and contributor to Journalism Quarterly, Life magazine did not pioneer the development of modern American photojournalism.

She argues: "We would have to ignore the fact that picture magazines flourished in Germany during the 1920s and 1930s, and that two editors from the "Berliner Illustrirte Zeitung" were Henry Luce's consultants during the pre-publication days of Life, and that more than a dozen European refugees came to photograph for the magazine."

The third lecture of the series, "Charles Piazzi Smyth; Photographer and Iconoclast," will be presented by Larry Schaaf, assistant professor of journalism at the University of Texas at Austin, at 8 p.m. Wednesday, March 26 in 101 Kern.

Mr. Schaaf, co-author of the book "Victorian Photographer" on Paul Martin, has also studied the works of pioneer photographers Fox Talbot and Sir John Herschel.

A talk on the previously unpublished letters of Man Ray, photographer and painter of the Dadaist and Surrealistic art movements, will be presented by Albert Charley at 8 p.m. Monday, March 31 in room 101 Kern. Mr. Charley, professor of art at Clarion State College, will discuss "Man Ray: Last of the Red-Hot Dadas."

Dr. Heinz Henisch will present the final lecture of the series, "19th-Century Masters," at 8 p.m. Wednesday, April 9 in room 101 Kern. The works of Julia Margaret Cameron, Nadar, Lewis Carroll and Napoleon Sacrony — four idiosyncratic photographers of the era — will be the subject of his talk.

Dr. Henisch, professor of the History of Photography in the Department of Art History at the University, is a Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain and editor of "History of Photography," an international research quarterly.

The 1980 History of Photography Events are being sponsored by the Institute for the Arts and Humanistic Studies and the School of Journalism. All events are free to the public.

Although we as exchange students must take an exam for every course, we too are enjoying this academic freedom. Since Marburg is larger than Juniata (approximately 15,000 students), it has been possible to take courses not offered at Juniata.

Internships Available

William C. Vocke, chairman of the political science department, announces that applications are now being accepted for summer term and fall term internships in Washington, D.C.

Developed in conjunction with the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives (WCLA), the internships offer practical, career-oriented experience in many areas, including Congressional offices, Executive agencies, public interest organizations, consumer affairs, judicial agencies, business and the arts.

Prof. Vocke notes, in fact, that internships are available "in such a wide range of interests that they are appropriate for all Juniata students, regardless of their programs of emphasis."

Students interested in pursuing the possibility of an internship in Washington, D.C., may receive additional information by contacting Prof. Vocke, whose office is in Good Hall, Room 316. His on-campus telephone extension number is 650.

Feb. 28 was the deadline for returning applications for the summer term, and April 10 is the deadline for applying for the fall term.

Alumnus Appointed

Mary E. Keller, a 1976 graduate of Juniata College, is returning to her alma mater as a part-time instructional assistant in biology, Juniata President Fredrick M. Binder announced this week.

In making the announcement, Dr. Binder said that Ms. Keller — who received her M.S. degree in behavioral ecology from the University of North Dakota (UND) in 1979 — will assume her position on March 3, the first day of the college's spring term.

Most recently employed as a researcher and writer for the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources' "Scientific and Natural Area Inventory Project," Ms. Keller served UND as a teaching assistant while earning her master's degree.

During her tenure in North Dakota, the Juniata alumna assisted with courses about "Systematic Botany," "Ethology," and "Introductory Biology I and II," arranging field trips, preparing lectures and caring for laboratory animals.

Ms. Keller served as a laboratory and teaching assistant at Juniata, where she participated in establishing the college's Environmental Studies Field Station on Raystown Lake.

Encompassing a complete watershed and consisting of 365 acres leased to Juniata by the Army Corps of Engineers, the field station is centrally located on 8,300-acre Raystown Lake, the largest lake wholly in Pennsylvania.

Diamond, April 25-27. Largely coordinated by Fran Freeburg, the weekend will include a discussion on alternative lifestyles and a session on assertiveness training. Carol Braeslin, a juvenile probation officer in Huntingdon, will speak on what it is like to be a female in a traditionally male dominated field.

With all its other activities well into the planning stage, the next step for the Women's Programming Organization is to Charter itself under Student Government. This will provide several advantages including more recognition from the entire student body as well as accessibility to funds.

Part of the success of this organization must be credited to the publicity area which has been smoothly coordinated through the efforts of Kathy Pacca and Leslie Weaver. Also the total involvement and dedication of the organization's members spurred on by the enthusiasm of its originator, Patti Cook, has contributed to the high degree of accomplishment. Anyone who is interested in finding out more about the Women's Programming Organization is welcome to contact Patti Cook at 643-0777.

Thompson Joins Faculty

Thomas Richard Thompson II has been named to the Juniata College faculty as an instructor in economics and business administration, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder announced this week.

Most recently a research assistant at The Pennsylvania State University, Thompson will assume his position on March 3, the first day of the college's spring term.

A 1973 recipient of a bachelor's degree in recreation and parks from Penn State. Thompson also earned his 1979 master's degree in public administration from Penn State.

While earning his advanced degree and serving as a research assistant in Penn State's Institute of Public Administration, Thompson conducted public program analysis by accessing and using packaged computer statistical programs.

He also conducted community surveys, literature research, and provided technical assistance to graduate faculty members who were preparing books and articles for publication.

Meal for Crop Planned

by Patty Rauschenberger

On March 25, Tuesday evening many Juniata students will not be eating at the dining hall. These students will be helping the campaign against World Hunger-Meal for CROP.

Juniata's annual Meal for CROP raises money to fight World Hunger, CROP is a part of Church World Service, a non-denominational organization which gives disaster relief and sponsors self-help projects worldwide. Students at Juniata have been responsible in the past and it is hoped this year will be no exception.

Students are asked to give up their dinners which are then sold to someone in the community. All proceeds go to CROP.

Phil Jones, working with the Campus Ministers Office wants to see lots of students support the program. Last year more than $1,800 was raised. Phil has set a goal of $2,000 or 800 meals for 1980.

Due to the seriousness of this lenten season, Meal for CROP is a way for us all to work together to help the fight against world hunger." Students can have an effect on the world. The money collected helps people immediately. Money goes for food and, more importantly, to teach self-sufficiency.

Sign-ups for giving up the meal will be held in Ellis Lobby beginning Tuesday, March 11, 1980. Sign-ups will be on weekdays at dinner the first week, and at lunch and dinner the second week.

Anyone interested in helping with this cause in any capacity should stop by the Campus Ministers Office located in Ellis.

Students Attend Band Festival

Four students from Juniata College have been selected to participate in the 33rd annual Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Band Festival, being held March 14-16 at Susquehanna University in Selinsgrove, Pa.

They are Margaret Donahue (flute), John Farugia (percussion), Richard Fonda (tuba), and Kathleen Kahler (clarinet).

The Intercollegiate Band Festival is sponsored by the Pennsylvania Collegiate Bandmasters Association. Hosts are James Steffy and Dr. Donald Beckie of the music faculty at Susquehanna University.

Some 135 students from 32 colleges were selected from over 250 nominations made by college band directors throughout the state. During the three-day event the student musicians will follow a heavy schedule of seating auditions and rehearsals.

The festival concludes with a concert on Sunday (March 16) at 2:30 p.m. in Susquehanna's Weber Chapel Auditorium. The program includes pieces by Hennagin, Wagner, Persichetti, Ives, Sousa, Richard Strauss, Holst, Byrd, Tull, Shostakovich, and Fillmore.

Guest conductor will be Frank Battisti, conductor of the Wind Ensemble and chairman of the music education department at the New England Conservatory and president of the College Band Directors' National Association.

Indian Defense Only Highlight

Despite a disappointing 6-16 record, the 1979-80 Juniata College men's basketball team was the second-best defensive club in Juniata history, according to final Indian statistics released this week.

The Indians — ranked all year among the NCAA's top 15 Division III defensive teams — allowed just 63.0 points per outing, missing by 0.3 the old standard of 62.7 set in 1949-50. However, JC themselves averaged only 55 points per outing.

Senior Andy Dwyer, who became Juniata's ninth-leading career scorer with 856 points, led the team in scoring this season. The 6-6 forward scored 263 points for a 12.0 average, also leading the team in field goal percentage (106-223, .475) and finishing third in rebounding (127, 5.8).

Sophomore Joe Chuba, a 6-5 forward, led the squad in rebounds (139, 6.3) for the second straight year and was second in scoring (173, 7.9).

Scott Johnson, a 6-2 sophomore guard, was the team leader in free throw percentage, making 18 of 21 attempts (.857). He was also second in field goal percentage (45-97, .464).

Co-captain Roger Arnold, a 6-7 senior, ended the season second in rebounding (128, 5.8) and fifth in scoring (116, 5.3), while senior guard Dave Bender finished third in scoring (172, 7.8) and second in assists with 54.

Scott Lehigh led the squad in assists (63) and was tied for the lead in steals (23). The 6-1 sophomore guard also set a modern-day Juniata record, fouling out of 11 games — three more than Juniata's opponents combined.

Junior Kerry Walsh, a 6-2 guard, scored 144 points to finish fourth among his teammates with a 6.5 average.

In the Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division, the Indians finished 1-12. They had started out their overall slate with a 3-1 mark, but dropped their next 10 contests.

Freshman Chet Sowal, who averaged 23.8 points per game, led the 1979-80 Juniata College junior varsity basketball team to an 8-4 record, according to final statistics.

Sowal led the team with 190 points despite playing in only eight games. He also played some varsity ball and was sidelined briefly by injuries.

The 5-11 guard also led the team in free throw percentage, hitting 60 of 71 attempts (.845).

Andy Witmer, a 6-3 freshman center, led the team in rebounding (106, 8.8) and was third in scoring (115, 9.6). Freshman guard Dan Frasier finished second in scoring (127, 10.6) and assists (39).

Paul Miller, a 6-2 freshman forward from Pittsburgh's Central Catholic, was the squad's top shooter, hitting .486 (25-72) from the field. Jeff Pealer, a freshman guard from Bloomsburg, led the team in assists with 40.

Stan Hudzicki averaged 8.6 points per outing and ranked fourth in assists (21) despite playing in only seven contests. Sophomore Tom Deep, a 6-4 forward, averaged 7.1 rebounds and 6.2 points per tilt.

Women's Basketball

UPJ beat East Stroudsburg in the preliminary, 74-68, to set up one half of the finals. JC and Scranton met at 8:30, for the third time this year. Somehow (could it really be possible?) the Indians lost again, 60-55 in a hard fought contest. Scranton would face UPJ for the championship.

The Lady Royals only had a one basket lead, 29-27 at the half. But they were able to hang on and earn that 5 point victory. In three games, Scranton had only outscored JC by 23 points.

Julie George had the hot hand, scoring 28 points and grabbing 15 rebounds. Judy Pepoy added 14 markers and 6 steals. Nancy Zinkham pulled down 10 caroms.

Scranton defeated UPJ to cop a first place finish. JC needed to win the consolation game if they were to have any chance at a national championship. The first two finishers (Scranton and UPJ) were assured play-off berths. The third place team could be offered a wild card position, so that game was crucial.

The Indians were down by 15, 34-19 at the half. JC only shot .286 during the first period, hitting 8/28 from the floor. It looked like the East Stroudsburg Warriors would pull off the upset.

Juniata wasn't ready to give up yet. They hit a net splitting .581 after the intermission, to outscore the Warriors 48-24. The Tribe beat East Stroudsburg 67-58. And yes, JC got the all-important phone call. They are one of 24 teams seeking a national championship!

Aimee Brua and Judy Pepoy hit for 19 points, while Julie George led with 11 rebounds. Nancy Zinkham added 13 markers, 8 caroms, and 8 steals (the team only had 10).

As a wild card team, Juniata will play all games on the road. They will keep playing as long as they keep winning, hoping to eventually reach Spokane, Washington on March 21 & 22.

The Indians flew out of Greater Pittsburgh Airport Tuesday morning for Columbia, South Carolina. They played Columbia College, the second place team from their region, last night. If they won, the Lady Dribblers will fly on to Abeliene, Texas to face MacMurray College Saturday night, the first place team from their region. If they lost, the Blue and Gold will be coming home today.

Hopefully, we won't see the Indians until some time Sunday, and with smiles on their faces!

Bad Luck Hits Wrestlers

by Doug Williams

It has been said that sports are made up of 50% skill, 25% confidence, and 25% luck. All the skill and confidence in the world doesn't mean a thing if luck is against you. Juniata's wrestlers found this out the hard way in the Middle Atlantic Conference championships over break.

Going into the MAC's the team had set a Juniata record for wins with 11, had five wrestlers with double-finger win totals, and an All-American. That took care of the skill.

They also had outscored their opponents 405-284, had beaten some of the tough teams in the area, and were going to the MAC's with their coach's hope of at least a third place finish. That provided the confidence.

However, it was bad luck, something they had avoided most of the year, that followed the grapplers to the MAC championships. The Friday before leaving they learned that heavyweight Dan Jendrzejewski had broken his hand and couldn't compete. Last year Dan had finished fourth and was counted on to at least equal this performance to push the team to a top-three placing. Then during the matches Bruce Amig (118 pounds) was leading 14-11 in the final period of his first match when he was caught by surprise and pinned. Chris Young (167) wrestled the number two seed first and barely lost 15-14. Rich Brown (177) was paired with the number 1 seed immediately and lost. A big blow occurred when Keith Sherbine (190), comfortably ahead 15-2, suffered a torque fracture in his leg while attempting to take-down and was forced to forfeit. But the clincher was when Joe Paskill, last year's MAC champ and an All-American at 150 pounds was beaten 5-4 in his first match with 20 seconds to go when he hurt his neck and shoulder muscles. As a result what Coach Berrier felt could have easily been a third place team finish (if Jendrzejewski had wrestled and Sherbine had won) turned into a sixth place result.

Although Berrier said he was happy with their placement considering all that had happened, it had to be a dissappointing finish to an excellent year.

While the team didn't finish as well as hoped there were some individuals who excelled. Rob Funk (142) finished second at the MAC's which earned him an automatic trip to the nationals. Paskill battled back from his opening loss to finish third and take a wild-card spot, Todd Roadman (134) was an MAC alternate to the nationals, and Bob Gay (126) finished fourth in the MAC's.

So for the first time Juniata was sending two wrestlers to the nationals and they both did well. Rob Funk met the same man who had beaten him at the MAC's, took his man into double overtime, but eventually lost on riding time. He won the next match by default, and lost to the third seeded wrestler 8-7. Paskill also did well, but his neck injury hampered his performance and he lost.

Despite the finale, this year has been outstanding for the wrestlers, and Coach Berrier looks for more of the same next year. Although he is losing fine wrestlers in seniors Todd Roadman (134) and Joe Paskill (150) there are capable replacements in Jim Kiely and Chris Kretschmar. He can't replace the third senior, fiesty Bruce Amig, as easily, but with the reputation the program has gained in the past two years, there should be some good freshman prospects. As for the rest of the team, they can only improve with this year's experience and perhaps they will be able to combine their skill and confidence with better luck next season.

Women Take Third At MAC's

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Juniata women cagers ended regular season play on Feb. 19 (Tuesday of finals week) with their 12th consecutive win. The Indians outdribbled the Dickinson Red Devils 67-49 in Memorial Gym, to up their record to 18 to 1. The last loss was suffered on Jan. 12 at the hands of the Scranton Lady Royals, by 11 points.

JC built a 24-0 lead during the first 5:52 of the game. Nancy Roach scored 13 points during that time on drives to the basket. The defense, and particularly the press, worked well, so coach Nancy Latimore was able to go to the bench early. The half time score stood at 42-22; however 10 of Dickinson's points came at the charity stripe.

The starters returned after the intermission to build a 30 point lead, 56-26. Then the substitutes took over for the last 14:53 of the game. Despite good play, the tribe was outscored 23-11 during the latter part of the contest.

Nancy Roach was high scorer for the Indians with 17 points. Julie George added 11, while Terri Eckenrode chipped in 10 more. Nancy Zinkham grabbed 9 rebounds, while Ellen Fasnacht pulled down 8 caroms. Playing good defense, Susan Benusa added 4 steals for the winners.

Wednesday night saw the college hill gang take to the hardwoods again. This time they faced Wilkes College in Memorial Gym for a quarter final contest in the MAC championships.

Wilkes entered the contest with a 15-9 record, and left with an 88-63 loss. Despite a close first period (43-35), the Blue and Gold ran away with the game. JC outscored their opponents 45-28 during that last 20 minute period.

Julie George once again took command, tallying 26 points and 15 rebounds. Judy Pepoy aided the Indian cause with 16 markers and 12 caroms. Aimee Brua was also in double figures, scoring 15 points.

Wilkes had lost the chance to reign as MAC champs, but JC hadn't. They would now host the tournament over the next weekend. Four teams had dreams of being number 1 in the Middle Atlantic Conference — Widener, Ursinus, Scranton, and Juniata.

As fate would have it, JC was to face Scranton, while Widener and Ursinus battled it out. The two winners of Friday night's games would meet Saturday for the championship; the two losers would meet in the consolation contest.

The Scranton Lady Royals were three time defending champs, and had just beaten Elizabethtown to earn the right to face the strong Indian squad.

JC got off to a slow start, hitting on only 12/41 shots during the first half for .293. Meanwhile, the Lady Royals swished a blistering .500 (14/28) from the floor. This gave Scranton a 13 point lead throughout most of the period. The Indians did manage to bring it within 6 before the buzzer (35-29).

The second half proved to be a real battle. At 13:06, the score was knotted at 39. Before they could chant "We're number one," JC was up, 43-41 on Julie George free throws. The fans were on the edge of their seats as the lead changed hands 6 times, before Scranton went ahead 61-58, to stay.

With 3:27 left in the contest, the Tribe was only down by one, 61-60, but never could take control again. Scranton made it to the finals on a 68-61 victory, ending JC's 13 game win streak.

The officiating was pretty inconsistent throughout the contest. JC lost Nancy Zinkham to fouls early in the second period. Before that final buzzer, the Indians also lost their leading scorer, Julie George. George did lead in rebounds with 16 and added 10 points. Zinkham added 10 markers and recorded 7 steals. Judy Pepoy picked up the slack, scoring 15 points. Aimee Brua added 12, while Nancy Roach tallied 11 points and 10 caroms.

Ursinus had defeated Widener, before losing to Scranton 87-56 in the finals. JC took third by beating the Widener Pioneers, 71-64. That was the Indians fourth game of the week, plus taking finals. After the contest, the Tribe went home for a much needed three day rest, returning on Tuesday.

The Blue and Gold had an 11 point lead throughout most of the half, but Maureen McGinn made it close by hitting 2 baskets and a foul shot in the last 28 seconds of the half (35-28).

JC hit a 5 minute dry spell after the intermission, and played sloppy ball during most of the last period. The Pioneers went ahead 54-51; JC hit four free throws and a basket, 57-56. Widener then scored 6 points in 2 minutes, 62-57, and it looked like the Indians were in trouble.

Led by Judy Pepoy and Nancy Zinkham, JC scored 14 points in the last 3:38 to assure the victory. Ms. Zinkham scored the last 8 points, on one and one conversions. The Tribe went 25/29 from the foul line to set a new record — 86.2%.

Julie George paced the winners with 22 points and 15 rebounds. Judy Pepoy added 19 points, while Nancy Zinkham tallied 14 and grabbed 15 caroms.

After that short rest, the Indians would return to College Hill to prepare for eastern regionals. JC was one of 8 teams selected for AIAW Division III Eastern Region quarterfinal action.

Juniata was seeded third, behind University of Pittsburgh-Johnstown and their MAC rival, Scranton. Maybe the Tribe would get another crack at the Lady Royals!

Teams Selected

Last week the Division III All Region team was selected. Division IB is the mid-Atlantic region, comprised of Division III teams from Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia. Five women were chosen for the All Region team:

Denise Capocia ..... Scranton
Donna Mulder
..... Elizabethtown
Lisa Britt ..... UPJ
Maureen McGinn .... Widener

and Juniata's own Nancy Zinkham.

On Monday, the MAC teams were announced. JC is part of the northwest section, along with Elizabethtown, Lycoming, and Susquehanna. The All Northwest team includes:

Terri Rhian ..... Lycoming
Donna Mulder
..... Elizabethtown
Bev Hall ..... Elizabethtown and Juniata placed two members: co-captains Julie George and Nancy Zinkham.

Congratulations to both women for their outstanding achievements.

New Head Coach

The head football coach for Juniata College was named a couple weeks back and assumed the Indian post that was vacated when Dean Rossi resigned last month only a week ago.

His name is Robert W. Ash, and he comes from Cornell College (in Iowa) where he helped five Cornell teams to a 37-8 record, and two Midwest Conference titles. "Not only is Ash a proven winner," said Juniata's President Binder, "he is also highly regarded for bringing talent into a program and for helping develop scholar-athletes."

A 1973 Cornell graduate, Ash was a four-year starter at quarterback, also lettering in tennis three times. On the gridiron, he was first-team Academic All-America and All-Midwest Conference and honorable mention Little All-America. He earned his B.A. degree with highest honors and with distinction in history, was named to Phi Beta Kappa, and was tapped an NCAA "Top Five Student Athlete". He also received an NCAA postgraduate scholarship, which he used to obtain an M.A. degree in history from the University of Michigan in 1975.

Since 1975 The Cornell football team was twice conference champs and three times runner-ups, turning out three All-Americas and nine all-conference offensive backs.

Ash has also been the Rams' head tennis coach since 1976, when his squad finished fifth in the NCAA Division III Nationals. In dual meets, he compiled a four-year record of 43-9. He has further assisted with the Cornell basketball program, compiling a 22-8 record as Head JV coach, and has piloted both the men's and women's cross country teams. He has been Cornell's director of intramurals, sports information director and academic advisor for students, and since 1976, an assistant professor of physical education. "To be a head coach in Division III has been my goal since I entered coaching," Ash said, "and Juniata combines all the factors I was looking for."

September 20 is still a long ways away but its not too early to wish Coach Ash the best of luck here at Juniata.

As a sidelight, the resigned head coach, Dean Rossi, last week accepted an area scouting post with Blesto VIII, which evaluates prospects for eight National Football clubs. Rossi will scout five Midwestern states.

Library Inadequate?

Juniata College recently launched its development program for the 1980's. Included in it were provisions for constructing a new, badly needed gymnasium and refurbishing existing buildings. However, one important part of the campus was not included in the program; Beeghly Library.

While seating capacity meets national standards, its collection of books and periodicals is noticably weak. Consequently many students have used other college libraries to complete an assignment. It is not uncommon to find thirty to forty Juniata students using the library at Penn State on Saturdays in the middle of the term. With the rising cost of gasoline, it now costs between $4 and $5 per trip by car to go to Penn State and back.

Often Juniata's comprehensive fee is justified by saying that when one considers the price of other comparable institutions, Juniata is cheaper. Bucknell, Dickinson, and Gettysburg are favorites for comparison. However, when on compares the four institution's libraries one discovers that they are not so equal. Bucknell's library contains 200,000 more books and 1,000 more periodicals than are in Juniata's facility. While Bucknell has the largest collection of the colleges mentioned Dickinson and Gettysburg both have significantly larger collections than Juniata.

Financial limitations and past neglect are responsible for the library's present condition. In the past library funding relied heavily on grants. During this time, the library's collection did not increase significantly.

Dr. David Eyman, director of libraries, said that the administration has been sensitive to the library's problems and has made an effort to alleviate them. The library now receives a larger percentage of the Education and General expenditure portion of the budget. However, in a five year period (1970-75) the Consumer Price Index rose 46% due to inflation while the price of books rose 84.6% and periodicals increased by 250.7%. Therefore it is extremely difficult for a college the size of Juniata to keep up with inflation let alone make up for past neglect. Dr. Eyman feels that the solution to the problem lies in developing a larger collection in a few subject areas and having professors direct students toward those areas.

He also feels that if students would learn how to use the bibliographical references effectively many more materials would be available to them since Juniata participates in an extensive interlibrary loan system. Juniata has also recently purchased an On Line Bibliographic Service which provides an exhaustive data search on any subject area. Unlike many larger institutions which charge for this service, it is free to any Juniata student.

While some provisions have been made to more adequately meet student needs there will be no major library funding campaign until at least 1990 when Juniata announces its development for the 90's program.

Last Friday an open house was held in Founders Hall to celebrate its recent renovation. This was the scene in the Registrar's Office.

New Furniture Angers Students

by Bob Kemper

Is it a raft? Is it a balloon? Is it the flight deck of the Starship Enterprise? No, it is vinyl lounge furniture and it has landed in Sherwood.

According to the Director of Housing, Jack Linetty, the college has purchased four sets of this furniture and will place it in appropriate lounges. Lounges under consideration include: Sherwood, Cloister, and possible East Houses.

The furniture itself consists of molded couches and end tables bolted together so that they cannot be moved separately or with any ease. According to the Housing Office, the furniture makes up in durability what it lacks in aesthetics and its heavy weight may be the solution to the problem of people stealing lounge furniture for their rooms.

Students who have already had a chance to try out the furniture feel that it is uncomfortable and "packs a smell that would kill a pacoderm at fifty paces." Although several students felt that it was adequate if you needed a place to sit, it was impractical for a party situation; especially since it is presently located in the middle of the floor.

Several of those Sherwood residents interviewed said that they felt they had been "cheated." Some felt that the money should have been spent for a new television or carpet. None of the students interviewed felt that the furniture should be placed in other dorms.

The new furniture was only one of several renovations planned for the lounges. Other plans include carpeting for the walls of Tussey-Terrace and possibly a pyramid-type structure on which students can watch television. There are also plans for carpeting, drapes and televisions for those lounges needing them.

Women Win Big

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

It's incredible! A small school like Juniata College in a small, rural town like Huntingdon, has a national contender in their women's basketball team. The JC Lady Dribblers won two games this week to advance to quarter final action.

Coach Nancy Latimore and her 13 Indians were literally flying high when they took to the air last Tuesday. Juniata was to face Columbia College in Columbia, South Carolina in first round action of the AIAW National Tournament.

Imagine, if you can, the incredible feelings — the Tribe is the third best team in the Middle Atlantic Conference, the third best team in the eastern region, and now is one of the top eight teams in the nation for Division III schools. But let's not get ahead of this dream come true . . .

The Koala Bears from South Carolina met the Indians from Pennsylvania Wednesday night and finished their basketball season in the process. Juniata scored first, but were soon trying to figure out what hit them — in the first 5:10 of the game, JC was down 11-4. It was a hard adjustment for the Blue and Gold — a small, packed gym, cheerleaders, band, and screaming fans, mostly for Columbia.

As they are such fighters, the Indians scrambled back to take a 14-13 lead at the 12:30 mark. They kept the momentum and the lead, taking an eight point bulge, 42-34, into the locker room at the intermission.

With a little less than 10 minutes to play in the game, JC was up 62-50, enjoying their biggest lead of the game. But, visions of Texas were dancing in their heads! In the rest 6:44, the offense went totally flat, scoring only 6 points. The Bears were within striking distance, 68-65 with only 3:12 left to play.

The Indians kept their wits, hit two key baskets, and the score was 72-67. Columbia was forced to foul and JC converted to ice the game. The final score was 77-69.

The defense played a super game, shutting down the Bears' scoring punch Amy Mock, who went 0/7 from the floor. In addition, Julie George had a hot

College Purchases Apartments

by Tricia Abbott

Juniata College has recently purchased an apartment building located at 1401 Washington Street but its effect on the overall crowded housing problem will be slim.

The apartments will be available to upperclassmen and will be auctioned off in a manner similar to those of East houses. There are a total of ten apartments, which can hold 36 students and one resident director. The maximum number of persons per apartment is five and the minimum number is two, others will hold three or four students.

All apartments consist of a living room, kitchen, at least one bedroom and a bath. The basic variation of the apartments is the number of bedrooms. Because of the availability of kitchen facilities located in every apartment, students will have the option to board (eat) on campus or off. The difference in tuition will be an extra $330 boarding cost to those who decide to eat on campus.

According to Director of Housing Jack Linetty, this housing purchase will not eliminate the problem of triples in dorm rooms. The projected number of freshmen for the 1980-81 year is once again high and housing will be a difficult situation requiring some students to be tripled once again.

Carter Wages Battle on Inflation

Stringent credit card requirements are in store for Americans under President Carter's new anti-inflationary proposals announced late last week. The guidelines set by the administration include faster repayment schedules and higher minimum payments, a reduction or perhaps elimination of the 25-day grace period before interest is charged and shorter termination notice for delinquent accounts.

Gerald Ford announced last Saturday that he would not be a candidate for the Republican nomination for President. Ford commented to enter the race at this time would "further divide my party." Ford called the decision "the toughest decision in my life" but reasoned "America needs a new President." Ford said he would support the republican nominee.

All Class Night Approaches

by Cherise Kent

Class presidents, student representatives, faculty members and administrators played an active role on the All Class Night Steering Committee, reviewing the status of All Class Night, which was placed on probation last year. Several modifications have been made on the event and now class presidents are busy organizing class members hoping to produce a play that will take first place in the competition.

According to senior class president Ned Ehrlich, "The classes have worked very hard to create good, technical productions. We are hoping that with the added efforts of the classes the audience will respond favorably to the productions."

Modifications devised by the All Class Night Steering Committee include cocktail parties before the dinner hour, a special dinner in Baker Refectory, and monitors in Oller Hall during the performances. Erlich stated the weight lifting club, serving as monitors will be responsible for maintaining acceptable conduct of the audience. He also stated people will be asked to leave if they are visibly drunk.

One modification designed to maintain the quality of the plays throughout the performance is, should classes deviate greatly from the original script the performance will be stopped and the class disqualified.

Erlich observed "We want to change the drunkeness to a nice evening . . . cocktail parties, a better than average dinner and plays with theatrical merit. A nice evening as opposed to a drunken fiasco."

Women in Business

Dr. Sharon Crain, director of the Women's Center for Executive Development in Chicago, will deliver an address about "Reducing Stress and Conflict at Work" at Juniata College on Tuesday, March 25.

Scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center, the lecture will focus upon the stress which women encounter as they enter into positions of increased responsibility in various businesses and organizations.

Dr. Crain's address will begin a two-day workshop on "Women in Business." It is sponsored by Juniata's department of economics and business administration, and is funded, in part, by a grant from Household Finance Corporation.

Prior to directing the Chicago center — which develops training programs and seminars about all aspects of upward mobility for women — she served as corporate manager of Career Opportunities, where she created and managed the Women's Career Development Department.

An avid writer, Dr. Crain is the author of "Taking Stock: A Women's Guide to Corporate Success," published in 1977. The book — a practical guide to success for women who want to compete in the male-dominated "game" of business — was excerpted in "Viva" magazine and was offered as the main selection of the McMillan Book Club.

Her second book, "How to Succeed in Business Without Ever Crying," was published in 1979. It is a self-instructional workbook designed to build confidence in areas such as assertiveness and to provide understanding of the "organizational gamesmanship aspect of business." Dr. Crain also has authored numerous magazine articles about women and success and serves as a columnist for "Viva" magazine.

Along Muddy Run

by Jeff Boulton

Here we are in the middle of monsoon season again. Some say that monsoon season is in the fall, others contend that it's in the spring. It's one of those intensely controversial issues that people sometimes have to fight and die for. Luckily we are at Juniata and nobody is into dying. Fighting, maybe. Mostly we just compromise. For example, monsoon season occurs twice a year in Huntingdon County, during the fall and the spring.

But how many times do people get really riled up about anything here? Not very often. Let's see . . . once a whole bunch of us got radical enough to walk around in front of the Science Temple with signs proclaiming, "Waste the Ayatollah," and "Blow Up Iran." This was probably as much a result of massive consumption of alcohol as it was because of extensive patriotism. The main factor, however, seemed to be the man with the bright lights and the videotape camera from a local TV station.

Seriously, though. Everyone seems to agree that Anita Bryant is a complete wipeout. But why do we then say that queers are wierd? How would you like to brown-nose a homosexual elementary school teacher? I'd rather eat a lot of Florida oranges. Or Anita Bryant if I were in a plane wreck in the Andes. Like a constipated person, what this campus needs is a good movement. Indiana U. of Pa. had over a thousand demonstrators at a sit-in staged against a $100-150 tuition increase two years ago. At Juniata we can't even get one person against our own price hikes, which greatly exceed those of IUP! I'll admit that we probably need these increases to maintain the current level of quality education, but it is one example of our apathetic attitudes here at JC.

What we need here is a Gay Rights Movement and a Down With Queers League; a women's club and a chauvinist society; maybe the creation of some campus political parties for Student Government in order to promote some causes and change existing policies such as half-kegs in rooms or something. What I'm referring to is some kind of good, clean CONFLICT, involving little more strenuous mental activity than the Storming of the Arch (which, by the way, was pretty useless this year) and no physical prowess whatsoever.

For one thing, we have on this campus two reasonably useful tools in the struggle against just about any injustice: the newspaper and the radio station. Through the media, a small group of people can reach nearly all the students at Juniata. I'm surprised nobody has tried yet, excepting perhaps the Women's League. Why does everybody get all excited about being on TV-6 when you can personally say almost anything you want in the newspaper or on WKVR? Channel Six gave us ten seconds, and there were over 200 of us. WKVR and the Juniatian are both in great need of news and/or causes, and while the people involved in them are too busy to organize interest groups themselves, they would love to do their jobs for a reason besides the fact that it looks nice on a transcript. Excitement is the greatest but we in the College media are about half tired of writing about monsoons and boredom. Isn't there any spicy news?

Is there nothing more to student spirit at Juniata than a once-a-year Storming of the Arch? Do we even vote? I wish somebody would do something, because I don't feel like writing an article about Huntingdon's crummy weather every week, and I don't think anybody needs to read about it either.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

This letter is being written to express thanks, which are greatly due to everyone who helped make the homecoming celebration for the women's basketball team a fantastic success. I will refrain from mentioning names, need I forget somone. You know who you are!

People who: attended the organizational meeting, painted signs, drove downtown for the decorations and flowers, helped decorate the gym, supplied the cake and other refreshments, ran all over campus trying to get walkie-talkies, rang the bell in Founders, drove cars in the caravan, called ahead from 45 minutes away, organized a pep band that sounded really great, and patiently waited for the telephone and answered all calls faithfully even when we heard the team's flight was delayed.

The administration, faculty, employees of Juniata, food service and maintenance and students as well as members of the community all played a crucial part in making the celebration work. Thank you so much!

And to the team: I'm sure I can safely speak for everyone who participated; we're very proud of the success you've had this year!

Audrey Artz

Dear Editor,

I am writing in regard to the service recently taken over by Student Government — the emergency student loans. My case goes as follows:

On Monday, March 10, I applied for an emergency student loan to the SG under the assumption that I would receive it Thursday the 14th. Upon going to my mailbox on Thursday I found no signs of an approved application. At 1:30 I went to the SG office (which supposedly has office hours between 12:30 and 3). What I found was another irate individual facing

by John W. George

For the normal unenlightened member of the Juniata community, natural encounters at school in the spring are a collection of brief but fleeting glimpses of the surrounding country-side. This is usually viewed from within the constricting confines of the impersonal automobile, whose robot contents are whisked in a metal veil of anonymity.

This situation can be easily remedied by placing the neophyte on the seat of an unrestricting bicycle and heading the person off into the wild environs of Penn's Woods. The bicycle is unique in that it offers full exposure to the elements, an excellent excuse for exercise, and a relationship with the natural milieu that no other means of transportation except walking can provide. Walking in its essence is comparable to bicycling for its involvement with the environment but there is nothing like the exhilaration of traveling at breakneck speeds down a mountain-side on a free-wheeling bicycle, which obviously a hiker cannot do unless splattered on the grill of a Mack truck.

In this and ensuing installments I will familiarize the faithful reader with the joys and thrills associated with bicycling and the ways and means of how the enthusiast can partake in the experience. For now, just the basic routes and points of interest of one ride will be given.

One trip that would be suited for the novice and the expert alike takes in the area just west of Huntingdon. It involved no steep grades of heavily-traveled roads. (As a side-note, route 22, although a well-paved road, is generally avoided because of the relentless onslaught of trucks and otherwise dense traffic. Route 22 will only be used in extreme situations — and then only as a route between two other secondary roads). The trip is only about 8 miles long, but it makes up for its short length by passing through the rustic Hartslog Valley, north of McConnellstown.

The rider or hiker (this can be hiked in less than a day) starts off by taking Moore Street down the hill to the Penn Street underpass. After crossing the bridge to Smithfield, stay on this road and cross the railroad track before the route 22 overpass. Continue for 1¼ miles on this road past the industrial park and the fairgrounds until you reach the route 26 junction. Turn left on 26 and enter the outskirts of McConnellstown. Route 26 is basically a level road that runs parallel to Warrior Ridge on its southwesterly journey. Upon reaching the heart of McConnellstown, take the first right after going through a gradual 90 degree turn in the road. This turn is directly across from a gravel pit operation. You are now on the celebrated Hartslog Valley road. Observe the countryside dotted with antique farmhouses.

After about another 1¼ miles you will come to a jagged crossroad — that is, the crossing road overlaps Hartslog for about 500 feet. Disregard then the left turns that go into Williamsburg and Alexandria; bear right on the Williamsburg-Huntingdon road. This will eventually take you, after a medium climb, to route 22. Turn right and from here it is downhill all the way into Huntingdon. To avoid 22, turn left onto 26 north — you will hit the original road in Smithfield just past Budget Beverage. Hang a left at the light and you're back home once again after a fun day communing with nature.

the same situation as I. On my way to the information desk to get the number of some SG member I came across Vice-President Dal Wetzel, much to my great fortune. I explained my situation to Dale who in turn called president Ken Anderson to investigate the situation. This is where the fun began.

Apparently in order for a loan to be approved it must have the signature of Ken Anderson and SG treasurer Joe Orolin along with Financial Aid Director Ken Grugel. The problem seemed to stem from the fact that Joe Orolin has an internship this spring which requires his absence from campus throughout most of the day. Dale Wetzel offered to sign in place of the negligent Mr. Orolin but the idea was not well accepted by Mr. Anderson. Dale, who realized the seriousness of the situation went down to the office and signed the applications against the wishes of Ken Anderson and interrupted a meeting in order to get Mr. Grugel's signature.

The issues here are first that students must plan emergencies to occur on Thursdays in order to receive financial assistance. Once we manage to plan these emergencies one day out of the week we are thrown a curve due to the shortsightedness of President Ken Anderson who required two and only two specific signatures, his and Joe Orolin's. And why was it that applications filled out on Monday were still sitting on Joe's desk Thursday unsigned. Obviously Joe had not been in the SG office since before Monday. I see a student internship as no excuse for a SG representative to become completely delinquent in his appointed duties. Not to mention the fact the SG office hours seem to be at the discretion of members and sheer luck of those who need them.

I sincerely admire SG for taking control of a service that was going to be discontinued, but unless the service is provided adequately it is relatively useless. I would also like to extend my appreciation to Dale Wetzel who did his best to compensate for the negligence of others.

Thank you,
Tricia Abbott

Green Growing Strong at J.C.

by Wendy Chamberlain

As far as writers go, novelist Graham Greene is an oddity. While contemporaries — Fitzgerald, Hemingway, Faulkner, Wolfe, Steinbeck — had a tendency to burn out early, Greene still writes successfully at age 76.

Greene's first Broadway success came in 1957 with The Potting Shed, and 1980 marks the release of a film version of The Human Factor. He's of particular interest now to Juniata because The Potting Shed comes to Oller Hall March 28 and 29.

"Suspense with a fine cutting edge," comments Newsweek. Graham Greene calls it "a psychological detective story."

His terse novels have regularly become films or shows, and they have a habit of appearing with uncanny timeliness. The Human Factor, which features a double agent in the British Secret Service, made its film debut just as Sir Anthony Blunt was discovered to

CHET Opens Season

Charles R. Pollock, Juniata's public relations director and Andy Dwyer, a Juniata senior, will be appearing in the Carriage House Experimental Theatre's first production of the 1980 season, Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolf?" Pollock plays the part of George, a professor at a small private New England college.

Becca Hayes of State College portrays Pollock's wife Martha who is also the daughter of the college president. Andy Dwyer plays the role of Nick, who along with his wife Honey, joins George and Martha at their home after a college faculty party.

That's when the fireworks begin as George and Martha unleash a series of ruthless verbal attacks at each other and their guests. The CHET production will be staged Friday and Saturday, March 21 and 22 and Wednesday through Saturday, March 26-29, at the CHET Center For The Arts, 613 Washington Street. For reservations, call the box office at 643-5125. Student tickets are available for $3.00.

Baseball Bets on Better Year

by Doug Williams

Coach Bill Berrier feels there were a number of factors that led to the Indians' disappointing 8-10 baseball season last year. Among them a lack of total offense, a large number of mental mistakes and costly errors, and most importantly the spring break layoff.

To help remedy this last problem, Berrier has added to the schedule a southern tour which includes six games in six days against some Division I and II teams. He hopes this will solve last year's layoff problem when, after a 5-1 start, the Indians won only three of their next twelve games.

With this trip, which includes games against Division I schools Davidson and N.C. State at Charlotte, and Pfeiffer, one of the top five NIAA teams, Berrier hopes to keep his team mentally sharp. Combine this with better team speed and bat control and you come up with a winning season, according to the coach.

He'll have to do it with some holes in his pitching staff. Gone are two top Indian pitchers, Jim Jones and Gerard Kuha. Jones led the staff last year with a 1.72 earned run average and Kuha was second at 3.18. Both were 1-0.

That makes junior Mike Straka, who was 2-1 with a 3 57 ERA, the ace of the staff. Close behind him are seniors Pat Daly and Chris Lyons. Daly, who led the team in innings pitched, had a 1-3 mark and an ERA of 4.18. Lyons was 1-2 with a 4.32 ERA.

Other returning pitchers include sophomores Don Pote (6.00, 1-2), Scott Johnson (9.00, 1-1), John Seymour (1.80 ERA), and senior Phil Fortino who was injured last year.

Out for the first time are sophomores Kevin Showvaker and Gregg Kucera, and freshman lefty Bob McDonald. Although they have little experience, Berrier feels they all can make a strong contribution.

This give Juniata a solid if unspectacular pitching corps. The only weakness may be the shortage of southpaws (Daly and McDonald).

Last year's hitting load rested on the shoulders of sophomore Ed McEwen, and the second sacker is counted on heavily again this year. McEwen was one of the nation's top freshman in 1979 with an average of .492 and a slugging percentage of .678, and was named to the MAC All-Star team.

Besides being a top national hitter, McEwen also topped the Indians in average and slugging percentage along with runs scored (20) and doubles (8). He also was second in RBIs with 16 and homeruns (1), all while playing a solid second base.

The rest of the infield is fairly secure also. At first seniors Daly (.365, 20 RBIs, 13 runs, 8 doubles) and Lyons (.273) will platoon as well as pitching and being the designated hitter.

Shortstop Gwyn Woodward was a pleasant surprise last year. The senior hit .283, scored 11 runs and drove in the same number while leading the club in triples and homers with 2 each. In his first full playing year he received the Charles F. Goodale award as Juniata's outstanding baseball player.

However, Woodward, or maybe McEwen, may have to be moved to third base depending on how senior Scotty O'Neill (.240, 1 HR) performs. In the past O'Neill has been somewhat erratic, especially in the field, the Berrier admits this is the potential trouble spot for the infield.

In the outfield sophomore Jeff Miles (.267, 12 RBIs) will be starting in center. Rightfield is taken by senior Dave Bender (.240, one triple, 11 runs) who, along with Miles, gives the Indians some speed. Left field is more open with two promising freshman, Gerry Crowley and John Widener, most likely to inherit the job.

At catcher Jim Zimmerman, a senior who hit .292 last year, is slated to start. He is backed up by two freshman, Carl Pavolic and Pat Clark.

Overall the Indians shape up as a pretty solid team. They have a little inexperience at pitcher and in leftfield, but freshmen have stepped in in the past to perform well, so this may be a small problem. There is a fairly solid bench and several players can play more than one position. With good team speed and bat control, Berrier intends to play aggressive ball, letting the other team make the mistakes and hopes to put a lot of runs on the new electric scoreboard. He'll get his first chance when the Indians play Penn State next week.

hand, scoring 25 points. Aimie Brua and Nancy Roach tallied 19 and 14 respectively.

There were now only 16 teams left in national competition. Would JC survive the next round as well?

The College Hill Gang took to the air again, flying to Abilene, Texas Thursday morning. This time it was a battle between Tribes, as the Indians of McMurry College hosted the Indians of Juniata College. It was second round action of the AIAW Division III National Tournament. McMurry had a 21-13 record entering the contest and were Region IV champs.

Like usual, JC got off to a slow start (they are well known as a second half team). Also, the defense couldn't contain the 6'0" sophomore center Tammy Gober, McMurry's scoring ace, who scored 12 points during the first half. As a result, the Blue and Gold left the half on the lower end of a 30-26 score.

The turn around came with the adjustments the Tribe made at the outset of the second period. The defense fronted Gober, which shook their offense. It seemed as if they depended on their center too much, as they missed several opportunities at outside shots. The JC lady cagers also improved considerably in the offensive department, including their first foul shot of the night.

McMurry played a very physical game and kept it close down to the wire. JC opened up eight point and five point leads during the second half, but they always came right back. When that final buzzer sounded, the Pennsylvania Indians were on their way to quarter final action!

Nancy Zinkham paced the winners 68-66 effort with 18 points (7/10 from the floor and 4/4 from the charity stripe), 9 rebounds, 2 blocked shots, and 6 steals. Judy Pepoy added 14 points while Julie George chipped in 12 more. Nancy Roach grabbed 7 caroms.

Upon the Tribe's return to College Hill Sunday night, they were greeted by a caravan and a reception in the gym. This did much to keep the momentum going. Coach Nancy Latimore summed up the team's feelings in these words, "The reception in the gym was unbelievable. We had a fantastic trip south and the reception when we returned to Juniata was certainly one of the highlights of the whole trip."

While the Indians were busy clinching a spot in the third round, Scranton University faced Eastern Connecticut. The Lady Royals advanced on a 78-71 score, and now have the dubious honor of facing JC for a record fourth time this season.

Juniata did face Scranton Tuesday night in the all crucial quarterfinals. The four winners of that third round will advance to Spokane, Washington this weekend. With the great support of the student body, we hope that the women will be making one more flight this year — to Spokane and a national title.

TRIBE NOTES: With her 25 points against Columbia, Julie George has bypassed the 1000 point plateau. She now has 1027 points and the rest of this season and all of next year. Good luck Julie!

have been such a "mole." A former secret intelligence agent himself, Greene draws upon his own experience to write of colonial regimes, abuses of political power, and the threat of unrestrained intelligence agencies.

Of his many bestsellers, Greene considers the best to be The Power and the Glory, The Quiet American and Travels With My Aunt.

Though some would simplistically categorize Greene as a "Catholic novelist," he insists that he is rather a "novelist who happens to be Catholic." Twenty years ago he was somewhat of a renegade in the Catholic Church because of the suicide motif in his writing. The motif is not surprising: He once played Russian roulette with his brother's revolver. Unhappiness at home and school caused him to attempt suicide.

The Potting Shed is at the same time persistently optimistic and comically fatalistic. That's typical Graham Greene. "I have accomplished a little but failed a great deal," he says. "Failed in human relationships, which is more important than writing."

But his writing is lauded. "Greene has a subtle and brilliant mind, a precise and graceful way with words," says The Reporter.

Check him out for yourself next weekend in Oller Hall, Friday and Saturday, March 28 and 29. Tickets are $1 at the Ellis information desk, and curtain time is 8:15.

Dedication Set for Humanities Center

by Mike Ford

The new Humanities Center, along with the five adjacent buildings that compose the Humanities Cluster, will be dedicated on Founder's Day, April 17, as part of an entire day of Humanities dedication activities.

An abbreviated class schedule and closing of campus facilities from 11 a.m. to 12 noon will enable students and faculty to attend the day's first activity, a convocation ceremony in Oller Hall. The convocation will honor the college's efforts and achievements in the Humanities field.

The convocation ceremony will be highlighted by an address by Dr. Edward D. Eddy, Provost of the Pennsylvania State University. Dr. Eddy, a distinguished educator for more than three decades, has served as Penn State's Provost since 1977. He is a graduate of Yale and Cornell Universities, and served as president of Chatham College for 17 years. He also served as acting president and provost of the University of New Hampshire for a total of six years.

Following the 11:00 a.m. convocation, a 12:15 luncheon will be served to facilitate the day's activities. At 2:00 p.m. the dedication ceremony will be held outside, in front of the new Humanities Center. The Cluster will be dedicated as the Charles A. Dana Humanities Cluster, and will host an open house throughout the afternoon and evening. Students and faculty members will be in the cluster buildings to give tours, entertain questions, and offer refreshments to those attending the open house.

The highlight of the open house will take place at 8:15 p.m. in Shoemaker Gallery. Dr. George M. Docherty will read poems of Dylan Thomas, and the Concert Choir, under the directions of Bruce A. Hirsch, will sing choral selections. The entire campus community is invited and encouraged to attend these events on Founder's Day.

Center Board elections:

Winners Promise More Programs

by Chris Corry

Russ Cameron has been elected as Chairperson of Center Board and Scott Johnson will be the new Vice Chairperson. They will assume their new duties on April 1 under the tutelage of Mindy Anderson and Val Vella, Chairperson and Vice Chairperson, respectively.

Russ and Scott hope to make Center Board a more active and accessable organization. "We will increase the activities" states Scott. Center Board is anticipating at least a doubling of the present budget and both winners see this as an opportunity to greatly expand and improve campus activities. They, along with Wayne Justham, plan on at least one big concert next year, and hopefully two, but that depends upon the success of the first. Center Board is the organization that can "provide the money for things that involve the whole student body" says the new Chairperson.

Student input is a major concern of the two winners. "I didn't even know what it (Center Board) was, until a week before I ran" claims Russ. He wants to prevent that from happening next year. "I think there should be more people coming to Center Board with their own ideas." Scott voiced the same opinion, "Hopefully students will come to us."

A Publicity Committee to help broadcast Center Board's activities is being considered. Another idea is a Survey Committee to provide a direct channel of student opinions.

Russ and Scott anticipate no serious problems getting students involved in Center Board activities and committees, despite the fact that this year's Center Board has often had trouble with student apathy. "I'm sure we will be able to get students involved." Both plan to "talk to a lot of students."

Both are sophomores currently living in East Houses. Neither winner has actively participated in any form of student government on the college level. Scott plays on the Basketball and Baseball teams; Russ is a member of the Ski Club, Scapul and Probe, and participates in Intramural sports. They don't foresee any scheduling conflicts as Center Board members; "It's not really that much" says Scott. "And they'll arrange the meetings around us."

Klepfer Encourages Student Interest

by Heather MacCrindle

Doug Klepfer, newly elected Student Government President, intends to make Student Government a "more visible" part of campus life. "Government is here as a service for the students," he says, "and everyone should know what's going on."

This can only be done, he feels, with a strong Senate. Klepfer is now actively encouraging anyone who is "interested and willing to put in the time" to run in next month's elections for senator. "That's what will make Government work."

Feeling that interest is the main qualification, not experience, Doug looks forward to next year's senators being hard working. A strong government will be the result of a strong senate, he believes, who let themselves be known to their dorm in order to get more student feedback. The more student feedback is directed toward a "visible" senate, the more student government will be able to get done what students want.

In his own campaign for the presidency, Doug believed in making himself known not only as a name on a poster, but as a person interested in representing students. "I wanted people to take the campaign seriously," he says, so he knocked on as many doors as he could to show just how important it is to choose a person who is really interested in working for a leadership position.

Having served this year as dorm senator for North East, Doug knows the ropes of Student Government. In his campaign he tried to make himself known mainly to freshman and those not too familiar with the workings of Juniata's Government. "I was not only campaigning for myself, but for what student government stands for too."

Right now Doug is still "thinking about the issues" that he might like to change or support in next year's government. He is also considering people to appoint as Secretary, Treasurer and to other positions in various committees needed next year. Doug believes that "everybody interested in any representative role should be given a chance."

Student Government

by Tricia Abbott

The initial discussion of the Student Government meeting held March 19 in Tussey Terrace lounge was the new procedure concerning the maintenance of washing machines and dryers. Stickers will be placed on the machines explaining what should be done when a breakdown occurs.

A member of the committee for All Class Night stated that the cost of the party after the plays will total $700: $350 for the band and $350 for the alcohol used in the punch to be served.

Profits from Godspell will go toward financing the two buses SG sponsored for the women's basketball game in Scranton. The total cost incurred was $500.

The problems centered around the convenience loan system was brought up. Treasurer Joe Orolin feels the problem resulting from his internship will be solved when the new officers take over. It was also suggested that more than two people be allowed to sign the application forms to alleviate any hold up.

A motion was approved concerning a sports banquet to be held for all sports with student government covering the expense of the cost of the awards.

Tussey senator Andrea Wirth suggested that with the arrival of spring, trash cans should be set up outside to alleviate some of the litter problems which occured last year.

Shah Requires Surgery

The Shah's need for more surgery added to the pessimism surrounding the attempt in Washington to secure the release of the American hostages in Teheran. A dispute between an American medical team and a Panamanian one over control of the operation to remove the Shah's cancerous spleen might return the Shah to America if an alternative site cannot be found.

Editorial:

Senate "Hookey" No Joke

Juniata's campus is in constant flux. A freshman class settles into the mainstream of student life in the fall. Every year. Sophomores become juniors. Juniors become seniors. A senior class dons caps and gowns each Spring and parts campus as alumni. Every year.

Juniata's traditions are anticipated every year by the campus community. The traditions include Homecoming, Madrigal Dinner, All Class Night and the Raft Regatta. According to some, traditions lend stability to times forever changing.

A perennial issue plaging student government — closely approaching the category of tradition — is the failure of student government members to realize the responsibilities of their positions. This problem seems to perpetuate. Like a weed it crops up. Discovered or ignored; exterminated or untamed.

Senators and government wrestle with the responsibility of attending all regularly scheduled senate meetings. These meetings are scheduled two weeks in advance. Senates, past and present, find it difficult to contend with absenteeism. Last years absenteeism drained vitality from the student senate. The problem caused former president Bill Blose to respond with a senate by-law designating the college governance committee as monitors of "senators actions in connection with student government" gained senate approval on January 16, 1979. That same week an editorial in The Juniatian cited senate "hookey" as no joke.

Maybe the college governance committee laughs at senate hookey. According to the senate constitution any student government member failing to fulfill his or her responsibilities may be impeached. Attendance at senate meetings is the primary responsibility of student government members. If the governance committee monitors such action, it's a well kept secret. There has been no report from the governance committee since it was approved on January 16, 1979. If there have been no reports because they had nothing to report on, they were mistaken.

Since the beginning of the senate term several senators have amassed frequent absences: Jeff Keffer, Terrace senator (5); Joy Sill, Flory-Kline senator (6); and Dale Wetzel, vice-president (4) and Julie George (4). Wetzel attended his last meeting on January 16. The last meeting attended by Sill was January 31.

Regular meetings continue to convene and adjourn. The problem of senate absenteeism has been ignored by the senate. Failure to attend to this problem will ensure its return. Every year.

Letters to the Editor

Orolin

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week Tricia Abbott's letter recounted her ordeal obtaining a student loan through the channels of Student Government.

In the process she labeled treasurer Joe Orolin "negligent" and "completely delinquent in his appointed duties" because he was not constantly at the student's disposal.

We question Ms. Abbott's patience and her sweeping slanderous generalization. Joe has worked on the troubled Alfarata budget and attended meetings he wasn't required to attend — all to help reorganize the organization's finances. From our viewpoint, Joe is quite conscientious. Perhaps the accuser should have researched the accused a bit more and avoided a generalized misnomer.

Sincerely,

Margaret Broadwell,
Alfarata Editor

Marjorie Love,
Business Manager

Regarded

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to Tricia Abbott's letter of March 20. When, for God's sake, is Miss Abbott going to stop complaining about every little thing that does not go her way. Once again she's taken pen in hand to promote the cause of short-sighted selfishness.

Student Government took over the old emergency loan program so that the student would not have to spend all of his/her time looking for the right people's signature. Now, under the auspices of Student Government, the student needs only to fill out an application for the loan. Student Government then goes about the business of acquiring the appropriate signatures for approval, removing the burden from students. The new loan program has been appropriately renamed "Student Convenience Loan."

As for the loan application requiring two signatures, that was a control feature that was built in out of necessity. In any transaction that involves an exchange of money between Student Government and the student population, whether it be clubs or individuals, two signatures are required — the president's and the treasurer's. This is, unfortunately, a necessary precaution against theft. If the approval for money transactions needed only one signature, there is the possibility, albeit remote, that an authorized individual could credit withdrawn monies to student organization accounts while actually putting it in his/her own account.

I have worked with both Joe Orolin and Ken Anderson in Student Government over the past two years. Never was there any reason to believe that they were anything other than responsible and dedicated. Whenever there arose the need to form a committee that required reliable people and intelligent input Joe Orolin and Ken Anderson are two people that were sought out. This is not only my opinion but was, and I expect still is, the opinion of many other students, faculty, and administration.

And so, Miss Abbott, you see that you were wrong on several accounts, but you are not the only one. The fact of the matter is that your loan should not be approved as Mr. Wetzel is not authorized to aprove the loan. I gathered from your letter that you felt Mr. Wetzel was one of our better Student Government officials when in fact he has missed the last 3 Student Government meetings. Perhaps Miss Abbott should take a good look around her and analyze more carefully who really is in the students' corner. The thing that really disturbs me though, is that there is a distinct possibility that you will be the Editor of the Juniatian next year. I love this school and everything it stands for, but there are some things that won't be missed.

Sincerely,

Bill Blose
Former Student Government President

Conscientious

Dear Editor:

I would like to reply to Tricia Abbott's letter and some of the misconceptions she has about Student Government loans. In the first place these loans are convenience loans, not emergency loans. In a past article in the Juniatian this was stated along with the fact that Student Government could refuse to give a loan to someone if we felt they were a bad risk. For this reason, we felt that it was neccessary to have two signatures from Student Government people who would be responsible to follow who had repaid their loans on time and who had loans. It was decided that Joe Orolin and I would be responsible to see that the loans were not being abused. I do not see this as being short-sighted. We tried to consider all these problems in the half year we spent setting up the loans.

If there were actual emergencies, we have tried to cover them in the same day whenever possible. We realize the system is not perfect, but it is new and we are trying to iron out the problems. As far as office hours, we had difficulties at the beginning of the term with people's schedules being changed, but I think you will find someone there during office hours from

About this time every year, students' thoughts turn to the springtime and all the activities of the season. One of these activities, at Juniata College, is All Class Night. This year we're going to have a "classy" one.

In ancient times, for example in the spring of 1975 and maybe 1976 (the facts are still here), All Class Night was rowdy. The plays and everything went smoothly because nobody went into Oller Hall in a state of blitzedness. But All Class Night itself was still rowdy, a veritable spring fling: Student Government would buy 20-25 half-kegs of an unmentionable liquid and the students would all go out to the fairgrounds outside of Smithfield and do their best to drain the containers of their hazardous contents and filter the liquids through their many bodily tissues. It was the biggest party of the whole year at JC, even bigger than Mountain Day. It was the greatest thing for campus unity and clique-breaking.

By the spring of 1977 (now I know this date is right), the present senior class was the freshman class, and somebody somewhere proclaimed from on high that there would be no more All Class Night All Campus Parties. Of course, my Admissions tourguide had shown me Oller Hall and extolled the virtues of the togetherness that resulted from All Class Night and the big Party afterwards. She had

The trip to Scranton was an incredible experience. One that I'll not forget. The Juniata fans wanted to be with their team and it didn't matter what the outcome was. They wanted to support the girls regardless. Hopes of winning were doused fairly early on but the fans stuck it out with true sportsmanship and pride. We were down by almost forty points and the crowd cheered, "We are proud of you, we are proud of you." To many cynics such a scene, five hundred wild and delirious Juniatians remaining controlled and vocal, would be impossible. But they pulled it off. In the end, after leaving the buses and walking back to our rooms, we felt satisfied; it was worth it. The following is a play by play account of the trip and the game. Some might find it decadent, others humorous, see for yourself.

2:35-Mass of students and professors unable to cram onto buses. Numerous backpacks and bags bulging with obvious shapes are in hands of fans.

2:45-Board bus. Run for seat. Party begins. Misc. bottles appear from bags, front pockets, back pockets; all pockets.

2:50-Noise makers doled out. Bus filled with obnoxious sounds.

2:59-Depart from Juniata. Energy is intense. Rugby players begin singing and drinking.

3:09-Buses play leap-frog on Route 22. No apparent reason for delay.

3:15-Administrative representative on bus makes first toast. "May we make it there before the back of the bus does." He consumes a can of something.

3:20-First quiet moment.

3:25-Concoction created of several liquids. Administrative rep. tests for toxicity. Potion is fine.

3:55-Reporter feeling strain of trip.

4:15-People standing up looking for Scranton signs. Two and half hours yet to go.

4:50-Limbo has taken control of bus. Student reports nirvana.

5:30-Rugger's songs getting increasingly rude. Bus load loves it.

5:45-Buses stop. One has broken down. Crowd upset. Ready to riot. Will wait for Scranton.

6:00-Buses stop at rest area and wait for last bus. Its passengers divided onto other buses. Crowd loves more company.

6:30-Well on our way to Scranton. All is quiet for moment. Concoction has been consumed. All are numb.

7:00-Energy level rising. Scranton can be smelled.

7:30-We arrive. Like cavalry we pile into gym. Loudness and cheers. Much noise. Ball is tossed up. Fans cheer.

7:08-We have early lead. Loose it.

7:20-We are down several points. Fans are continuing cheers. Band is playing well. Cheerleaders enjoyable to watch. (Time from this point is lost . . . excitement too high)

Halftime. We are down by less than ten points. Crowd goes wild. The president is walking about leading cheers. Fun.

Game begins . . . no point to drag it out. The score is there. Fans cheer, "We are . . . J.C." "We are . . . J.C." Scranton fans are rude. We continue undisturbed. We lose. Quiet walk to buses.

Trip home filled with more rugby songs and sleep. Amazingly the two compliment each other. Arrive at Juniata. Tired. Throat hurts. Ready to pass out. We all deserve to pass out. We did well tonight. Loosing was rough but we stayed in there. Not a bad day and night. Good time.

Alcohol Found To Cause Sterility

ed. note — the following article appeared in the February 2 issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education earlier this year.

Men who drink excessively are "slowly and irreversibly" destroying their masculinity, according to recent studies at the University of Pittsburgh General Clinical Research Center.

Five to eight years of drinking an average of a pint or more of hard liquor per day may cause impotency, sterility, and changes in secondary sexual characteristics. In some cases, the studies show, the damage is irreversible.

The problems, however, are not restricted to skid-row alcoholics. In fact, says David Van Theil of the Pittsburgh center, early signs of alcohol damage to the reproductive system can appear after a single binge.

After six years of studying the effects of alcohol on men, the Pittsburgh researchers say they have determined, in part, the reason for sexual dysfunction among heavy drinkers.

Until now, many scientists had assumed that sexual difficulties associated with drinking were related to liver damage. Dr. Van Theil's study shows, however, that alcohol directly damages the brain and the testes.

A report of Dr. Theil's studies appears in the January-February issue of the Research Resources Reporter, published by the National Institute of Health.

Once again the people at Laughing Bush entertained the campus with their first coffeehouse of the spring term last Saturday night. (see article)

Jive Bombers Do Coffeehouse

by John George

This past Saturday night, March 22, marked the first Juniata College appearance of the Penn State blues/folk band, "The Jive Bombers". They, along with seasoned campus regulars, played at Laughing Bush's first coffeehouse of the spring term. Held in the frigid Tussey-Terrace Lounge, the coffeehouse began slightly after the advertised time of 9 p.m. with the playing of Juniata's own Gus Creedon. In an air of informal professionalism that would definitely become more apparent later on, Gus slowly picked his way through such coffeehouse favorites as Fogleburg's "The Gambler" and Pure Praire League's "Aimee". Tacked onto his set for supposed individuality was an acoustic tune from Pink Floyd's "The Wall" and Greg Lake's "Lucky Man".

Glenn Beasley was next to face a listless and disrespectful crowd. Changing radically from his basic repertoire of Bob Dylan, Mr. Beasley ventured into the richly-textured real of Led Zeppelin. Some of them were only recognizable when the lyrics began, and even then the sound came across as passable. But this is understandable as Zeppelin's songs are among the hardest to play on acoustic guitar. The popular "Over The Hills And Far Away", which contains very precise picking, deserved the highest praise. Dealing with a broken string and thus a new and unfamiliar guitar, Mr. Beasley then completed his set with Neil Young's "My My, Hey Hey" (Out of the Blue) and the Rolling Stone's "Dear Doctor" and "No Expectations".

Leading off with "Midnight Rider" and a Grateful Dead song, Rick Mayher was onstage once again to sing his acoustical tunes in a breaking tenor voice. The Beatles' "Golden Slumbers" was an extraordinary number in that Beatles songs are hardly ever played at Juniata coffeehouses. For the middle of the road fans was Neil Diamond's "I Am I Said". After being joined by Bruce Rowland, Rick and Bruce tried to harmonize on Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young's "Teach Your Children".

Exhibiting the most technique so far, Steve Daniels and his 12-string guitar went into a Gordon Lightfoot ditty and two songs from Neil Young. His other songs displayed a calm and laid-back attitude.

The return of Gary Lee Baker to a much more receptive audience also took place Saturday night. His set partially consisted of a Dave Mason tune, Peter Frampton's "By Your Side", and the "Wizard". Prominent in his style in his basic control and knowledge of the material.

To climax the coffeehouse on a good note to a small but obviously dedicated crowd, "The Jive-Bombers" took to the stage. Playing through an improved sound system, Eddie Dewaine, Richard Sliegh, and Jerry Zolten went into a number of classic blues tunes such as "Jug Band Blues" and "Fishing Blues". "Fishing Blues" featured the bottle guitar playing of Eddie. The device used was an actual beer bottle. Other songs included the traditional "City of New Orleans", "Blood Shot Eyes", "Will the Circle Be Unbroken?", and a Hank Williams tune. However, the aforementioned songs were just an inkling of the songs played that night. There many songs which I failed to recognized. These songs were classics of the blues/folk genre. Each member of the band showed an exuberance and dedication that the audience immediately picked up. Equally impressive were the guitar-playing and the harmonica-playing of Eddie and Richard respectively. The vocals of Jerry came through especially clear. As a group, they functioned flawlessly and cohesively.

After two well-deserved encores, "The Jive-Bombers" reluctantly left the stage to moans of disapproval. I sincerely hope that Laughing Bush Enterprises gets this seminal back again to Juniata.

"Potting Shed" To Open

Graham Green's "The Potting Shed," set for Friday and Saturday (March 28-29) in Juniata College's Oller Auditorium, offers theatre goers a view of the distinguished playwright's "double vision."

As described by D. Bruce Davis, director of the production and chairman of Juniata's theatre department, "The Potting Shed" is at once "persistently optimistic and comically fatalistic, in typical Graham Green fashion."

Davis explains that the drama is described by the playwright as a "psychological detective story," and as such, it contains Greene's "double vision" of life as both optimistic and pessimistic.

Curtain time for the drama is 8:15 p.m. both Friday and Saturday. The public is cordially invited to attend. Admission is $1.

Greene, a contemporary of great writers such as Fitzgerald, Hemingway, Faulkner, Wolfe and Steinbeck, is now 76 years old, but he is still continuing to write, with a film version of "The Human Factor" recently released.

"The Potting Shed," which marked the playwright's first Broadway success in 1957, is further described by Davis "as an investigation into something that happened in a particular person's past."

That person, he notes, is suffering from amnesia, and as the drama unfolds, the audience becomes increasingly involved in the psychological mystery that the protagonist attempts to unravel.

Common to Greene's work — and evident in "The Potting Shed" — is a concern about human relationships.

Remarks Greene: "I have accomplished a little but failed a great deal. Failed in human relationships, which is more important than writing."

Greene may feel that he has "failed" in human relationships, but, as "The Potting Shed" suggests, he has not failed in his ability to portray human interactions in his drama.

also let me in on the point that they're now keeping secret: It was FUN.

And not only did Admissions admit to me what a great thing it was, but there were also many upperclassmen who wouldn't miss the opportunity to reminisce about All Class Nights when I finally came to Juniata in the fall. As a freshman, I could hardly wait to undergo my first All Class Night experience.

On the eve of this long-awaited gala event, there were rumors that there would be no All Campus Party. Everyone was royally bummed. But we were only freshman, and didn't know who to ask about the obvious questions about the cancellation. So a lot of students, we freshman as well as the upperclassmen, decided to have our own parties with our own cliques and watch the plays and then continue partying.

It didn't turn out very well at all. The upperclassmen made so much noise that the freshmen's play went unheard, except for the part where one actor strode out to the front of the stage and yelled the same obscenities the crowd was yelling at him. He was applauded. The students (regardless of class) were all ready to be rowdy together, but the only thing that brought anybody together was the plays; we were therefore rowdy at the plays. Much the same thing has happened the last two years: Although the All Campus Party is nearly forgotten, it is still very much a part of the spirit of All Class Night. And when the only event that brings all the campus together is the play presentations, that's where the spirit of the Party rears its rowdy head.

Well, the rest of it is history. So was the first part, but I like that phrase. This year, All Class Night is on social probation again. The only way we can have the event at all is to do what the Administration told Student Government to do. It reminds me of the Ayatollah and his student friends.

So Student Government has given the Administration some concessions. In particular, we already have some examples. First off, there shall be no partying before 9:00 pm. Usually kegs are allowed to be tapped at 6:00 on Friday evenings, but this one night is the exception of the year, whether you attend the plays or not.

And you probably will not go to the plays: There will be no students seated in the balcony, except the actors. There are about 894 seats in Oller, of which 650 or so are on the lower level. There are approximately 1250 students at Juniata College. So much for togetherness. The tickets will be sold or given out on a first come-first served basis. I hope somebody tells me when tickets go on sale, because I live off-campus and don't get to see the announcements in the lunch line or residence halls.

If you are lucky enough to get a ticket, don't start partying until afterwards. Should be intoxicated you will be turned away. And don't wear jeans, either. They're trying to discourage them, although I doubt that they'd have the audacity to attempt to enforce this policy.

If you are turned away from, or thrown out of the All Class Night presentation, the ticket which admits you to the lounge parties after the plays will be taken from you. These parties will probably be in almost every lounge. Therefore, you will be forced to find a ¼-keg party in somebody's room. But not until after 9:00.

It all makes sense, sadly enough. The Administration seems to direct its efforts towards keeping the student body fragmented. I am very sure that each clique will keep its people in the lounge chosen by the clique. The cliques will survive, but campus unity, which gets only one or two chances to develop per year, will deteriorate to heretofore unknown lows.

And the spirit of the All Campus Party, which is currently forgotten but still alive on a fairground outside of Smithfield, may turn into some sort of "bitter apathy" type of spirit. And that's NOT FUN.

What can we do? Are we just going to forget that old fun-loving spirit that's dying all alone outside of Smithfield? Is it true that if you can't get to the Ellis Info Desk fast enough, you just ain't got no CLASS?!?

Women's Program Premieres

by Tammy Helwig

A new aspect in WKVR's radio programming is a show done by Denise Steele and Lynn Stellander. The show will deal with contemporary women's issues and will consist of interviews with various citizens of the college community and the Huntingdon area. The five topics the show will deal with are: 1) alcoholism and women, 2) women in the military, 3) the Equal Rights Amendment, 4) teenage pregnancy, 5) violence against women (i.e., rape and wife abuse). The idea for the program came out of a desire for some sort of educational design in WKVR's makeup and eventually grew into an independent study program for both Denise and Lynn. The first program is now in the editing stage.

Seymour Elected

by Heather MacCrindle

Believing the "freshman vote did it" for him, John "Saul" Seymour recently won the office of Vice-president of Student Government. At the present he is "getting his feet wet" by reading up on the duties required of him by talking to many of this year's Student Government members.

Realizing his duties as vice-president include heading Senate meetings and learning the proceedings and formalities of these meetings, John plans to attend the last Senate meeting of this year as an observer. "I'm looking forward to working with Doug," says John and hopes that next year's Senate "will work well with Centerboard and other campus groups." He will be working with Scott Johnson of Centerboard in organizing next year's leadership conference at Blue Diamond.

Encouraged by his roommate and this year's president, Ken Anderson, John made his decision to run a month before election time. He feels his experience as president of his high school's government for a year and vice-president for two will help him in his newly elected office to begin April 1.

Editors Chosen

Tricia Abbott, a member of the junior class, will serve as editor-in-chief of the Juniatian during the 1980-81 academic year. New editors and managers were elected by the Juniatian staff last week.

The new editorial board includes: Tricia Abbott, editor-in-chief; John W. George, managing editor; Bob Kemper, news editor; Neeta Moonka, assistant news editor; Heather MacCrindle, feature editor; Chris Corry, assistant feature editor; Cathy Creswell, copy editor; and Mark Infanti, sports editor; Julie George will become the Juniatian's business manager and Mark Ickes will be the advertising manager.

Ms. Abbott began writing for the Juniatian during the 1977-78 academic year as a news/feature reporter. Last year she was the paper's news editor. She spent the first half of this year studying in Chaltenham, England, and upon her return to campus began reporting again for the Juniatian.

Brandeis Sociologist to Lecture On Mental Health

Dr. Morris S. Schwartz, chairman of the sociology department at Brandeis University, will deliver a lecture about "The Human Being as Mental Patient" at Juniata College on Monday evening, March 31.

The lecture — which is intended specifically for mental health professionals or members of the general public with an interest in mental health — begins at 7:30 p.m. in Room 202, Good Hall.

Currently the Mortimer Gryzmish Professor in Human Relations at Brandeis, Dr. Schwartz has authored or co-authored four books about mental health, including "The Human Being as Mental Patient," which is currently at the printer's and from which Monday's lecture is drawn.

His other books are: "The Mental Hospital," co-authored with Dr. A.H. Stanton; "The Nurse and the Mental Patient," co-authored with E.L. Shockley; and "Social Perspectives on Mental Patient Care," co-authored with C.G. Schwartz.

In addition, Dr. Schwartz has published or co-published some 20 articles about various aspects of mental health in numerous professional journals, including "Psychiatry," the "American Journal of Psychiatry," "Sociological Inquiry," the "Encyclopedia of Social Sciences," the "American Journal of Sociology," and "The Sociology of Mental Illness and Health."

The highly-regarded sociologist also is a member of the editorial boards of three publications: "Family Process," the "International Journal of Psychiatry," and "Social Problems."

A graduate of the City College of New York, Dr. Schwartz received his M.A. degree and Ph.D., both in sociology, from the University of Chicago, where he was named a Charles R. Walgreen Scholar in Sociology and a Charles Richmond Henderson Fellow in Sociology. He also holds a certificate in applied psychiatry for sociologists from the Washington School of Psychiatry.

Dr. Schwartz, who has served for some 30 years as a lecturer and consultant to mental health facilities across the nation, has served on numerous government committees and projects, including a three-year term as a member of the demonstration projects grants review committee of the National Institute of Mental Health.

now on. This is also the first year we have had office hours.

This brings me to the point of the letter which upset me most, your statement that Joe Orolin was negligent. To start with, you applied for your loan on Tuesday afternoon, not Monday (you can check the date of the loan for yourself). I know this because Tuesday at noon Joe signed the loans from Monday and Friday. He did this while on his lunch hour from his internship, and I had them signed by Ken Grugel that afternoon. The truth is that Joe Orolin has put more time into Student Government and in helping the student body than probably anyone else this year. He was going to step down when he got his internship but I convinced him to stay since I felt he could not be effectively replaced by someone else. I still feel that way. As far as someone compensating for someone else's negligence, I think you will find that you have the people in your article turned around if you check the record of meeting attendance and time spent in the Student Government office for Student Government.

Ken Anderson
President of Student Govt.

Resources

Dear Editor,

As members of Student Government we would like to take this opportunity to qualify several unresearched falsehoods Tricia Abbott included in her letter to the editor in last week's Juniatian. Or, if they aren't falsehoods they are instead gross generalizations.

Emergency loans?? There is no such service offered by the Juniata College Student Government. The loans financed by Student Government at this college are convenience loans — not emergency loans. Let us take this opportunity to destroy the myth of the emergency loan.

The origin of the emergency student loan is perplexing. An article appearing in the January 17 issue of the Juniatian describes the loans as "generally for convenience sake . . ." In fact, close scrutiny of the article with a high powered magnifying glass, and we declared ourselves unsuccessful — we could find the word "emergency" no where.

Shortsightedness of president Ken Anderson. A very nice sounding phrase. Perhaps, Ms. Abbott was too shortsighted to investigate the reason why two specific signatures are required. The accounting office normally requires two signatures on vouchers from all clubs and organizations. Student Government is an organization. The third signature — Mr. Grugel's — acts as a check. An applicant is qualified to receive a loan only when they are in good financial standing with the college. Mr. Grugel knows if a student is in good financial standing with the institution.

Practicality. That is why Joe Orolin's signature is called for on the voucher. As treasurer Orolin manages Student Government's financial records. He knows who has received loans, who has repaid loans, and who has failed to repay loans. A student is not given approval on a second loan until he or she has repaid the first. Orolin knows if the applicant is in good financial standing with Student Government.

To maintain control over where the money is channeled, two "specific" signatures are designated as "official." Not three different signatures or seventeen different signatures. Only two. The money available for convenience loans was not originally Student Government's money. Therefore it is watched quite closely.

Labeling Joe Orolin as negligent is a gross — and unjustifiable — generalization. Anyone who has worked with the student government treasurer might describe him as competent, hard working, and conscientious. It would be unusual if they regard him as negligent. Only those who haven't worked with him could call him such.

The fact that he secured the convenience loans in the first place certainly speaks for his character. Orolin met with administrators for four months before a satisfactory means of processing the loans could be reached. Enduring four months of meetings with administrators is a far cry from negligent.

Ms. Abbott, before you label student government members as "heroes" or "delinquents" you might check to see which members have participated actively in government concerns and which members even bother to attend meetings. Sometimes the harder working individuals have to compensate for the negligent members of the organization. Quite often the conscientious individuals receive flack because the real delinquents are so inactive the students don't know who they are.

Sincerely,

Cherise Kent, George Bojalad, Douglas F. Klepfer, Donald F. Little, Susan Lusch, Ruth-Ellen Klinger, Gwen M. Sterling, James E. LeDane, Jr., Kenneth Anderson III, Don A. DeArmitt.

A Clarification

Dear Editor:

A statement is attributed to me in the March 13 issue of the Juniatian regarding the programming and activities increase that requires clarification. It reads, "Tilden explained that the increase is the result of the administration coming under attack . . ."

To clarify, the increase is a function of a shared recognition on the part of senior administrators of the importance of stimulating and diverse programming to our campus community. This is not a recent recognition nor did an "attack" serve as a catalyst.

With this understanding we look forward to an academic year which provides exciting social, cultural and recreational programs for all members of the community.

Sincerely,

Arnold J. Tilden, Jr.
Dean of Students

Thanks Team!

Dear student body, faculty, and administration,

First of all I would like to speak for the women's basketball team in expressing our appreciation for the tremendous amount of support we received throughout the season and especially during post-season play. When we were at an away court and saw a few familiar fans or heard a kazoo band or received flowers and telegrams wishing us good luck, it was such a lift to us. But nothing can express the sensation that flowed through us at the welcoming home celebration and that was even doubled or tripled at the Scranton game. The energy and excitement that radiated from the student body and the administration and faculty will stay with us for a long time. Many expressions of your pride for us came our way, but let me say that we were proud for the opportunity to represent you in the games and proud of the way you rallied behind us. It really showed the kind of close community we have here at Juniata.

Secondly, I want to express my personal feelings to the team that I grew so close to in the five months of endless layups and foul shots that we spent together. When I first came to Juniata, I never dreamed of playing for a team of the caliber that we achieved this season. I'm thankful that I didn't graduate too soon and miss out on the opportunity to play with you all and share the success we experienced. You are all quality people and I am proud that I could end my career as your teammate. It was a perfect ending for me with the perfect team. Thanks so much. I love you all.

Sincerely,

Nancy Zinkham

Utilize Library

Having been Director of Libraries from 1972 to 1977, I feel compelled to respond to the article in last week's Juniatian entitled "Libraries Inadequate?"

The library is by no means complete in every subject discipline, nor does it or should it purport to be. It does, however, have basic collections in most subject disciplines offered by the College. The question, as I see it, is making better use of what we have and developing closer communication between curricular needs and collection development. Before a new course is offered, the resources of the library should be thoroughly examined and, if found to be inadequate, then developed to an acceptable level, or the proposed course offering should be scrapped.

What disturbs me even more is for someone to blindly accept the notion that the libraries are inadequate and to state that this condition exists because of past neglect. To put the blame on past administrations for whatever problems exist today is a popular political ploy. It may be used effectively in running for the White House but, in reference to the Juniata Library System, it just doesn't work.

In spite of the fact that the early and mid 1970's were lean years for Juniata and the library budget was not always what we had wanted it to be, the budget was adequate. But, being just adequate wasn't good enough. Outside grants were received and prospective donors were actively sought. Through these efforts the collections grew from approximately 127,000 volumes in 1972 to 190,000 volumes by 1979. One gift collection alone was approximately 8,000 volumes and another 4,000 volumes. These collections were both superior in quality. One came from a longtime editor for Columbia University Press and an alumna of Juniata, and the other from the late Max L. Schuster of Simon and Schuster Publishing Company. Too, we all know of the contributions that the late Aaron Rabinowitz made to the Library. One example is the refurbished seminar room in Beeghly Library named in his honor.

Also, a College Archives was established in 1973 with funding from the Friends of the Library Organization, a Federal Government Documents Collection in excess of 20,000 volumes was taken out of storage and opened to the public in 1975, and the present audio visual collections of films, slides and tape recordings were acquired with funds from the National Endowment for the Humanities. To say that the library collections did not increase significantly over this period is a gross error in judgement. They grew by leaps and bounds. The facilities in Beeghly Library were also improved.

I admit that the emphasis over the last ten years has been on collection development and facilities rather than on expensive on-line cataloguing systems, additional personnel and higher salaries. It would be nice to have it all; maybe someday we will. But, for now, the emphasis seems to have shifted to the latter.

In spite of our increase in the materials budget over the past two years, fewer books and materials have actually been acquired and some periodical subscriptions have been dropped. I agree that the purchasing power of the dollar has dropped considerably. But, if the library is to keep pace with the level of what it had acquired on only an adequate budget of five or ten years ago, then it's going to have to do better than that or pursue outside funding.

Also, to compare Juniata with schools that have graduate programs and are twice or three times our size in enrollment does not elicit very fair comparative data. In a recent publication of Our Colleges and Universities Today, the following statistical information for the academic year 1976/77 was given. It shows the total items held by various college and university libraries. Albright-126,225; Beaver-122,700; Elizabethtown-132,197; Juniata-187,146; Lebanon Valley-118,725; Lycoming-150,493; Moravian-155,428; Muhlenberg-228-123.

What do you do with your hands at a party?

Many of us do what's simplest – reach for a drink.
We're nervous. Handling a drink, sipping, pausing, sipping again. It's something to do with our hands during the tense excitement of meeting strangers or in that anxious silence between conversations. So we often wind up drinking more than we ever intended.
But you can choose practical ways to hold a drink and not have more than you want. Drink slowly. Nibble on snacks while drinking. Hold onto the first drink a little longer. At certain points, switch to soft drinks.
You have choices. Make them at the next party instead of thinking about them the next morning. Otherwise, you're letting your hands tell you what to do.

Women End Season

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Juniata women cagers finished the season with a heartbreaking loss at Scranton. The 24-4 Indians lost 76-36 in quarterfinal action of the AIAW National Tournament last Tuesday night.

Coming off of two thrilling victories in South Carolina and Texas, and coming home to an enthusiastic Juniata crowd, the Tribe had emotional momentum. President Binder cancelled Wednesday morning classes to enable students and faculty to make the three and a half hour trip to Scranton.

Six buses were chartered and many people drove their own cars, as the Indians invaded the John J. Long Center in Scranton, Pa. When the College Hill Gang took to the court, they were greeted by hundreds of cheering fans, wearing blue and gold, Juniata pins, war paint and feathers, and carrying signs, shakers, etc. The girls knew that the fans were behind them!

JC jumped out to an early 4-0 lead and it looked like the Indians were on the warpath. What happened in the next 38 minutes could only be compared to the Little Big Horn. The Lady Royals massacred the Indians by 40 points.

Scranton took a 10-4 lead on ten unanswered points and never looked back. The JC Lady Dribblers attempted to rally midway through the first period by cutting a 21-11 lead to 21-17. The half time score stood at 30-23, only a seven point difference. Since Juniata is a second half team, it looked like the stage was set for the biggest battle of the two team's rivalry.

The biggest problem the Indians had in that first period was a bad shooting streak. JC only hit 23% of their shots, while Scranton split the nets 48% of the time. This lead to a general lack of confidence among the Tribe members.

Somehow their offense got worse. Juniata scored 15 points in that fatal 20 minutes to the 46 that the Lady Royals poured through the hoop. In the process, the Indians shot a poor 19%, and Scranton improved to hit on 58% of their attempts.

Denise Capoocia had 20 points and 15 rebounds to lead the winners. Julie George was high for the Indians with 11 markers and 16 caroms. Judy Pepoy tallied 10 and grabbed 10 rebounds. Senior Nancy Zinkham played in her final game, but only managed two points and four steals. Fouling out with 7:42 left in the game, she fell six points short of the 1000 plateau.

Coach Nancy Latimore summed up this fourth loss to Scranton this way: "We were naturally disappointed in our performance, having just completed a highly successful season. Everyone on the team realizes all the factors that went into that loss. I'm certainly aware that all that travelling took its toll, so I couldn't get too upset about losing that badly. The national tournament is a type of endurance contest and it is particularly difficult for an at large team that must do that much travelling."

Julie George scored 485 points this year and now has 1038 for her three year career. She is the first Indian woman to go over the 1000 mark. Judy Pepoy added 316 points, a new season record for a freshman.

Scranton was one of the four teams to travel to Whitworth College in Spokane, Washington this past weekend. The Lady Royals finished third in the nation for Division III schools. Congratulations to a super team.

Congratulations also go to our own Lady Indians for a great season. Everyone at Juniata College is proud of each and everyone of you!

Tennis Opens Schedule

Under the watchful eye of veteran coach Ernie Post, a young Juniata College tennis team opened its 1980 season Tuesday, March 26, hosting St. Francis on the Raffensperger Courts in a 2:00 p.m. encounter.

"Our success this year will be determined by how quickly our freshmen adapt to college-level play," says Post, who now enters his 20th year as Indian mentor. "Eight of our 14 players are freshmen, so it is easy to see how important their progress is to our program."

Two lettermen return from last year's 2-9 club: juniors Don Rice and Steve Moser. Rice played number three last season, while Moser split time between the fifth and sixth positions. Also returning are seniors Mark Atwell and Tom Drzewiecki who will give the Indians an experienced doubles team.

Among the freshmen, Jay Hinish, Andy Oldham and Tom Tracy are rated as top challengers for a singles position.

"Last year was disappointing for us," relates Post. "This year we're not shooting for lofty goals. Our objective is to have a winning season and to build a solid base for the future."

The Indians will play an 11-match schedule, with Lycoming returning after a year's hiatus. Conference foes Gettysburg and Elizabethtown are expected to be especially tough, as is independent Shippensburg.

With nine returning letterwinners and several high-touted freshmen on hand, the Juniata College women's tennis team will open its 1980 season Saturday, March 29, hosting Penn State-Altoona on the Raffensperger Courts.

"This is by far the most talented group I've had to work with," says third-year coach Nancy Latimore. "We have excellent depth, with little difference between our number-one and number-five women."

Leading the list of returners are seniors Babe Broadwell and Cindy Updegraff. Broadwell, Tribe MVP in '78 missed last season while studying abroad. Updegraff, meanwhile, took over the top spot last season and was named MVP.

Other top veterans include sophomores Debbie Baillie, Annette Botti and Megan Miller.

Freshmen Sharon Ammarell and Leslie Benedict are expected to battle for a top singles position. Both participated in the PIAA state championships last season.

The Indians should field stronger doubles combinations this season due to their added depth. Several women who competed in singles last year will see doubles action this spring.

Juniata faces an improved, 12-match schedule. New opponents include Elizabethtown, Hood, Trinity, and Washington (Md.). Middle Atlantic Conference foes Susquehanna and Dickinson will be tough, as will independent Shippensburg.

"Even with the up-graded schedule we should be competitive with all the teams we face," states Latimore. "We are a relatively young squad, but our seniors are providing excellent leadership for the new players."

Track Ready To Go

First-year head coach Tom Rogish will lead an inexperienced Juniata College track squad into action Saturday, March 29, when the Indians travel to Susquehanna University for their 1980 season opener.

"We've lost some of our top guns," says Rogish. "We were 5-0 last year, but the schedule's been beefed-up, and if we don't get a lot of help from our freshmen, it could be a long season."

Among those gone from last year's squad are All-American hurdler Bob McNelly, leading point-producer Eric Biddle (jumps and hurdles) and number-three scorer Al Calloway (jumps and sprints).

There are, nonetheless, several top-flight performers still around. Three of them are sprinters, having paced the squad at 220 yards last spring: senior Mike Miller, a 22.7 man; junior Tim Blankenstein, 22.8; and sophomore Tom Bell, 22.9.

The trio will team with freshman Bob Nourse for a swift, all-class 400-meter relay team, all colleges switching to metric distances this year.

The Tribe should be strong in the weights and distances also. In the former, seniors Dave Headly, Eric Bollinger and Ed Mozer return.

Headly, who copped a second at last year's Middle Atlantic Conference Championships, had a personal best of 46-10 in the shot. Bollinger, who paced the team in the discus on the year (135-0), also shot put 44-6, while Mozer added a 43-5.

In the distances and middle distances, junior Bill Shuler leads a contingent from the Tribe's 8-2 cross country team. Shuler led the Indian thinclads last year in the 880, turning in a 1:57.7.

His harrier mates include sophomore George Peterson and freshman Tom Wise.

In the other events, however, few or no veterans return, though Bell can contribute a 43-1 triple jump and a 21-9 long jump.

"With the lack of depth," feels Rogish, "we'll be stronger in the invitationals and larger meets than in duals. We have quality, but not much quantity. That schedule is also tougher than its been in quite some time, but if it doesn't get us discouraged in the early going, it could prove a benefit by MAC time."

Two new opponents appear on the slate: York and Baptist Bible. Division I power Bucknell, however, returns after a four-year absence, Gettysburg after two, and Shippensburg after a one-year hiatus.

Odds N'Ends

Several new faces, including first-year coaches Arnie Tilden and Duane Stroman, lead the Juniata College golf team into action Tuesday, March 25, when it opens its 1980 season at Shippensburg State.

Hoping to rebound from last year's disappointing 2-9 effort, the Indians will play seven matches. In addition to their head-to-head contests, the Tribe will compete in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships April 28, where they finished 19th in the 22-team field last season.

Junior Steve Stroup, last year's MVP, leads the list of Indian veterans. Stroup recorded the squad's lowest stroke average last season (82.1) and medalled for the Indians in all but two outings, including the MACs.

Also returning is 1979's number-two shooter, junior Ed Maruca. Maruca averaged 84.1 strokes per round, scoring in all but one Tribe outing.

Sophomore John Hyman, who scored in all but one match last season, will also battle for a top spot.

Two newcomers are expected to step in immediately: sophomore transfer Bill West and freshman Jim LeDane.

Others expected to battle for a top-six position are sophomore lettermen Eric Fuhrmann and Tim Cooper and junior letterman Russ Geiger.

"A lot depends on West," says Tilden. If he can gain some consistency he'll be very tough.

Stroup is very solid, and Hyman and Maruca give us good depth, while LeDane could possibly challenge for the top spot.

The Juniata Judo team competed in the Eastern Collegiate Judo Championships on March 1. Juniata beat Georgetown University in the first round, with Mick Stone, Vince Nardone, and Vince Zeplin winning. Virginia Polytechnic Institute, eventually third place finishers, then defeated Juniata as Zeplin was the only winner. Also competing in the championships were Josh Couglas and Bill Hallman.

The team then competed in a tournament at Indiana, PA on March 16. Vince Nardone took a second place in the middle, brown-black belt division. Todd Roadman took a second place in the light, white belt division. Making a strong showing was Mick Stone with 3 wins and one loss. The final competition of the Judo team for the year will be the State Championships at Bellefonte on May 4.

Founders Day Celebrated

by Bob Kemper

An art show, a poetry reading and a "mini-concert" of choral music will accompany the dedication of The Charles A. Dana Humanities Cluster in observance of Juniata's 104 Founders Day celebration to be held on April 17.

The observance will begin with a special convocation at 11 a.m. in Oller Auditorium. The Keynote Address will be delivered by Dr. Edward D. Eddy, Jr., provost of The Pennsylvania State University.

The art exhibit, which runs from April 14 through May 2, will feature paintings by Pauline Kauffman Maxwell, a 1935 Juniata graduate. The paintings will be displayed in Shoemaker Galleries, Carnegie Hall.

Rev. George M. Docherty, Juniata's J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity, will read the poetry of Dylan Thomas in the galleries at 8:15 p.m.

The Juniata College Concert Choir, under the direction of Bruce A. Hirsch, will perform selections representative of the musical styles of several nations in a program which will feature small ensembles, instrumentals and solos.

The Dana Humanities Cluster — comprised of six buildings — will be dedicated by President Fredrick M. Binder, students and faculty members at 2 p.m. outside of the recently-completed Humanities Center.

Semesters ??

At the last faculty meeting a vote, to determine opinion only, was taken on whether or not Juniata should switch from a trimester schedule to semesters. The vote was split, with half in favor of changing to semesters. At this point the administration expressed their opinion in favor of switching Juniata to a semester schedule taking effect in the 1981-82 academic year. Next week the Executive Committee of the faculty will begin preparations for a final vote to be taken by the faculty. Student input is needed and wanted before a final vote will be taken.

Anyone who wants to express their opinion should get in contact with Susan Telmanik, the student representative to the Executive Committee of the faculty through Box 175 or Doug Klepfer, through Student Government, Box 995.

Mark Ickes '81 (above) is serving as co-chairman of the 5X Fund Campaign with Dan Bigelow '80. Additional committee members, all seniors, are: Lisa Masood, Scott O'Neill, Joe Orolin, Mary Porter, Donna Reeves, Miles Shearer, Teal Telep, Val Vella, Doug Wood and Nancy Zinkham.

Young Alumni Campaign Underway

by Chris Corry

A student directed campaign to increase young alumni donations is underway. The 5X campaign plan is to request each senior to pledge $10 the first year after graduation, $20 the next year, $30 the next year, and so on, for five years. The drive will begin with the class of 1980 and end with the class of 1984. Contributions up to $15,000 will be matched by a corporate foundation. This project, launched by the newly formed Student Development Council, is chaired by senior Dan Bigelow and junior Mark Ickes.

Juniata ranks 12th in the nation for percentage of alumni making donations to their alma mater. One of the major thrusts of the 5X project is to increase that percentage. Potential supporters consider this statistic when deciding their donation. "It really makes the difference" says project sponsor Kathryn Miller. Chairman Dan Bigelow concurs, "That's what we're really aiming for."

The goals of the 5X drive are "to increase the number of alumni who contribute to the alma mater immediately after graduation, to maintain these alumni as regular donors over a five year period, and to encourage a pattern of increased giving.

"We have very good parents, church, and older alumni donation programs," explains Kathryn Miller. This programs hopes to develop "the one area of (funds) development that is not really active."

To create an increase of about 300% in the next five years of young alumni donations is the goal of the campaign.

A "psych-up celebration" for the project was held April 15. The 61 seniors and one junior involved in the project attended the dinner. There are 2 chairpersons, 10 captains and 50 campaigners participating. The "classic solicitation model" is being used to contact every senior on a personal basis.

Contacts have begun already and the results have been "pretty good so far," according to Dan, especially after the point is stressed that the pledge is not written in stone. "They're afraid to say 'I will pledge'." "We understand they're not going to have a lot of money," acknowledges Kathryn.

Chairpersons Dan and Mark enjoy their work on the campaign. Dan, graduating with a concentration in history and spanish, feels that it gives him the opportunity to repay Juniata. "I wanted to give something back," Dan said. Mark Ickes is studying business. "It's a good experience and very interesting," he says of the project. He considers it an apprenticeship and he hopes it will be helpful later on. Mark finds the project to be "a lot of work but it's enjoyable."

President Binder approves of the project. He wrote, "I would like to convey my enthusiasm for the young alumni project which is becoming a vital part of our development program."

Four other projects are also to be sponsored by the newly formed Student Development Council, a Speakers Bureau Committee, a Placement Committee, a Telephone Committee, and a Civic Dorm project. "We're starting to get leadership together," says Kathryn. "We haven't had any publicity." The students currently involved in any of the projects have been recruited "mostly by invitation," but all students are welcome. Help is needed on all projects excepting the 5X campaign.

SG Appoints Officers

On March 31 the president of student government, Doug Klepfer '81, brought forth to the student senate his recommendation to appoint Don DeArmitt as treasurer, Susan Lusch as secretary and Ruth Ellen Klinger as Student Government-Center Board liasion for the 1980-81 academic year.

The senate passed the nominations and the leaders assume office as of April 1, 1980 except for Ms. Lusch who will act as secretary beginning in September.

Klepfer also indicated a student is needed at this time to serve on the Academic Affairs Trustee Committee for the remainder of the year. Interested students should contact Doug Klepfer, box 995.

ACN goes "Classy"

by Tricia Abbot

Friday, April 18, the annual All Class Night will be held. This year, however, students and faculty will see many changes brought to the event by the class officers, faculty advisers and other members of the college — Linda Clark, representing Center Board, Don Little representing Student Government, Sue Esch and Wayne Justham representing the Student Advisory Council — comprised the ACN Steering Committee.

The overall atmosphere of the evening is changed from "rowdy" to "classy". Events will begin with semi-formal cocktail parties organized by the dorms. These will be followed by a special buffet dinner in Baker Refectory. The plays, the highlight of the evening, will begin at 7:30 p.m. and run until approximately 9:30. Admission is free, however tickets must be obtained. Seating capacity of Oller is only 900 and seating will be on a first come first serve basis. The plays will be judged by 5 faculty members. Immediately following the plays will be a party/dance to be held in the gym. Refreshments will be served and the group "Hat Trick", who has performed at Juniata before, will provide the entertainment.

Ned Urlich, president of the senior class, and Wayne Justham, Director of Ellis College Center said that certain restrictions have been imposed to improve the evening. The Steering committee asked SAC if they would agree to change the alcohol policy for the evening, restricting on-campus kegs until after 9:30 p.m. Students are requested to dress according to the classy mood of the evening but no student will be turned away due to their dress. Students who are considered intoxicated or are carrying intoxicating beverages will not be admitted to Oller. The Weightlifting Club has volunteered to act as monitors of the plays. According to Wayne Justham they are not to exert brute force but to merely perform the function of monitoring. According to Justham persons creating a disturbance, operationally defined as "doing something that detracts from the ability of other people to enjoy the plays", will be asked by the monitor to refrain from this action. If that fails they will be asked to leave. If this also fails the monitors will seek out a member of Student Services to take further action according to the college disciplinary system.

According to Ned Urlich the changes have been made to prevent the evening from being cancelled, which almost happened last year, and to hopefully make the evening more enjoyable for all concerned. Ned feels that the Steering Committee has made "advances and concessions", not merely restrictions. Wayne hopes that faculty as well as students will attend and enjoy the evening so that ACN can once again be something for people to look forward to. The people organizing and participating in the plays have done their part, says Justham, and now it's up to the student audience to do their part and compliment the efforts of the participants.

Editorial:
Good Luck ACN

With the future of All Class Night on the line, the class officers and faculty advisers are making an all out effort to save what they feel is a worthwhile Juniata tradition. The changes made in this year's ACN (see article pp. 1) represent an admirable effort to save ACN and make it an evening people can enjoy and look forward to in the years ahead.

Some people feel that upgrading the atmosphere of the evening is spoiling the intent of ACN — for all classes to get together and have fun. But in reality, the classes are attempting to maintain the good spirit of ACN while doing away with the rowdy, disrupting effects. You cannot please all of the people all of the time, so this year ACN is an effort to please as many of the people as possible. Socializing, via pre-ACN parties is not being prohibited, it is merely being organized into dorm cocktail parties. Upgrading the quality of the skits is an effort in promoting a sense of class pride. Only one class can win the cup, but all classes should be able to feel that their class did their best. And the dance is expected to bring all classes, winning and losing, together in a positive atmosphere.

It may take a few years for the classy atmosphere to really be accepted as part of ACN but a first step is made. It is hoped that the efforts of those involved in saving ACN are not in vain. It would be nice to see the evening turn into a real "class" affair.

Letters to the Editor

J.C. Students:

This is just a reminder about "All Class Night". As many of your should know, ACN is going to be on probation this year. If the evening should prove to be a success, then it will remain a Juniata tradition. Several committees have been formed to provide a practical and enjoyable solution to assist the evening along. There will be no kegs allowed on campus until 9:30 that evening, instead several of the dorms will be sponsoring cocktail parties instead of the usual dinner. Jeff is going to provide a better than average meal. The plays themselves are going to be much more theatrically oriented this year. Faculty members have been helping the classes write and prepare the scripts. The classes have put a great deal of time and effort into preparing these productions. There will then be a party, with a dance band, in the gym following the four plays.

We the class officers are asking several things; that everyone make an attempt to dress nicely (no jeans), that the conduct at dinner be respectable, that people try to appreciate the time and effort your classes have put into each play by not disrupting them, and most important of all, have a good time. We hope that this will be the beginning of a new trend and that the whole evening will be a success. The date for ACN is Friday April 18, the first Friday back from break.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to several letters which appeared in the March 27th issue of the Juniatian. These letters, although good in intention, do not seem to focus on the issue.

To the elusive Mr. Blose it should be suggested that writing a letter to the editor requires more thought, logic, and intelligence than it does to enter a John Travolta look-alike, act-alike contest. The "short-sighted, selfish Ms. Abbot", (as you so piously described her) was not the first person to complain about the speed of acquiring a loan. This problem was brought to the attention of S.G. president Ken Anderson weeks ago by myself among others.

The author of the ultra-strong letter signed by several officers of S.G. also failed to focus on the point. Like most letters in that issue of the Juniatian, this letter stresses the fact that there is no such thing as an 'emergency loan,' its proper title being "Student Convenience Loan". The point missed however is regardless of the title-whether it be called a convenience loan, party loan, hospitalization loan, or whatever, the circumstances surrounding Ms. Abbots financial need was certainly an EMERGENCY.

The paragraph entitled practicality in the same letter shows exactly the same kind of "unresearched falsehoods" the author saw in Ms. Abbots letter. Joe Orolin is not the only person who knows who has taken loans and who has paid them back. The log book showing all loans given out and paid back is in the S.G. office and is available to any member of S.G. Keeping the loan applications restricted to two specific signatures besides Ken Gruegel's when several if not all members of S.G. are qualified seems illogical and cumbersome.

Obviously I am not the only one who has voiced an opinion in this matter. At the S.G. meeting on March 19th Tussey Senator Angie Wirth among others voiced dissatisfaction with the length of time it takes to acquire a loan. It was sarcastically noted by one senator that if the loan were to be used for emergencies, those emergencies would have to be planned at least one week in advance.

It might be said that Tricia Abbot also failed to focus on the point. The system of the convenience loans itself should have been the subject of her attack and not the treasurer. While working with Joe Orolin in Student Government I have not witnessed

by Jeff Boulton

It was four o'clock in the morning on Saturday, March 29, and six habitual party remnants stood around holding up walls, staring into their dry mugs and out at the wet weather. It was a typical Saturday morning in Huntingfun, rainy and cold. The six were wondering what to do with their day, or at least their forthcoming afternoon.

Almost in jest, one of these derelicts suggested an excursion to the land of Radioactivity. (It's better than the Inactivity of a rainy day in Huntingfun, he contended.) "Get outta here!" his cohorts laughed. "What's in Harrisburg? Plutonium? Krypton gas? Why, even Superman has to avoid Harrisburg!

But the suggestion was put in a different light when it came out that Linda Ronstadt, Pete Seeger and Stephen Stills were going to be on stage together with other musicians, labor union leaders, American Indians, politicians, comedians, doctors and even housewives. Sounds like the kind of thing that would turn on a bunch of die-hards.

Four of these six die-hards had the unmitigated audacity to pile into a four-cylinder turtle shell at 4:00 a.m. and make their way down route 22 to the land of Krypton Gas. Between them, they could muster only fourteen piastres, of which were counted 400 pennies. This was because of the hour and the lack of planning so characteristic of this type of student.

The kindly old woman at the Sheetz Kwik Shawper eyed them suspiciously. She doubted their sobriety, their sanity, their pennies and their jalopy. But she sold them some gasoline anyway. She thought it was pretty funny.

The tortoise shell, with its four occupants, rolled downstream at speeds well in excess of the limit, protesting with an occasional backfire. But our four fearless friends were in no mood to stop. The only bummer was that they couldn't open their windows because it was raining too hard.

After nearly two hours of toil and hydroplaning, the baby Terrapin finally stalled out beside one of the wings of the State Capitol Building. It was nearly daybreak but all that meant to our four weary travelers was that one could see the rain that was trying to keep them awake, pestering their shell with an irregular staccato. After folding out some of their seats and having a couple of breakfast bowls, they settled down in reasonably uncomfortable positions for a short snooze.

The group awoke to the sounds of traffic and crowd noises. The precipitation had halted and others had begun to arrive for the event. Law officers prowled with holstered pistols. "What are we gonna protest for?" asked one of the four rudely-awakened fetal huggers when she was reminded what town she was in. "Not for anything," was the reply, "Against nuclear power. It's TMI's birthday, 'member?"

Because it was not yet time to yell and wave banners, our heroes wandered into a large new building adorned with humongous plastic strawberries riveted to its exterior walls in search of caffeine. Two seconds after they secured their liquid stimulant, they began to realize that they were going to need to eat, and that required more than the 100 pennies and other assorted change still remaining in their grubby pockets. After nearly an hour of our heroes' groveling, the only bank open in downtown Harrisburg graciously cleared a check for them.

The rally got under way at 11:00 a.m., but most of the crowd didn't show up until after lunch. The press said there were 5,000 people, but police and professional crowd-counters estimated there to have been 15,000. The music was great, the crowd was fantastic; the speakers more impressive than either. There were even other Juniatians there as well as alumni and assorted other ex-JC'ers. No-Nuke frisbees flew everywhere. The Socialist Workers' Party, the Communists, the Libertarians and the N.O.W. (among many others) handed out free newspapers, which were used mainly as protection against damp rumps by seated observers. Political arguments cropped in every corner of the crowd, ending in stalemate wherever they began. Around sunset, our fellow Juniatians aimed their trusty turtle shell back upstream, on the (as always) long road to Huntingfun. They returned, tired but enlightened and happy, just in time to do it up for Saturday night.

And the moral of this story? "It's better to spend an overcast Saturday afternoon in a nuclear wasteland than it is to spend a rainy one in Huntingfun."

That is, of course, so long as you get back in time for the parties!

Campus Blood Drive Breaks Record

Juniata students and faculty resonded in record breaking numbers to the latest campus blood drive, setting new marks in donor participation as well as dorm participation. While the average quota of blood for Juniata College is around 100 pints, the Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic reported 150 pints donated, more than doubling what was previously donated in the college's fall drive.

In addition, a cash prize was offered to the dorm floor with the highest percentage of donors. Third floor Cloister took the prize with an amazing 94% floor participation. First floor Terrace following with 60% of its members giving blood. The cash prize was donated by Wayne Justham and Sue Twombly in an effort to get more students to donate. Twombly felt that more students could and should participate in the Bloodmobile. The dorm contest, in addition to increased publicity, was intended to promote more students to donate.

Twombly hopes that in the future, a campus organization such as Student Government or Center Board, will take over the dorm donation contest to continually promote and support student participation in the Bloodmobile. She is also encouraging faculty to become active donors in the campus drive.

negligence or "delinquency in his appointed duties" as described. I personally find him to be one of the more dedicated Student Government officials.

Though I don't agree entirely with the approach Ms. Abbot took in her letter I can easily understand why she did. With all the bureaucratic bullshit a student has to endure in almost every facet of Juniata College be it in the bookstore, student services, the Registrar's office, the cafeteria, or the ever-demanding accounting office, Student Government should remain one facet which does not include within its structure those rules and regulations which are unneccessary and awkward.

Student Government's sole purpose is to provide a service to the student and by signing Ms. Abbot's loan application I acted in a manner to do just that. If the same kind of situation were to arise in the future I would do exactly the same thing.

Folksinger Bill Crofut, who concludes Juniata College's 1979-80 Artist Series this Sunday, April 20, can perhaps best be described as a "Renaissance man." Not only is he an accomplished musician, he also is a poet, a diplomat and an author, whose first book, "Troubador," contains a foreward by the late Robert F. Kennedy. The public is cordially invited to attend the concert, which begins at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

Folksinger Will Perform

Folksinger Bill Crofut — who will conclude Juniata College's 1979-80 Artist Series with a concert on April 20 — can be well-described as a "Renaissance man," as suggested by his many talents.

The public is cordially invited to attend the concert, which begins at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

Not only is Crofut an accomplished song-writer and musician proficient on several instruments, he also is a gifted poet, author and well-traveled diplomat. Of his many concerns, his foremost is working toward a better world.

Comments the renowned Pete Seeger, who taught Crofut to play banjo: "Bill Crofut is a rare bird, who is creative and skilled on several instruments, sings well, and can get a crowd singing with him. He is concerned with the future of the whole human race, and has still not lost his sense of humor. He sings the songs of the American people with a straightforward honesty and authenticity."

A native of Cleveland, Crofut began to distinguish himself while a student at the Putney (Vt.) School, where he studied French horn and won a scholarship to attend music festivals in Europe.

Crofut then graduated from Allegheny College, where he majored in music and after graduation, he met Pete Seeger. It was while he was helping Seeger build his house on the shores of the Hudson River that Seeger taught the young musician to play banjo.

Drafted during the Korean War, Crofut was assigned as a horn player in the Army Band. He then won a talent contest which transferred him to Special Services, and he traveled and performed throughout Korea.

After being discharged from the Army, Crofut received a cultural exchange grant and performed throughout Southeast Asia, India, Ceylon, East and North Africa and parts of Europe.

Upon returning to the U.S., he performed before the delegates to the United Nations, and shortly thereafter, he received a Presidential Citation for his contributions to world understanding through cultural exchanges.

Crofut, who is a prolific song writer and poet, also sets other poets' works to music. At Juniata, he will perform musical renditions of works by E.E. Cummings, R.L. Stevenson and Nathan Loebell, among others.

One collection of his poetic selections has been recorded, and Atheneum Press published the collection in a 1975 book, "The Moon on The One Hand," which was selected by the American Library Association as "one of the

Urban Program Offered

by Cathy Creswell

The Philadelphia Urban Semester, with its professional internships provides a unique opportunity to Juniata students. All areas of study are covered in the 120 placement openings offered in the program.

Professor Post, coordinator of the program here at Juniata, said that the urban semester should be considered by any student who wants to get off campus and work in a professional environment. To others, courses oriented around city resources are also appealing.

Students intern four days a week with professionals in their placement position. Placements are diverse; they include working in law offices, art museums, government agencies, community groups and corporations. This internship provides the student with practical experience prior to graduation in his/her area of emphasis.

Besides an internship students are required to take an Urban Studies Seminar and an elective. Urban semesters are offered three times per year. There is a fall semester of 16 weeks, a winter quarter of 10 weeks, and a spring semester of 16 weeks. All credits received will be fully accepted by Juniata and scheduling conflicts arising from Juniata's trimester system can be worked out individually according to Professor Post.

Tuition for the urban semester is roughly equivalent to that of Juniata's. Students must make contracts for their living arrangements, however, and therefore cost is dependent on a student's rent, meals, and other living expenses.

Between two and six people from Juniata go on an Urban semester each year. Professor Post felt that most have been very enthusiastic about their experiences and have felt the urban semester to be beneficial not only academically but also in personal growth and development.

There are more options than Philadelphia open to students. Arrangements have been made in the past for students to study at American University for a semester. Students who go to American University have the option of living in a dorm.

Anyone interested in the urban semester program should contact Professor Post at his office in I. Harvey Brumbaugh House.

Baseball Starts Strong

After winning their first four games of the year, the Indians headed for North Carolina and found the reception none-too-friendly, dropping four in a row. Injuries have played a large role in the four-game slide, as sophomore second baseman Ed McEwen has been hobbled by an injured knee, and sophomore pitchers Gregg Kucera and Scott Johnson were forced to retire in the midst of strong performances due to blisters on their throwing hands.

The Tribe upped their record to 4-0 by sweeping a Middle Atlantic Conference doubleheader from Susquehanna, 7-1, 2-1. Senior Chris Lyons picked up the win for the Tribe in the first game, going the distance, scattering eight hits and not walking a batter. He helped his own cause by nailing two doubles in four trips to the plate, with one RBI.

Seniors Dave Bender and Gwyn Woodward were the top sticks for the Tribe, pounding out three hits in four trips to the plate. Jeff Ellena added two hits in three at-bats.

In the second game, freshman Bob McDonald turned in a masterful performance, hurling eight strong innings to pick up the win. McDonald struck out 14 Crusaders, issued just two walks and gave up eight hits.

The Indians dropped the first game of the North Carolina trip to Davidson, 6-4. Woodward and Don Pote nailed home runs in the first inning, but the Indians managed just two more hits, one a run-scoring double by Scott O'Neill, the rest of the way.

Kucera went the first five innings, yielded five hits and striking out two before leaving with a blistered pitching hand.

On Saturday, the Tribe was hampered by windy conditions and dropped a 9-1 decision to Davidson. Senior Jim Zimmerman was the only Indian to hit well, going 2-for-2.

The Tribe traveled to UNC-Charlotte for a doubleheader on Sunday. The 49'ers proved to be stiff competition, handing the Indians a double setback, 5-4 and 9-3. Miles led Juniata in the extra-inning opener, rapping two hits in four at-bats.

Errors proved to be Juniata's undoing in the second game, as the Tribe committed seven errors. Pote and Ellena were 2-for-3 to lead the Indians at the plate, while Woodward belted a solo homer.

TRACK (2-0):

The thinclads came through with an unexpectedly strong showing in their opening contest, totaling 90 points to defeat Baptist Bible (50) and Lycoming (39) in a triangular meet last Thursday.

Senior Mike Miller led the Indians' scoring with 9.50 points. He captured the 200 (23.32), was third in the 100 (11.76) and was a member of the winning 400 and 1600 meter relay teams.

Freshman Duane Silvestri totaled 9.25, with a win in the 400 intermediate hurdles (1:03.1), a second in the 110 high hurdles (17.82) and a leg on the winning 400 relay squad.

Junior Dave Headly added eight points by capturing the shot (45'-6¼") and placed second in the discus (127'-1").

Other winners for the Indians included freshman Tom Wise in the 800 (2:06.47), junior Bill Shuler in the 1500 (4:22.5), freshman Frank Russo in the 500 (15:12.0 — 1/10 of a second off the school record), freshman Rick Weaver in the javelin (170'-10"), senior Eric Bollinger in the discus (128'-4") and freshman Bill Marshall in the triple jump (39'-1").

Joining Miller and Silvestri on the winning 400 relay team were freshman Bob Nourse and junior Tim Blankenstein.

Teaming with Miller on the 1600 relay squad (3:37.20) were Shuler, Wise and senior Bruce Rothenberger.

Odds N' Ends

In men's tennis, Coach Post's netters opened their season with a 9-0 trouncing of St. Francis. Victories at first through sixth were: Don Rice, Andy Oldham, Steve Moser, Mark Atwell, Jay Hinish and Dom DiGennaro.

The doubles teams were equally successful, with a Rice-Moser combination taking first, Scott McNeal and Ed Yablonski at second, and Atwell and Tom Drzewiecki at third.

Against Susquehanna the team took it on the chin, dropping a 7-2 decision. Freshman Andy Oldham playing second singles, and DiGennaro, sixth singles, both upped their records 2-0.

The women opened the season in an encouraging fashion by defeating Penn State-Altoona, 6-3. The tribe swept the singles competition as freshmen Leslie Benedict, Sharon Ammarell, senior Cindy Updegraff, sophomore Debbie Baille, junior Cindy Penatzer, and freshman Jane Povey placed numbers one through six, respectively.

Due to inclement weather, the Indians first golf match was also their first day of outdoor action. The lack of practice was evident as Shippensburg defeated the Tribe 405-436.

Low man for the Indians was freshman Harry Gardner with an 86. Sophomore Russ Geiger was the only other Indian to break 90, adding an 87.

Intramurals get into full swing this week with the start of soccer I M's. Men's and co-ed softball have already begun. An "All College Picnic and Invitational Track Meet" is planned for Sunday April 27. Participants may enter as teams or individuals.

notable books of the year."

His first book, "Troubador," published by E.P. Dutton, includes a foreward by the late Robert F. Kennedy. In the book, Crofut discusses his foreign tours and adventures, pleading for changes in American foreign policy that would show more concern for worldwide cultural and social traditions.

With a repertory of songs described by "Time" magazine as "staggering," Crofut's music reveals, as Dave Brubeck observes, "a time in history, a place on earth and a condition of the soul."

To be included in his program Sunday evening, in addition to renditions of musical poetry, are numerous traditional selections, including "Clara Nolan's Ball" (a Hudson River Valley song); "Times Getten Hard" (a dust bowl ballad); "Hush a Bye" (a traditional slave lullaby); and traditional American and Victorian ballads.

Crofut's Juniata concert also will include Woody Guthrie selections, traditional banjo music, lute music and contemporary songs, the latter of which will be announced during the concert.

As part of the 1979-80 Artist Series, Crofut's April 20 concert in Oller Auditorium is sponsored by Juniata through the Cultural Events Committee and the Fine Arts Committee of the College Center Board. It is made possible by the Ellis Humanities Endowment, the Fogelsanger-Murphy Endowment, other sponsors, patrons and the sale of season tickets.

Columnists Wanted

The Juniatian is seeking writers to take over the album review and the Along Muddy Run columns. Any student interested in the album review should submit a sample of their work to Box 667. Any prospective senior wishing to write Along Muddy Run should also submit a sample article. These sample works will be reviewed by the editorial board and those individuals chosen will assume responsibility for the remainder of the year and next year. Any one wishing to submit new ideas for columns is strongly encouraged to do so. Do something creative, join the Juniatian staff.

Crop A Success

A successful Meal for CROP was held March 25 amid a very congenial and complimentary gathering of towns people in Baker Refectory. Eight hundred forty eight students — the most ever — signed up to skip their meal in this effort to raise money to relieve world hunger. According to Phil Jones, campus Ministry intern who headed the project, the entire event "went over very well."

Response by students was "terrific" this year; out of the 1000 or so that normally eat dinner in the cafeteria, only 72 ate there on this night. Ticket sales downtown went well, and with the strong support of area churches, over $1700 has been collected in the project. As some money is still coming in, Jones reports that this amount is about the same as last year's collection. Every bit of the money collected goes to CROP, a disaster relief branch of the Church World Service. CROP uses the money to provide food, equipment, farming, education and other things necessary to relieve world hunger.

The campus Ministers office felt the meal "couldn't have happened without the efforts of many dedicated students", and they are "overwhelmingly grateful" to all those who helped by donating meals, running sign-ups, and hosting the dinner.

Cloister Tradition to be Broken

by Cherise Kent

On Monday members of the Residential Life Committee of Student Government met with Arnie Tilden, dean of student services, Susan Twombly, associate dean and Jack Linetty, director of housing to review the decision of housing women in the Cloister arch next year.

Cloister resident Rick Mayher attended the meeting as spokesman for the students opposed to the decision.

Following a discussion which lasted over an hour the administration decided to uphold its decision.

Mayher and 30 other angry students attended a forum on Sunday night organized by the Residential Life Committee to review students' grievances surrounding the decision. There Mayher volunteered to attend the meeting on Monday to represent students upset by the decision. At Monday's meeting Mayher pointed out that the main thrust behind the student opposition stemmed from what he termed destroying the "all male Cloister tradition." Mayher also suggested that the bathroom facilities in Cloister may not be adequate for women.

According to Mayher students were also angered by the sudden announcement to convert the residence to accomodate females. He felt students were not given sufficient time to react to the decision.

Tilden stated the administrative decision was made to solve the problem of housing an increased female enrollment projected for next year and female residents in the arch is expected to increase dorm programming and interaction between the arch and the Cloister wing.

Students were also concerned with the alumni reaction to the decision. According to Lenora Galamis of the class of '83, David Kreider, director of alumni affairs, checked with a former resident of the Cloister arch who gave this reaction to the proposed, "why give up one of the few remaining traditions on campus — like Mountain Day and All Class Night, the Cloister is something that makes Juniata College."

The administration, however, decided the advantages of moving women into the arch outweigh arguments against it. The decision to move women into the arch was confirmed.

President Fred Binder addresses Faculty, Administration and Students at the Founders Day Dedication of the Charles A. Dana Humanities Cluster.

Dana Humanities Cluster Dedicated

by Heather MacCrindle

Held in the street outside the new Humanities Center, the dedication of the Charles A. Dana Humanities Cluster was highlighted by resounding applause from the attending administration, faculty, and students when President Frederick Binder announced that the $700,000 investment put into the Humanities Cluster was finally and completely paid for.

After the greeting given by Senior Bruce Rothenberger describing the Humanities Cluster as a "milestone in Humanities education" and the invocation by Anita Mock, President Binder took the podium. He acknowledged Al Schaeffer, the architect responsible for the renovation and rebuilding necessary on the six buildings included in the Cluster and Founder's Hall.

Begun as a $100,000 Challange Grant from the Charles A. Dana Foundation in the spring of 1976, this challange was matched by alumni and private contributions to Juniata by April 1, 1977. The rebuilt Humanities Center itself, available for use with classrooms, was finished in June of 1979 and open for classes this past September.

Faculty representative Ralph Church, professor of English and Department Chairman, devoted his speech to the symbolism of the occasion, describing the Humanities Cluster as "Juniata's contribution to the new decade."

Concluding this portion of the dedication, Student Government President Doug Klepfer expressed the student body's "willingness to soon accept the responsibility to help Juniata as the alumni did who contributed to the Dana Humanities Cluster." He thanked these alumni formally, "for what they have given us."

The litany of dedication, led by freshman Scott Neff, was read responsively and all there dedicated the buildings.

The afternoon's atmosphere, concluding in an Open House, complete with refreshments and tours, was summed up in Professor Martin Clark's words, "We really believe in this."

New R.A.'s Selected

by Bob Kemper

The new resident assistants have been picked for next year and will take part in several programs before they assume their duties next year.

The new R.A.'s for the 1980-81 academic year are: Reza Ardekani, John Bird, Harriet Braun, Roy Castor, Stan Custer, Eric Dezzi, Mike Ford, Phil Good, Mark Gray, Bob Hendricks, Andy Jones, Tom McDonald, Sharon Mumma, Kathy Murphy, Sally Nelling, Mike Nett, Andy Pearson, Michele Pitale, Kevin Showvaker, Sandy Shultz, Duane Silvestri, Tim Smith, Teresa Snyder, Alice Sonzogni, Mary Trubilla, Margot Waitz, Regina Wood, and Mary Yakaskas.

The first program the R.A.'s will be participating in is Outward Bound, an adventure program that stresses "learning by doing." The program offers growth through: rafting, rock climbing, rappeling, cross country skiing, caving, snow shoeing, tyrolean traverse, maps and compassing, and a rope course.

The second program is actually an on-going process scheduled to begin next fall. The R.A.'s will return to school early and will participate in programs including: counselor communication skills, alcohol education, leadership, human sexuality, career counseling, and first aid. These programs which will continue through until Christmas, are expected to make the R.A.s more than disciplinarians. This programming is in contrast to last year's when only a one-hour session on counseling was offered.

Students Surveyed About Semester Switch

by Neeta Moonka

Susan Telmanik, student representative of the Executive Committee of the faculty, surveyed students this past week to determine if students would be in favor of changing from terms to a semester system. Asking the question, "Are you in favor of Juniata switching to semesters," 306 students were polled; 271 against switching and 35 were in favor of the change.

The results of this poll were presented at the executive Committee held Monday, April 21st. In addition three letters were sent in response to an article published in the Juniatian last week. According to Susan Telmanik, she and Kristen Storms, the other student representative to the committee, were directed to continue with student input and also summarize the contents of the three letters received to present to the committee.

Susan commented that a committee set up in conjunction with Student Government is in the planning. Also, a petition will be drawn up stating both the pros and cons of a semester versus a term system. Susan suggested the formation of a forum of faculty and administration to present the pros and cons to students if possible. She noted that no final decisions were reached at the meeting held on Monday. Any students who would like to express their opinions on the issue are welcome to contact Susan Telmanik at Box 175 or Doug Klepfer through Student Government, Box 995.

Editorial:

Actions of Administration Questioned

Decisions, decisions, decisions! There seems to be a rash of decisions being made and the major impact of these decisions effects the largest element of Juniata College — the students. It has been said over and over again that the students are obligated to voice their opinion and get things done their way. But where do all these decisions keep coming from? Even when the student body cares enough to take a stand on an issue — obviously not students, but some element higher up feels they have the right to do as they please regardless of the sentiments of those directly effected.

The key issue at point is the housing of women in Cloister Arch. The question is, who wants women in the arch and why. Certainly the men who currently live in the arch, or those desiring to live there next year do not want women in the arch as is evident by the forum held on Sunday April 20 in the ranch where some 30 students, mostly Cloister residents, attended. Even the majority of women who voiced their concern do not want women in the arch, evident by the petition circulated stating:

"We the undersigned, object to the proposal that women should be assigned housing in the Cloister Arch: LET THE MEN HAVE THEIR ARCH!", signed by 91 campus women. Obviously there is something more important here than women's lib or equal rights. The overriding concern on the part of the students seems to be the breaking of an age old tradition of Juniata.

In the fall of 1979 their was concern over the storming of the arch being cancelled due to renovation of the porch. Shortly afterwards the arch was stormed as had been done traditionally at Juniata. Last spring Student Affairs Council came quite close to cancelling another fine Juniata tradition, All Class Night. But concern was aired and many people worked hard to save the traditional ACN; and on April 18 a fine rendition of the tradition was presented. So why the abandonment of a tradition obviously as important as ACN and the storming?

The administration, the power-on-high that has doomed the tradition of the all-male arch says it has reasons. Because the ratio of females to males is rising there is a demand for more housing for women and the arch provides the exact number of spaces necessary — very convenient! But there must be someplace else for 27 women to be housed. Secondly, the administration says housing in the arch will promote dorm unity and better programming. How much unity will there be between the men who resent the women living in the arch? There are others, but the point of the matter is that the administration played judge, jury and hangmen in the Cloister Arch case and this type of activity cannot be taken lightly, let alone continued.

Residents of Juniata are paying nearly $6,000 next year to attend this college. That gives them the right to have a say in the decisions that effect them. But the curriculum committee has changed the grading system without asking and the administration has changed the tradition of the arch, ignoring those that were asked. Will the semester system be next to change regardless of what students want? Those in position of administration must stop playing God and act in accordance with the 1000 members of this community who keep this place in existence.

1st Place Questioned

Dear Editor:

This year's All Class Night has left me stunned! The plays were audible, the crowd was polite and well-behaved, and the Sophomores walked away with the ACN cup. Though the first two I had skeptically expected because of the pre-ACN threats from the administration of public executions, floggings, and tuition hikes, the latter left me dumbfounded. The reason for my amazement was this: The Sophomores won with a play that was a well-done parody of Dicken's A Christmas Carol and a plagiarism of a Bill Cosby comedy routine entitled "Hofstra." (From MORE OF THE BEST OF BILL COSBY, Warner Bros. Records, Inc. side-2.) It was painfully obvious to myself and many other Cosby fans in the audience, that almost all of the dialogue, plot, and characterization had been taken verbatim from this routine!

Now I don't expect this revelation to change the results of this year's ACN or the results of other past All Class Nights. Nor do I think that the Sophomores should have to bear the brunt of criticism, since it was not they who cast the votes that made them the winners last Friday night. It was the judges who committed this error, which I hope was unintentional, due only to their ignorance of any wrong-doing.

For the past three years, the critics of ACN have sought to terminate this tradition on the grounds that it provided an opportunity for classes to present plays that failed to meet some "standards of Juniata College." Lost, they said, were the traditional All Class Night plays, where the talent of each class could be showcased on the stage and judged for their originality, content, etc. However, it seems that all of this concern regarding the quality of the plays merely substituted plagiarism in the place of obscenities.

It occurs to me that two years ago, many members of the class of '81 were punished for their comlicity in one of the biggest plagiarism scandals in Modes and Writing Program. This year, however, it appears that the class of '82 was rewarded for their plagiarism. Perhaps plagiarism has now become one of the "standards of Juniata College" that the plays must meet. I certainly hope not.

In closing, I'd like to say congratulations to the Sophomore class! I hope you enjoyed your "success" on All Class Night!

Sincerely,
Charles Havens '80

Originality Debated

Dear Editor:

Congratulations must go to the sophomore class for taking first place at All Class Night — the judges, though, take the prize for the biggest blunder. Plagiarizing (not satirizing) a Bill Cosby sketch doesn't seem too original to me, but maybe that's what the judges were looking for. Perhaps next year the now-freshman class could carry on tradition and stick with another Cosby sketch while the juniors do George Carlin's "seven words" routine. The freshmen could do Steve Martin's "Wild and Crazy Guy" bit, and the seniors could do Robin Williams' Reality . . . What a Concept. Originality would then have no bearing on the judges' decision; their only concern would be to pick a favorite comedian.

Nanu nanu,
Spencer Steele

This afternoon I visited a friend of mine who is a professional medium to see if I could learn anything about the future of my probable Alma Mater. Her eyes went glassy as she gripped her acrylic "crystal" ball. She read me an article from the New York Times dated Tuesday, April 24, 1985:

THE JUNIATA TRAGEDY

One of the main factors for moving more than 900 college students to commit mass suicide at tiny Juniata College in the obscure jungles of central Pennsylvania last week was (as in Guyana in 1978) the personal influence of one man. That man was the chief executive of that previously unsung bastion of liberal conservatism, the President of Juniata College, Doctor Bread Finder. Until recently, very little was known about this man, but the time has finally come to bring what little is known to the attention of the public.

When Bread was an elementary school student, he worked industriously as a paperboy, a shoe-shine boy and a busboy. The wages he earned were used to pay his entry fees to Madame Fifi and her employees. His mother disliked her little son's behavior, but his father gave Bread his hearty approval, telling his wife, "I don't want a son who's a faggot, like your brother."

Upon his graduation from college, Finder took a job as an admissions counselor for a large convent in New York state. In the words of his former boss, Sister Magdalena Baldraga, "The fellow had an innate knack for getting prospective newcomers — and even many of our older girls — to recognize their true calling." The nunnery was the most financially dependent in the Northeast at the time Finder was hired, but less than three years later he had turned things around so completely that the convent announced its independence from the Church. Even after Finder's departure, it has been a thriving enterprise. Next year they plan to open their sixth branch convent.

Subsequently, Finder founded the prosperous "Ye Ol' Prospector" resort in the Rocky Mountains near Jackson Hole, Wyoming. At this tourist attraction wealthy husbands take month-long horseback tours of the Wind River Range while their beautiful young wives get beautiful new suntans. It's almost enough to revitalize any marriage.

Finder moved on to further academic work, getting his doctorate and heading the admissions department of UCLA. Although obscure in his position he was nevertheless instrumental in the development of UCLA as a national basketball power, thereby enhancing that university's "drawing power."

By the early 1970's, Juniata College had ceased to be run as a monarchy and its first attempts at independence from the Brethren Church had proved utterly useless. The Trustees of the College saw Dr. Finder as a financial wizard, sort of a worldly Messiah. His successful campaign at UCLA bore him out, as well as his adept management of the affairs of the convent; and the free trips to his dude ranch/suntan clinic that he gave to all the Trustees assured approval of his nomination as President of Juniata College.

One of the many tried and trusted truisms attributed to this truly extraordinary college executive is, "I sure hate to talk about running a college as if it were a business, but it really is." This was an unwritten assumption evident in his handling of the presidency of his College. He carried out a four-step program of management there.

The first and most important of these four duties was to maintain his position of authority by keeping influential people happy. This ranged from free horseback tours and suntans to open bars on party boats. In this way, he assured himself of a continued free hand in the direction of the College.

The second segment consisted of making the College appeal to the parents of prospective students. He accomplished this by hiring a new Director of Housing. The former Director had been mildly tolerant of student behavior, yet highly effective; the new one was incredibly intolerant and totally ineffective. The rules became very strict although students' behavior remained virtually unchanged; parents were happy about the rules, students were happy to break them, and the former Director of Housing was promoted to a job he wanted and deserved.

The third part of Dr. Finder's plan was to act as though he were in touch with his students. He was very good at projecting this image to the Trustees, yet this strategy backfired occasionally. One student in particular was a good example of this shortcoming of Finder's. On one occasion, he had visited the President to get support for one of the student organizations. Dr. Finder replied, "That is not important — If you want to talk to me again, see Dr. Dilden first. If it's important, Dilden can tell me." (Dr. Arnold Dilden, Jr. was then the Dean of Student Services.) A few weeks later, Dr. Finder was touring the campus with the Trustees when he spotted the student mentioned above. The President greeted the student in order to impress the Trustees, and the student had nerve enough to respond with, "I don't wanna talk to you! If you wanna see me, you go see Dilden first."

On another occasion, the same student spoke with Finder at an honors dinner. The young man was an honors student in one of the sciences, and had been denied several awards because of a supposed lack of cultural involvement at Juniata. He never complained, as academic achievement was important to him as well. He was chatting with Dr. Finder about the weather when the President asked him what he planned to do after graduation.

"Oh I hope to continue with ballet and someday to dance professionally," replied the young man, pokerfaced. Dr. Finder unblinkingly responded by lauding the student's cultural contributions and achievements at Juniata, and by praising the young man's wisdom in choosing a profession so obviously suited to his talents.

These are but two examples of Dr. Finder's strategy of trying to seem concerned about the students while actually knowing little and caring even less. No doubt there are numerous other instances.

The fourth and last cog in Finder's little scheme was to allow other people to perform as many of the functional activities of administration as possible. In this way, Dr. Finder could be free to carry out his other three steps more effectively, as well as to have plenty of free time to relax, vacation and party. This was the major difference between Jim Jones in Guyana and Bread Finder in Huntingdon: Jones was responsible for everything whereas Finder was responsible for next to nothing.

But by Fall, 1984, this delegation of responsibility had reached unprecedented levels at Juniata College, and all of Bread's underlings had decided they could run the school better without Finder. The Trustees looked favorably upon the program. The Director of Housing had finally found a way to be effective: armed security guards at the ends of every hall. The students were furious but frustrated. Dr. Finder urged them to take his side against his subordinates and threaten suicide if policies were not changed by a deadline. The deadline was reached and nearly three-quarters of Juniata College's student population died along with their well-intentioned President. . . .

At this point, my friend the medium began to slip out of her trance. She began babbling in Polish and Pig Latin. She swears she remembers nothing of what she said. I think she's crazy. She just watches too much TV.

Juniata's past is revisited in the sophomores' award winning rendition of A Juniata Carol in this year's All Class Night competition.

Out & About

by Patty Rauschenberger

Juniata Students showed that they do care for tradition as proven by the success of All Class Night. The events began at 4:30 when South, North and Cloister held cocktail parties for their dorms. I attended South's party where there was a nice turnout of students, faculty, and administration. The party ended at 5:30 when everyone went to dinner.

Faculty and administration were invited to Baker Refectory, and many came, adding to the theme of All Class Night.

The plays began at 7:30. One of the first things I noticed was the weight lifting club in yellow All Class Night T-shirts. The weight lifting club served as monitors and they must have worked well as there were no problems.

The crowd waited eagerly for the first play to be put on by the sophomores, Juniata Carol. The audience was not disappointed by this play as it was a well-acted, funny play that every one enjoyed. It was well written with puns and jokes that received loud laughter and clapping. Mike Ford's rendition of the ghost of Juniata present and the cheerleaders were a few of the aspects which won them first place.

Next was the junior class with King Arthur Revisited. The costumes were what one first noticed, and they were excellent. The play was not a comedy, having a serious comment on violence and how it can lead to corruption. However, David Miller's comic actions with 45-cliber and David Fahey's crying scene lightened the mood. Although the play seemed to drag in the beginning it picked up later and deserved it's second place standing.

The senior's play, History of Ellis Island and N.Y. Harbor had a serious message, however, the three scenes did not tie together well. It was drawn out and slow at times. Good aspects of this play were the doctor scenes. Creative use of slides and a song at the end of the play helped seniors earn third place.

Our Founding Fathers put on by the freshmen and though funny at times it lacked the substance to qualify as a contender. Good aspects of this play were the witches and Thomas Jefferson played by Duane Silvestri.

The reason all the plays were successful was due to the audience. Each play regardless of how it was performed had the audience's attention and courtesy. One was able to sit and enjoy the show.

As a finale to the evening the band Hat Trick was on hand for the All Class Night party held at Memorial Gym. Refreshments consisted of vegetable platters and four different punches. Although the punch ran out early in the evening, everyone stayed to dance to the music of Hat Trick, a band of excellent performers, they proved a great crowd pleaser.

Special thanks go to the faculty and administration for their help in preserving the tradition of All Class Night. All in all the evening was a success which many were able to take part in and it is hoped that this image of a "classy" All Class Night can continue.

Students Urged To Live Off-Campus

by Bob Kemper

Several additions have been made to Juniata's off-campus living facilities.

The first addition is the Hess apartments, which are presently being renovated and will be available to students next year.

As a means of acquiring off-campus housing, an ad was placed in The Huntingdon Daily News asking residents of Huntingdon who have rooms to rent to contact the Housing Office. Housing director Jack Linetti said that response to the ad has been fair, and arrangements to rent 10 or 11 more apartments are presently being made.

The housing office is encouraging students, particularly upperclassmen, to live off-campus so that room can be made for incoming freshmen.

The Education department has noted the following schedule changes for the 1980 Winter Term:

ED 235
Human Development I 3171
Change from 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

ED 236
Human Development II 3172
Change from 12:00 p.m. to 11:00 a.m.

Ovation For Crofut

by Neeta Moonka

Well known folk singer Bill Crofut appeared in a well received performance in Juniata College's Oller Hall on Sunday, April 20th. Accompanied by the accomplished musician, Carver Blanchard, Crofut presented the performance in the traditional style of folk artists and shades of Pete Seeger were evident throughout. His repertoire of songs was extensive as well as diversified. The songs ranged from well known favorites such as "Grandfather's Clock" to poetry set in song such as E.E. Cummings' "In Just."

Crofut's greatest talent lies in his ability to integrate so many areas of expertise into one performance. Not only is he a talented musician, but a gifted writer and humorist as well. He captivated the audience with anecdotes of his college days at Allegheny and his experiences abroad. Towards adding a degree of intimacy to his performance he dedicated his first song to Juniata's sophomore class which he decreed "the talented class" in reference to their recent first place in All Class Night.

The audience was encouraged to participate during several songs. If the response was any indication of the artist's ability to capture the audience, Crofut was very successful. Perhaps one spectator summarized the performance the best, commenting, "He's good at what he does."

Band Jazzes Up Spring Concert

by Heather MacCrindle

On April 29 in Oller Auditorium the Juniata Concert Band will perform it's second annual Spring Concert starting at 8:15. The program will feature classical and jazz pieces selected by director Ibrook Tower.

In honor of the recent dedication of the Humanities Cluster, the evening will begin with the performance of the "Dedicatory Overture" by Clifton Williams, followed by "Komm Susser Tod" composed by J.S. Bach, featuring the clarinet section.

Choosing "Concertino for Band" by Fritz Velke because it is "an exciting and different sounding piece," Ibrook Tower debuted in its first performance in 1963. Clarinet player Kathy Kahler will be featured. The final classical piece will be "Procession of Nobles" by Rimsky-Korsakov which is the "band's favorite."

Jazz selections included are "Caravan" by Duke Ellington and "Jazz Suite" by Robert Mersey, featuring a blues sax solo by Susan Taliff. A bit of march music will also be played in the band's final number by John Phillip Sousa, "Free Lance March."

Hoping to capture the audience's musical ear, the band will perform "Six Contrary Dances" by P.D.Q. Bach whose "reputation is dubious" and lineage even more so. This selection should offer a very different musical experience for JC Concert Band followers.

The expert musicianship of four outstanding band members should add to this spring performance since their return from the Intercollegiate Band Festival held at Susquehanna University on March 14, 15, and 16.

Kathy Kahler, John Farrugia, Margi Donahue, and Dick Fonda applied and were chosen out of 250 applicants to represent Juniata at this 33rd annual performance sponsored by the Pennsylvania Collegiate Bandmaster's Association.

Thirty-two other colleges and universities send talented musicians to perform in this intercollegiate band, but colleges of Juniata's size usually have only one or two students accepted.

Senior Andy Dwyer will play Nick, a biology professor new to the college, in the CHET production of Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolf?"

CHET Drama Opens Tonight

Two members of the Juniata College community, Charles Pollock and Andy Dwyer, are now appearing in the Carriage House Experimental Theatre production of Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolf?" at the CHET Center For The Arts, 613 Washington St., Huntingdon.

The three-act drama which marks the opening of the 1980 CHET season, will run tonight, Friday and Saturday, with curtain time each night at 8:30.

Pollock, the college's public relations director, plays the part of George, a history professor at a small, private New England college, who is married to Martha, the college president's daughter (played by Rebecca Hayes of Boalsburg).

Dwyer, a senior hospital administration major and leading scorer on the Indian men's basketball team this past winter, plays Nick, a biology professor new to the college. His wife Honey is portrayed by Beth McCoy of Huntingdon.

The two married couples who make up the entire cast of Albee's drama indulge in some heavy soul-searching at George and Martha's home following a faculty mixer at the college where both George and Nick teach.

Dark secrets and hidden animosities rise to the surface as George and Martha lock horns in a vicious verbal battle. Not even their guests are safe as they direct their anger and frustrations toward each other and Nick and Honey.

Many of the older couple's repressed feelings are brought out as the liquor loosens their tongues and lowers their natural inhibitions.

Marriage, children, love — nothing is sacred as the four characters bare their souls during the turbulent night.

George and Martha compete for their guests' sympathies as they rip and tear at each other's battered egos. George's hidden past and Martha's physical inadequesies become the focus for such sordid games as "Hump the Hostess," "Get the Guests" or "Bringing Up Baby."

The play is directed by Josie McCoy of Huntingdon, CHET board president and co-founder.

Tickets are still available for the remaining three performances of "Virginia Wolf" tonight, Friday and Saturday. For reservations call the CHET box office at 643-5125. Tickets are priced at $5 for adults, $3 for students and $2.50 for senior citizens.

Season subscriptions for the seven-production 1980 CHET season are also available through Saturday, April 26. For information call the box office. Subscription prices are $25 for adults, $15 for students and $12.50 for senior citizens.

Dr. Eddy Honored

by Chris Corry

Convocation began in a decidedly un-note worthy fashion. Shiney headed gentlemen and their silver-headed spouses strolled in the sun in front of Oller. Curious students ambled in and slid into the back seats. There was the usual promenade of black-sheeted professors and trustees, none of whom looked especially excited about the whole affair. Dr. Eddy's speech was the highlight of the ceremony.

"The future of the human race resides in its humanities, not in its abilities to build honeymoon hotels on Venus." Dr. Edward Danforth Eddy uttered these words in a thought-provoking address delivered at the Founders Day Convocation Thursday, April 17. After his address, Dr. Eddy was awarded an honorary degree by Dr. Crosby, Doctor of Humane Letters.

Higher education, says Eddy, needs to be "more challenging intellectually," but not in the form of more assignments or harder tests. "Every student should be forced to face his or her self." Professors should promote intelligent dissatisfaction, not conformity, among students. Students are to think for themselves and be "healthy (education) consumers," continued Eddy. "Don't tolerate shoddy teaching or shoddy advertising."

Dr. Eddy examined the differences between modern colleges and those of his youth. Institutions used to be "moral sanctuaries" with rules about everything. If one did not like it, one left "either on one's own accord, or of someone else's." Today, he believes, schools are more apt to be molded for the student.

Autonomy, tolerance and freedom top the list of today's student's values expounded the lecturer. They live by the maxim "freedom to drink, and the freedom to let drink" even if that freedom leads to a friend's alcoholism.

Self-deception and self-pity are two diseases currently spreading across campuses. Self-pity "takes the form of having a longer list of things to do than anyone else."

Caring, concluded Eddy, is what Juniata is all about. Caring about hopes, ideas, and people. "How we treat knowledge and how we treat each other are inseparable."

ACN Praised

Dear Editor:

I want to thank the All Class Night Committee, and the various classes who participated, and the audience for a wonderful performance for this traditional event. The after party/dance in Memorial Gymnasium was a fine climax for a perfect evening. I know the sophomore class was awarded the cup on stage, but I personally feel our entire student body won at the All Class Night event.

Sincerely,
William F. Berrier

Dispute Over Arch

Dear Editor:

Some concerned students at Juniata are protesting the Administration's recent decision to move women into the Cloister Arch during the academic year of 1980-81.

Room drawing begins in two weeks (May 5) so time is critical in showing objection beginning with a petition signed by ninety-one women. Both men and women feel that the Cloister has tradition: the unique quality of being the oldest dorm on campus (fifty-two years) and the structure of the Arch. Even the name, referring to a monastery, has certain connotations that would be destroyed if all the men were removed.

The Administration needs extra housing for women, but we feel that Cloister is not the answer. Other alternatives are the Cloister wing, North, and possibly making a whole floor of women in Tussey-Terrace.

If any student is interested in helping alleviate this situation by giving an opinion, please see an SGA Residential Life Committee member, the Cloister SGA Representatives, or a resident of the Cloister Arch.

Concerned Students,

A Weekend Trip

Dear Editor:

This past weekend a close group of friends camped out at Lake Raystown. We undoubtedly had a great time, but it was more than that. It was an exercise in fellowship and plain relaxation. The closeness with nature and one another permeated and stayed inside everyone's memory. Enduring the work and time that went into the projection, we stuck together and had fun while doing it. A sense of humor was definitely not lacking during the experience. Countless jokes and sly innuendos became the norm. Whenever the opportunity arose, laughter presented itself as yet another friend. We all came from there a little more enriched and wiser.

My message to the reader is this: relish your friendships now, because you will derive no more satisfaction or happiness in any other thing here at college. You may learn Chaucer or chemistry, but your best times will be remembered as being among people in a friendly atmosphere. You won't learn anything until you learn how to relate to your neighbor. Your most rewarding experience won't take place in the classroom; it will be in the dorm or on the Brumbaugh steps talking and relating ideas with one another. Dull people talk of others' actions, while the enriched person speaks of others' ideas and thoughts. I am not discouraged with us, I'm only discouraged with our negative actions.

My message to my hardy camper friends is this; I will not forget last weekend and thank you for being who you are.

Sincerely,
John W. George

with a celebration of humanistic endeavors with literary readings and musical selections. The Reverend George M. Docherty, the J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity, read selections of poetry by his countryman Dylan Thomas. Thomas' poetry is characterized by vivid imagery and rich detail accented with humor and uncommon insight. A story teller in his own right, the Rev. Docherty shared a diverse selection of Dylan's tales including a description of an American tour and a sensitive account of Christmas time.

The Juniata Chapel Choir closed the evening. Surrounded by an exhibition of the clear lusterous brushwork of Pauline Maxwell, the choir performed various musical selections in an equally opulent manner. Under the direction of Dr. Bruce Hirsch and accompanied by junior Anita Mock, they performed selections of Baroque and Renaissance style as well as Spanish Folk music and a waltz. The admirable talent of several members of the choir varied the presentation with solos ranging from an aria of an Italian opera to a vivacious gypsy melody.

May Day
by Patti Cook

On May 1, Juniata will once again celebrate the tradition of May Day. May Day is a celebration of Juniata women who have significantly contributed to the Juniata community. The nominating committee, consisting of administration, faculty, and students, will meet and then those nominations will be presented to the students along with resumes from each nominee and the student body will then vote. At May Day breakfast in Baker refectory at 7:00 a.m. the May Day women will be announced.

Honors To Be Given

It's that time of year again for the Honor Society to select juniors and seniors who have distinguished themselves from their fellow students by their above average academic and extra-curricular activities.

The procedure for getting into the society starts with the Registrar's office sending Dr. Norris, who heads the society, the GPAs of all juniors and seniors who achieve the grade point requirement. Juniors must have a GPA of 3.5 or better, and the seniors must have a GPA of 3.25 or better.

Dr. Norris says the society uses a type of point system in deciding who will be chosen. For instance, a student would receive more points for being president of a club rather than a member or a student could get more points for receiving a letter in a sport.

There are different kinds of experiments.

Every growing person has to experiment with many things to chart out their own lives. All experiments involve risk. In a sense, all active living is a risk. But some experiments are more responsible than others.

Some kinds of drinking, for example, are so potentially harmful to you and your friends that learning by experimenting would be senseless.

Like driving when you're not sure of how high you are. That's the last experiment for many. More young people die in drunk driving accidents than in any other way.

Another experiment that can be very nasty is using your body for a test tube for combining alcohol with other drugs.

Growing means experimenting. It also means learning to choose which experiments will help you get to where you want to be.

Women's Tennis Splits

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

After defeating Penn State — Altoona 6-3, Nancy's Netters split the decisions in their next two matches, to up their record to 2-1. The tennis team traveled to Loretto, Pa. last Thursday and to Reading, Pa. on Saturday.

The Red Flash of St. Francis did not fare much better than the Cougars had. JC swept the singles to win the match by a 5-2 score. Leslie Benedict, playing first singles, defeated Jean Miklosko 6-1, 6-3, while Sharon Ammarell won 6-1, 6-4 over Catherine May. Cindy Updegraff had problems with Beth Soldner, but hung on to grab a 6-4, 6-7, 6-3 victory. Debbie Baillie and Cindy Penatzer breezed to identical 6-1, 6-2 wins over Mary Jo Longhran and Liz Smith respectively.

However, the doubles managed to drop both matches. Amy Powless and Megan Miller teamed to face Ellie Ryan and Marcia Hadfield in first doubles competition. The Indians lost the first match of the day, 4-6, 1-6. Mindy Truesdale and Pam Morse likewise fell to defeat, 3-6, 1-6 at the hands of Karen O'Conner and Ellen O'Conner.

Hopes for a perfect season were dashed early on by the Albright Lions. After a three hour trip, the Tribe lost 6-1. Leslie Benedict lost to Beckie Yoder 5-7, 1-6, and Carin Kraut pulled out a close one from Sharon Ammarell 6-2, 6-7, 7-5. Cindy Updegraff fell to defeat 4-6, 1-6 to Michelle Yoder. Debbie Baillie put up a fight before losing to Nancy Guerwaccini 5-7, 6-4, 1-6. Megan Miller proved to be the only high spot of the day for the Indians, beating Diane Allewalt 6-3, 6-4.

Juniata's doubles remain winless after three matches. In a strategy move, Coach Nancy Latimore altered the pairings, but to no avail. Amy Powless and Cindy Penatzer hit a brick wall, losing to Jean Gerdes and Cheri Reeder 0-6, 2-6. Janey Povey and Pam Morse did slightly better, but still did not notch the victory. Jennifer Bantley and Lea Tillotson won 6-4, 6-2.

Coach Latimore has this to say about her Nancy's Netters: "We have a lot of depth on the team — much more than in the past. I'm a little concerned about our doubles. We haven't been too successful in doubles up to this point. We do need to improve those if we'll be successful on the season."

The Indians are at Susquehanna University today for the third match this week. The Tribe returns to College Hill on Saturday to face a tough Shippensburg team. The match starts at 1:00 on the Raffensberger Tennis Courts.

In tennis the Indians took it on the chin this past week losing matches to Gettysburg, 9-0, and to Shippensburg, 9-0, at home. The tribe could not get untracked against Gettysburg, ranked number 1 in division 3, or Shippensburg, a division 2 school. Despite valiant individual efforts the netters could not muster a victory in either match.

Coach Post's troops hope to up their record when they face Dickinson on Monday.

The Juniata golfers dropped a tough one to Lycoming this past week, losing at home by just 10 strokes.

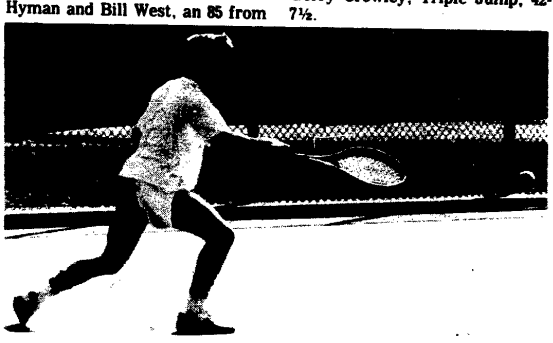
Paced by a match low of 79 from Steve Grogan the Indians made a strong showing. Despite tough opposition from a talented Lycoming team and blustery weather, five golfers still turned in good scores. After Grogans 79 were a pair of 84's from John Hyman and Bill West, an 85 from Tim Cooper, and an 88 from Andy Berdy.

Later in the week the Indians picked up their first victory of the season by defeating Dickinson by 8 strokes at home. The Juniata linksmen were paced by match medalist Russ Geiger who carded a 77. Other scores for the Indians included an 80 by Steve Stroup, 81's for Bill West and Jim LeDane, and an 87 by Andy Berdy. The next match is on Friday at Albright.

In track this week J.C. defeated York College 83-58. Mike Miller was the Tribes' leading scorer with 10 points. Miller took first in the 200 (23.00) and 400 (51.54).

Dave Headly placed first in the discus (130-2) and second in the shot (43-9½), to total 8 points.

Other Indian winners were: Tom Wise, 800, 2:02.18; Rick Weaver, Javelin, 172-7; Lou Kalkines, Pole Vault, 10-0; Ed Mozer, Shot, 44-7; Kevin Showvaker, High Jump, 5-10; and Gerry Crowley, Triple Jump, 42-7½.



Indians Head Towards Crown

by Scott A. Lehigh

The Juniata baseball team upped its record by sweeping a critical MAC doubleheader from Albright on Saturday. The tribe wasted no time on the offensive, by jumping on Albright for seven runs in the first inning. J.C. sent 12 batters to the plate combining six hits with three walks.

Albright scored their first run in the second and then exploded for four in the top of the fifth.

Chris Lyons and Greg Kucera were the hurlers for the Indians, with Lyons getting the starting nod and the victory. The two combined for four strikeouts, six walks, and allowing nine hits.

The only extra-base hits for J.C. were two doubles, one each by Jeff Miles and Gwyn Woodward, with the final score 9-5 in the Indians favor.

In the second encounter, freshman lefthander Bob McDonald turned in a stellar performance on the mound. He went the distance scattering six hits, striking out six, and walking four batters.

Coach Berrier's club exhibited some heavy hitting to back McDonald's pitching. Again waisting no time, Jeff Miles and Ed McEwen belted back to back triples in the first, followed by an RBI single from Chris Lyons. Continuing the 12 hit 11 run attack for the tribe were Woodward and Don Stubbs. Each ripping triples scored two runs apiece. All told the Indians scored two runs in each of the first three innings, one in the fourth and four in the fifth.

Shep Speaks

by Mark "Shep" Infanti

With spring finally here, a student's thoughts turn to baseball, frisbee, and love (not necessarily in that order). They trade their winter mitts for baseball gloves, and suddenly, everybodys running.

Grass turns green, skins turn red, but a true fan's color never changes. After two weeks of pro-baseball, everyone is sure his team will be in the series.

At Juniata, the Philly-Pirate arguments burn deep into the night. But now, the poor, "underpaid" laborers that are forced to play due to economic conditions, are thinking of striking.

Afterall, even migrant workers aren't forced to sit the bench for a measly $30,000 a year. Baseball owners are a far cry from the Robber Barons that once plauged labor; and Marvin Miller's bunch of prima dona crybabies are even farther from hard workers.

Someone should remind the players that it's the fans that pay their salary, and the fans that they are dissappointing. I personally can't see what they have to complain about. There are few professions where the average worker makes over $30,000 and is dissatisfied.

It's true, the job security isn't so good, but most people would agree that the pay more than compensates.

There was a time when the player was as loyal as the fan, but with the advent of the free agent, and marketing centered owner, those days are long gone. I for one, am sorry to see them go. It doesn't seem the same, fans can no longer associate with teams. There are no more Roses in Cincinnati, and Nolan Ryan just doesn't look like an Astro to me.

It's like the ocean in December when you find out your idol is no more than a three-piece suit in cleats.

Grading System Revised

by Patti Cook

The Curriculum committee along with the administration has put into effect a new grading policy which will start next year. The faculty had urged the Curriculum committee to review changing the grading policy into adding pluses and minuses. The rationalization was that they felt the addition of pluses and minuses yields more information to the people who read the transcripts. As Dr. Nolan, head of registrar and chairperson of Curriculum committee, said, "a little more information is added to employers and graduate schools, than just regular grades." Dr. Nolan also added that more schools have implemented the plus and minus grading policy.

The Curriculum committee voted to show pluses and minuses on transcripts and at the faculty meeting the faculty voted to show pluses and minuses and to calculate pluses and minuses on the student's transcript. The grade point averages will be as follows: A = 4.0, A- = 3.67, B+ = 3.33-3.50, B = 3.0, B- = 2.67, C+ = 2.33-2.50, C = 2.0, C- = 1.67, D + = 1.3, D = 1.0, D- = .67.

The student must graduate with a 2.0 average, so if one receives a C- (1.67), they must get a C+ (2.3) to counteract and balance the C- into a C (2.0). As Dr. Nolan says, the new grading policy will help the good student. But it may also hurt the average or below average student.

The new grading policy will go into effect fall of 1981 and will be to the option of the professor. What this means is that some professors will choose to use the new grading policy while others will not. They are unsure of how this will be explained on a transcript. All the wrinkles of the new grading policy have not been worked out.

Over forty Juniata students join in the March for a Non-Nuclear World in Washington D.C., Saturday, April 26.

Anti-Nuke Protestors Travel to Washington

Over 40 Juniata students, accompanied by campus minister Andrew Murray, were among the 25,000 participants in the March for a Non-Nuclear World in Washington, D.C., Saturday, April 26.

Leaving Juniata by bus at 7:45 a.m., they arrived at the capital at noon to begin their march down Constitution Ave. to the Washington Monument.

Protesting the use of nuclear weapons and energy, many marched under the one Juniata banner "Better Active Now, Than Radioactive Tomorrow."

Despite cold temperatures and a steady drizzle, the marchers listened for seven hours to such speakers as Barry Commoner, noted environmentalist; Ted Lombard, former physicist at Los Alamos Laboratories; and Dick Gregory, author, comedian, and activist.

Providing musical entertainment were: Blood, Sweat & Tears, Pete Seeger, Bonnie Raitt, Mary Travers & Peter Yarrow (formerly of Peter, Paul & Mary), and 10 other groups.

The Juniata trip was generously sponsored by the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee, Conservation Club and Center Board.

Raft Regatta to be Launched

by Heather MacCrindle

Beginning at 1:00 o'clock this Saturday afternoon JC students will once again "launch" one of Juniata's oldest traditions — Raft Regatta. The race will start at Laney's Feed Mill at the Smithfield Bridge and proceed five miles to Mill Creek Bridge.

Because the Centerboard Committee usually formed to organize the regatta was not working, this year's Raft Regatta was planned, organized, and publicized by chairmen John Snyder, Mike Stone and Bill Wagner along with a committee of ten others.

The rafts will be judged in the usual three ways: construction, theme, and time of finish; but this year's committee has come up with a brand new catagory as well — trash collection.

To stop the annual litter of beer cans and broken bits of rafts, a litter bag will be provided for each raft crew. The rafts will be competing to collect the most trash from their own raft, from the river, and that thrown from other rafts along the way. All rafts entered must be at least 6 by 6 feet, carry a minimum of three people, and be run by "human power" only.

Six professors have offered to judge the top five winners who will receive anywhere from $100 for first place to $10 for fifth. Points

Semesters Versus Terms Debated

by Neeta Moonka

Dr. Terry Hartman, Dean of Academic Affairs, stated in an interview held on April 18 that the switch from terms (the system presently in effect) to semesters was being considered "very seriously." He explained that a straw vote held at a recent faculty meeting was divided with slightly more faculty members in favor of semesters. He added that the administration was by and large in favor of the change. Dr. Hartman, who himself is an advocate of the semester system, outlined the advantages of such a change. Dr. Donald Mitchell, head of the Chemistry department, an opponent to the change, presented a different perspective. Several department heads also expressed their opinions on how the implementation of semesters would effect their departments academically.

Dean Hartman felt there would be financial as well as academic gains with a switch to semesters. Although he admitted the issue is a close one economically, he foresees savings in time and money in having only two registrations a year rather than three. Fewer billing periods would leave the registrar, the business manager, and other areas time to accomplish other things.

In a memo issued to department chairpersons on April 18, Dean Hartman described what he envisioned a semester to be. He theorized two fourteen week semesters in one academic year with a one week examination period following each semester. Included in his model is an adaptation to variable credit hours rather than units.

Academically, Dr. Hartman expressed an opinion that everything that can be done under terms can be done under semesters but not vice versa. Elaborating, he said that under a semester plan more slots are available for scheduling and that in some areas more information can be taught. He commented that under the semester system, students will have more time to think about what they have learned and the atmosphere is more relaxed.

Dr. Mitchell argued against this position, expressing the sentiment that the Chemistry department is "very strongly in favor of the term system." Unconvinced of the economic advantages of the semester system, he outlined social and academic factors which he felt supported retaining the term system. He explained that under the present system a student can sequence courses more readily. For instance, a chemistry student can have completed all his basic requirements by the end of his sophomore year, complete upper level courses his junior year, and do research his senior year. Dr. Mitchell does not feel that upper level courses can be completed in time to do research under a semester program.

Regarding the social aspect, Dr.

Editorial:

Another Decision Made Without Student Input

Faculty Changes Grading System, Will Cause Trouble for Students

Speaking of decisions — have the students of Juniata heard the latest? If not, wonder why? It is probably because lately people keep forgetting to ask students their opinion before making these decisions. Last week it was the destruction of the tradition of the arch; this week it's the grading system that is in question.

It seems that the curriculum committee, on the advice of the faculty, have taken it upon themselves to change the way students are graded. The funny thing is that they forgot to ask the students. To a student grades shape the future of his career. A decision to change the means of grading is not a decision to be made without consulting students.

Who gave the faculty the right to change the way students are graded, especially those who have been getting grades, without pluses and minuses, for two or three years. As educators, they should have been knowledgeable enough to know that it will make a difference for students receiving A's, B's, C's or D's to now be receiving additional pluses and minuses. Shouldn't that mean that all grades received by students in the past should be changed to pluses and minuses? Can a fair grade point average be calculated if one goes for two or three years without pluses and minuses and then one or two years with them.

But wait! Some students may actually be fortunate enough to never get a plus or minus; because those decision makers, in their infinite wisdom, have made the new grading system arbitrary. Some will give them and some will not, some will receive them and others will not, and one may get a 73% or a C- and get 1.67 added to their G.P.A. and someone else will get a 72% and a C and have a 2.0 added to their G.P.A.

Look if everybody and their brother feel they have the right to make decisions for those 1100 people who pay their salaries then at least they should feel obligated to make intelligent ones, like beginning the new system with the class of 1984 and make it universally practiced. THE JUNIATIAN holds to its' position that the students ought to have a say in the decisions being made. At least, in this way, decisions will be made that are in the best interest of those that they will be affecting.

Letters to the Editor

Laundry Exhorbitant

Dear Editor,

I'm writing about the recent increase in the price of using laundry facilities. It now costs 50¢ for one washer load and 15¢ for one dryer cycle of twenty minutes. Students will now have to pay $1.75 to do two loads of wash and five dryer cycles. This may not sound like much, but by the end of the month we students will be paying $7.00 for clean clothes.

I find this an outrageous price to pay considering the inconvenience we already have to put up with. For example, the washers are usually broken for long periods of time and when they are working there aren't enough machines to accommodate the students' needs.

Will paying more money improve our services? Will we be getting faster repairs on our existing machines? Better yet, will we be getting more machines to handle the overload?

These are the only reasons that I can think of for having the pay hike. But, probably the services will remain the same, our machines will stay broken for weeks and the lines will be just as long if not longer with another large freshman class coming in next year.

If we can't get improved services from the existing company with their pay hike, why don't we get a new company?

Sincerely,
Kathy Welch

On behalf of the All Class Night Steering Committee I would like to thank everyone involved in making All Class Night a success. The afternoon was fantastic, the behavior at dinner was the best in four years, the plays were well done and heard by all, and the party in the gym was well attended.

We heard all kinds of compliments. Some of the older faculty members said that the plays reminded them of the days of old, many said they could have even brought their children. The cocktail parties were well attended by the faculty (as was dinner).

Again I would like to thank everyone for making the whole day a fantastic success. I hope that ACN continues to improve and I expect that it will remain a Juniata tradition for many years. Keep it up.

Thank you all very much,
Ned

The subject of this week's trashy column is an ordeal that makes college life, and life in general, a real drag. It makes even Spring a bummer. No, I don't mean Huntingdon's weather, you twit. That has been discussed in these pages all too often.

What I'm complaining about this time is Spring Cleaning. There is no good reason we should do all our cleaning in the Spring, but the custom began in ancient Etruria and has been imposed upon all civilized societies after the first thundershower of each year ever since.

My roommate and I are both heavily into the aesthetics of disarray, but this elicits many an expression of dismay from those hapless few who (no doubt accidentally) venture into the confines of our preferred environment. For example, a half-filled glass of beer often prompts visitors to inquire as to its origin.

"Who had the kegger?" they generally will ask.

"I didn't hear about your kegger!"

"You were there — about two and half weeks ago, it was." At this point many will cringe in disbelief. "Hey, you want a sip?"

The real beauty of a glass of beer can not be realized until it makes itself at home. After a few weeks, the patterns left by stale foam are gracefully transformed into patterns of diverse and colorful molds and fungi. But these all-natural organic works of art must

This week's question was:
If you were President Carter what would you do about the Iranian "crisis"?

I would plan some sort of secret military action where we could go in and take the hostages since it seems that talking peacefully isn't getting us anywhere.

Jeanne McLaughlin '83

If I were President Carter I would think there really is not much more to do than what he is doing. If troops would be sent in the hostages would be killed so actually he would be getting nothing accomplished.

Dan Jendrzejewski '82

The implications of any action will cause worldwide consequences. I think his policy of economic sanctions has been admirable but possibly military action, as harsh as it seems, may be more successful in obtaining the release of the hostages.

Kirsten Storms '80

The best means of handling the Iranian crisis is with diplomatic and economic pressure. The use of military force would only make the situation worse and in doing so Carter risks the involvement of other world powers.

necessarily fall victim to the annual rite of Spring Cleaning. Along with many other appealing things which take all Fall and Winter to develop fully.

One such condition is the perfectly gorgeous crust of nicotine which decorates the inside of our apartment windows. This film is quite difficult to procure, so we spent much of the past two and a half trimesters doggedly smoking cigarettes, sacrificing health in the name of interior decor. (Besides, who wants to see out the windows in the Winter?) But even this protracted home-improvement effort is wasted, as the customary rules of Spring Cleaning dictate.

Some of our decorating hints have practical applications. For example, with relentless dedication we have developed an exciting design around the inside of our bathtub. Besides its obvious beauty, it offers the advantage of acting as a gauge: One can readily see the level to which the tub should be filled merely by glancing at it. Other welcome consequences of this form of toilet ornamentation are that one can easily tell which end of the tub should support his back, as the ring is discontinued there, and ours is safer than conventional styled tubs because the ring offers extensive traction to even the most accident-prone of bathers. Even beautiful, practical and safe decorating ideas must be disregarded, however, when Spring Cleaning time rolls around.

We have carefully snapped matchbooks into almost every conceivable corner of the apartment, just in case we ever need a reserve supply of them. And we have gradually covered all our floor and table space with a layer of newspapers, old tests, books and clothing. This is a protection against spills and muddy shoes, as well as a way to keep all bills and books in plain view in case of need, rather than hiding them on shelves or in drawers. Melted-down candles are also practical, aside from their inherent beauty — candles can not be knocked over when they are securely attached to a table.

Tall bottles are protected from falling over on the refrigerator racks by a coating of dried condiments which is renewed occasionally to replenish its adhesive properties. We also use a similar method to keep caps on bottles and jars. We keep our ashtrays full in order to be able to distinguish them from our plates, although sometimes the distinction is unclear and all our plates end up being ashtrays for a time.

We like having plenty of dustballs around. Besides being graceful, any decoration, you can make really neat missles if you roll them between your fingers. Mirror art is another neglected area of expression. There is no end to the myriad of patterns you can create on mirrors using everyday articles like toothbrushes, wet hair or many other things.

But all of our decorating and design ideas are for naught; Spring Cleaning conquers all. But I think I'll put it off for awhile; it's soon time to clear out of here for good.

Students Honored

Juniata College will honor 42 outstanding students for both academic and athletic achievement during its annual Spring Awards Convocation scheduled for 11 a.m., Wednesday, May 7, in Oller Auditorium.

The public is cordially invited to attend.

Included among the prizes to be awarded are:

— The Charles M. Rice Accounting Prize, awarded to a senior majoring in economics and business administration who is outstanding in accounting;

— The Justina Marsteller Langdon Prize, awarded to the senior woman who best exemplifies the spirit of helpfulness to others, gentleness of character and loyal devotion to Juniata;

— The Wilbur W. Oaks Prize, awarded to a senior biology major having a good academic record, a friendly and outgoing personality, and broad cultural interests;

— The Raymond R. Day Social Sciences Prize, awarded to a student whose program of emphasis is in an area of study such as sociology, psychology or urban studies, and who shows evidence of having participated in social service programs as an undergraduate;

— The Huntingdon Area AAUW Award, awarded to a graduating woman from the Huntingdon area who shows academic merit and who has been accepted to an accredited graduate school;

An early audience enjoys the mellow music of Wild Turkey before the rain at April Fest '80.

April Fest '80 Features Rock

by Chris Corry

The April Fest '80 band carnival held Saturday, April 26, was a valiant effort to overcome obstacles. As one student put it, "I thought that it was a really good idea. Too bad the weather did not co-operate." The all day band carnival sponsored by Centerboard, featuring four bands started at 11:00 Saturday morning.

Two bands and several booths by college organizations and various dorms were set up on Oller lawn and in front of the old gym only to be driven into the new gym by the rain at 1:30.

The carnival was sponsored by Center Board and planned by a committee of students chaired by Denise Steele. The fest cost Center Board approximately $2,000. Also on the planning committee were Gwen Sterling, Susan Telmanik, John Grenoble, Mike Bryner, and Cathy Bracciale.

The group "Appalachia" was the favorite, if the way the gym emptied whenever Appalachia took a break can be taken as evidence. They played a variety of music ranging from "classical beer-drinking tunes" to the Beatles. "It's Been a Hard Day's Night", "Satisfaction (I Can't Get No)", "Aqualung", and "Waterhole" were some of the favorites.

The "Buffalo Chip Kickers", who came with an impressive array of instruments including bass, fiddle, and banjo were summed up by one student with "they were good it you like bluegrass." Another student, when asked what he though the group deserved on a scale of one to ten, replied, "A two if you were sober and a seven if you were twisted out of your mind."

Unlike the "Buffalo Chip Kickers" and "Appalachia", this was the first time the third group, "Wild Turkey", has played at Juniata this year. "They did some good Neil Young" commented one student.

The group "Samaraton" played at the free dance held in the gym at 9:30. The complaint voiced over and over again was "They didn't play songs with a beat". They were a good group but they weren't the kind of group you want at a dance."

Chairperson Denise Steele says of the fest, "I think it went fairly well. A few kids were uncooperative but overall the behavior was pretty good." She was satisfied but not enthusiastic about the turnout. "There were a lot of people in and out," she added. Center Board is considering the possibility of having a spring band carnival next year. Denise is ready, "I'd like to do it again if I had a lot more help."

Sometimes a few words can make a great deal of work worthwhile. "I had a great time."

Laughing Bush Growing

by Lucy Heggenstaller

Their name is Laughing Bush Enterprises and their self-appointed purpose on this campus is "to provide a good time" for anyone interested. Spokesman Jeff Taylor explained, "We all enjoy the outdoors and like to see others enjoy it, too". Laughing Bush began two years ago with packs, tents, and donated canoes. It now has the resources to outfit almost any kind of outdoor excursion with ideas, equipment, information, and with the addition of a natural food co-op, the essential packable high-energy foods.

This term the non-profit organization has initiated a few new services. The previously mentioned natural food co-op, the latest addition, is currently operating on a trial basis. The co-op provides substantial discounts on natural foods to members of the co-op, while maintaining low costs for others interested in the foods to relieve after-food-service hunger or to nibble at a party. These healthy munchies, dried fruits and nuts, are on sale now during regular business hours.

Another recently added service is the arranging and organizing of outdoor activities for adventuresome participants. The first excursion, spelunking overnight at Laurel Caverns, was a satisfying success and future events promise to be the same. On the agenda for the rest of the spring term are: white-water rafting, bike hiking and backpacking. For details or reservations inquire at Laughing

Cloister Unrest

by Lenora Golamis

The question of women in the Cloister Arch has raised quite a bit of controversy on campus. A petition against the Administration's move containing three hundred signatures — one-quarter of the student body — was circulated and turned in.

This issue brings forth some main points: 1) Why was the action kept so quiet until a mere two and one-half weeks before room drawings? 2) Why move the men in the Arch when a less disputed place would do just as well? 3) And most of all, why change a unique building on Juniata's campus, a building that represents tradition?

The men in the Arch are supposed to have been informed about a possible move of women into the Arch if the Cloister still maintained its reputation of rowdiness. Men involved have commented about this "rumor" whose extent of truth they didn't understand until action was too late. One point mentioned was that Cloister's damage rate has been consistent but not as high as Tussey-Terrace's. Another point brought forth was graffitti, in some cases obscene graffitti, on the walls of the Arch. A solution was a chalk board covered with all kinds of comments. Is all this justification for removing the men?

Alternatives were suggested for housing the extra women: another floor in North, making a floor in Tussey-Terrace entirely women, or even a floor in the Cloister Wing. Why the Cloister Arch? The space fits the 27 to 30 person need, but so do the alternate suggestions.

An explanation lies in the aspect of programming: the interaction of the Arch and the Wing. This may seem a bit ironic because Cloister is ranked first in the dorm competition. The claim is that the men in the Arch have not participated adequately in dorm activities; they've acted almost as a separate dorm. Here lies an opinion of apathy which is present in every dorm but the Arch is not like every dorm so the Administration needs to make sure they uphold a much higher standard of attitude. Why must they punish the occupants of the Arch for being human?

The main argument against women is the tradition behind the Experience the Chamber Quartet

The Academy Chamber Quartet — from Philadelphia's Academy of Vocal Arts — will bring a diverse and impressive background of musical experience to Juniata College when it performs here on May 1.

The quartet's Juniata concert — to which the public is cordially invited — is funded, in part, by grants from the Presser Foundation of Philadelphia and the college's Edith B. Wertz Endowment for the Support of Cultural Events. There will be no charge for admission.

Included on the quartet's May 1 program will be selections by such highly-respected composers as John Dowland, J.S. Bach, Gabriel Faure, Heiter Villa-Lobos, Francis Poulenc and Franz Schubert.

And, as noted by Mary Ruth Linton, music department chairperson, the quartet members' credentials and experience indicate "a superb performance."

"This is really a talented group," says Mrs. Linton, also an associate professor of music. "They have studied with some of the very best artists and they have wide-ranging and impressive performance credentials that suggest they are very talented musicians."

Indeed, the quartet members do have extensive backgrounds in the study and performance of their musical specialties.

Susan Tilton, soprano, received her master's degree from the Philadelphia Musical Academy, where she was a full scholarship student.

Now in her second year at the Academy of Vocal Arts, she is a pupil of Nell Rankin and has previously studied with Ellen Rulau, Licia Albanese, Jane Rolandi, Constance Cody King and Nettie Nicholson.

Furthermore, Ms. Tilton was a second place winner in the 1979 James Parkinson Verdi-Puccini and the Giargiari Bel Canto competitions. Her operatic roles include Despina ("Cosi fan tutte"), Zdenka ("Arabella"), Najade ("Ariadne auf Naxos"), Emmie ("Albert Herring") and Berta ("Barber of Seville").

Clarinetist Stuart J. Best has studied with Anthony Gigliotti, Donald McGinnis and Robert Titus.

Presently first-clarinet with the Pennsylvania Orchestra, he is a former member of the Columbus (Ohio) and Vancouver symphonies and has been a soloist with the Jerusalem Symphony under Lukas Foss and with Mitch Miller's National Tour Orchestra.

He also is a member of The Friends of Chamber Music, which performs frequently at the Grand Opera House in Wilmington, Del.

William Ghezzi, classical guitarist, currently is president of the Philadelphia Classical Guitar Society and a teacher in Philadelphia.

He was a private student of Eliot Fisk and earned his bachelor of music degree from Temple University, where he studied with Peter Segal and Anna Kotsaranko. Ghezzi also has given numerous recitals in the Philadelphia area

Album Review

Third Stream — Gettin' It Together

My relatively limited knowledge of contemporary jazz (once I attended a Chuck Mangione concert and met Chuck and the quartet) prevents me from making any stringent analogies, but I say Third Stream sounds a bit like a fresh conglomeration of Curtis Mayfield's Shaft; Average White Band; Chuck Mangione; Earth, Wind, and Fire; Tim Weisberg and George Benson.

Third Stream is a progressive jazz band from the Harrisburg area. Members include Phil DeAngelis; student of Dennis Sandole and former instructor of John Coltrane, Stanley Clark, and Pat Martino, on guitars, percussion and synthesizer; Jim Miller, bass player and the inner of the bassist of 1974 award; Thomas Albert, former student of percussion with Fred Buda, on drums, piano, flute and guitars; and Tom Strohman, winner of the Louis Armstrong Outstanding Musician Award, on flute, clarinet, saxophones, piano and percussion.

My favorite cut from Third Stream's latest album is the title track, Gettin' It Together. That song is a fantastic progressive blend of Strohman's tenor sax, DeAngelis' synthesizers, Miller's bass, Albert's drums with Dave Garrett and Dave Sill on percussion and congos.

Sorcery is a mystical, innovative tune with a hypnotic bass line, unnamed special effects, tom toms, bowed cymbles, soprano sax, camel bells, guitars and synthesizers. Another excellent take is First Take, with Tom Strohman's flutes. FT is quite reminescent of Tim Weisberg.

Good cuts include Brain Tumor Blues, a fast-paced, overtaking song with an abrupt ending — symbolism?! Marbles has a classic, jazzy sound — mellow yet introspective. Lean and Mean reminds me of the Crusaders Street Life. DeAngelis' guitar on Stick It is similar to some of Jeff Beck's early efforts; the power-packed horns accent the leads and solos.

Third Stream's new album, Gettin' It Together is a savory, enjoyable experience — one I recommend with relish.

Classic Cut-out Pick of the Week — J. Geils Band — Full House

This vintage (1972) release on the Atlantic label has provided me with endless hours of entertainment. While it never really made the charts, Full House, captures Boston Boogie at its very best — live.

This is certainly not the easy listening material that the band has become financially successful

Bush during regular working hours.

Laughing Bush provides other services to the Juniata community. They have contacts with professional outfitters if you would like to rent something they do not have. Also available are catalogs if you would like to purchase equipment of your own and first hand knowledge to answer your questions. Their trial newsletter, published earlier this term, will be expanded to a four-page publication with tips for novices and experts, as well as safety information to assure that you will have fun without blisters or burnt fingers. Laughing Bush keeps their prices low by subsidizing costs with funds from their coffeehouse and occasional grants from Center Board. They do not add deposit charges to their fees. When they come out ahead financially the extra funds are invested in the purchase of new equipment. Hikers are encouraged to check out the new day packs.

Laughing Bush has grown, and according to its members, it is still growing. To celebrate their past and present growth on their second anniversary, Laughing Bush is holding an extraordinary coffeehouse on May 2. To be held in Cartharsis Lounge, the coffeehouse will offer unlimited refreshments and a collection of exceptional acts: Third Stream, a progressive jazz band whose first album has just been released, The Jive Band, a band well-received at a recent coffeehouse, and Gary Lee Baker, a recent graduate who will be performing favorites of contemporary rock. Don't miss the celebration!

Mitchell's opinion was that students are more relaxed under a term system. He pointed out that under semesters many more students had problems handling five courses at a time. Also for students having a difficult semester, the courses lasted longer.

Dr. Kenneth Rockwell, head of the Biology department, stated that the Biology department could move into a semester pattern but fairly major rearrangments would be involved. He expressed concern that a change might create problems in the area of available facilities and equipment. Academically, he affirmed a program equivalent to the present could probably be offered.

Dr. Ronald Cherry, head of the Business department, indicated that a change to semesters would be almost totally adverse for his department. The problems he noted were that course content would have to be reduced or courses eliminated to stay within the guidelines outlined by Dean Hartman. Secondly, it would be more difficult to have field trips and off-campus activities because of possible conflict with four other courses. In addition, Dr. Cherry noted that most companies are not interested in having students for fourteen weeks so internships would be affected.

Mrs. Evelyn Church, head of the language department, said their departmental vote was 3 to 2 in favor of semesters. She explained that terms suit language levels I and II very well, but that under the term system upper level courses such as literature and history courses suffer. For example, she pointed out that in Spanish American Novel, students read 5 to 6 novels a term. Under the semester system they read seven novels and had time to write a paper. She added that semesters are also advantageous to students who study abroad.

Dr. Ralph Church, head of the English department, where the departmental vote was 3 to 1 in favor of semesters, described advantages of the semester system for courses involving a lot of reading or writing. He stated simply that there is more reading time, more writing time, and more thinking time in a semester course.

The final vote taken by departments, according to Dean Hartman, was again split, but this time the outcome was slightly in favor of terms. Dean Hartman said he expected the Executive Committee to suggest the establishment of a committee to study the implications and com-

S.G. Evaluates Professors

This year, for the first time, the Student Government of Juniata College will be publishing the results of a "Course and Teacher Evaluation," which was conducted immediately after fall and winter terms of this academic year.

The object of this publication is to "enable students to have accurate expectations of what a course, and the professor of that course, is going to offer them based on the experiences of other students." It was hoped by the Student Concerns Committee of Student Government, which organized this survey, to have the results published before pre-registration, so students could find the results helpful in course selection for the coming academic year. Due to technical troubles, though, the results will probably not be released until after pre-registration is completed.

Student response to the questionaire was relatively low, according to student government members; only 20 to 30 percent of the students asked to fill out the survey actually did so.

The survey which will be contained in booklet form will consist of 148 pages of class by class results. The thirty questions which were asked of students are broken into six topic areas including: Text and Readings, Lecture and Discussion, Laboratory, Exams and Grading, Professor, and a catagory labeled General. The entire project had a cost of $1000 to Student Government.

The survey is the result of work started by Student Government late last school year. But according to student government members, this type of survey will probably be discontinued due to the high cost. Optimism was voiced by these same members of possibly continuing a survey of this information for students, but one which would be less expensive for the future.

Dr. Richard J. Mouw, professor of philosophy at Calvin (Mich.) College, has been named the fifth J. Omar Good Visiting Professor of Evangelical Christianity at Juniata College.

Bus Service to Raystown

by Neeta Moonka

Juniata College is providing bus service to Raystown on Saturday and Sunday, and to Penn State on Saturday for the next two weekends. The schedule for Saturday is as follows. The bus leaves Juniata for Raystown at 10:30 a.m. and leaves for Penn State at 11:30 a.m. Leaving Penn State at 4:00 p.m. to return to Juniata, the bus leaves Raystown at 5:30 p.m. to return to Juniata.

On Sunday the bus will leave for Raystown at noon and will leave Raystown at 5:00 p.m. to return to the college. The cost is one dollar each way to Penn State and one dollar round trip or one way to Raystown. The bus drivers are Bob Gay and Jerry Champ. So far the turnout for the bus to Penn State has been good, although the evening run was cancelled due to lack of interest, according to Director of Programming, Wayne Justham. The college hopes to continue the service next fall.

Cloister in its fifty-two years at Juniata. Many men have lived in that dorm; the people have changed, the reputation has fluctuated, but the fact remains that the Cloister means men. Certainly the idea of women in the Cloister would cause a need for the change of the name along with its connotations. Alumni opinion is abstract. There exists no possible way to get an accurate sampling of opinion. Involving Alumni in an Administrative decision would cause a lot of unrest in drawing the line of Alumni influence on Juniata's policy. Clearly, writing to all the Alumni is not practical. Still some students have informed close Alumni, usually relatives, of the move by sending a letter that's being circulated by some men in the Cloister Arch. The reaction of the Alumni is uncertain because they are removed from the Juniata environment. Action by concerned future alumni seems to have done little good. Where do we go from here when many feel tradition would be severely hurt, but that argument appears to have little impact?

The answer to the question of women in the Cloister Arch seems to be that it has already been decided by the Administration. We, as students, must accept what our superiors say, they know what's best. That argument might be true if we were still in the system of secondary education, but we are, in fact, adults in a system of higher education. Maybe there still are some men and women who need a little more experience in controlling their actions, but there are also people on this campus that care to be involved in decisions that affect them instead of being consulted as an afterthought.

parisons of semesters versus terms next year. A decision will be made at the conclusion of the study. According to Dr. Nolan, the Curriculum Committee will suggest studying the area of variable credit hours along with the study of semesters and terms. The possibility exists that a system of variable credit hours may be suggested regardless of whether or not terms are instituted.

through in recent years and is not recommended for those with weak hearts or ears.

The best way to describe early J. Geils would be raw, powerful, and exciting. Considering the year it was recorded, this album is of surprisingly good quality. The crowd noise is kept to a minimum, and even the instrumental separation is done well. My favorite cuts are (not necessarily in order), First I Look At The Purse, Pack Fair And Square, Serves You Right To Suffer, and Whammer-Jammer. To be truthful I like the whole album but these are the highlights. So, check the cut-out racks; it would definitely be worth the time and the money.

Keep Red Cross ready.

Budget for S.G. Revised

by John George

At the latest Student Government meeting, the budget committee presented a $1000 bill for the late class and faculty evaluations. $500 was budgeted for the project, but $200 of it was already used, so $300 is remaining. It was approved that $500 be transfered from the contingency fund to the student fund. It was also approved that $700 be transfered from the contingency fund to the teacher evaluation project. The Student Concerns Committee was still working on the evaluations.

A need was expessed for dorm senators in Tussey, Northwest, Terrace and Sherwood. This would have to be a write-in program since it was too late to formally apply for the position. The Residential Life Committee reported that Cloister and North were in the running for the dorm of the year award.

Student Government rejected a grant that covered the cost of the Washington D.C. bus to the anti-nuke rally. The price of this was $455. The Peace and Conflict Committee appropriated $200 and Center Board gave $150.

The company that governs our washing machines recently announced that the cost of one wash will be raised to 50¢. It was to be determined last week if the machines worked properly or not.

Carnival Turnout Poor

Dear Editor,

Despite any rumors you may have heard to the contrary, "April Fest '80" did take place Saturday, April 26, 1980. If you don't believe me, just ask anyone on the Center Board Concert Committee. Other than a general lack of audience, things went fairly well. Please excuse my sarcasm, but I simply can't believe, after all the criticism of the college's activities programming that I've heard, why the turnout was so poor. Although none of the bands were major recording artists or ready for a national tour, they certainly were good enough to entertain a larger crowd than was present. I think that Center Board should be commended for attempting a complex undertaking on short notice. The idea of having a spring day and night reserved for music and relaxation is a good one, rain or shine.

WKVR Changes

by David Heisterkamp

Juniata's college radio station, WKVR, is in for a lot of changes this upcoming fall term. It seems, as reported at the WKVR staff meeting last Wednesday night, that the station isn't meeting the educational requirements of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). With a license renewal looming in the near future, WKVR has to shape up and prove that it has been producing acceptable programs.

Among the bigger changes will be the lengthening of radio shows from two to three hours. Within the duration of each show DJs will be required to produce some sort of educational program as long as an hour for interested listeners. When asked what type of programs the DJs could do Kim Swanson, station manager, said, "Anything!" DJs will be able to put on talk shows, comedy hours, artist specials, political debates, or commentaries on social issues and problems. Two good examples of what WKVR is looking for are the current Woman's Forum 1980, airing every Monday at 2:30 and conducted by Lynn Stellander and Denise Steele, along with the opinion line, asking controversial questions every Thursday night from 8 to 9 p.m.

Another matter of concern that is being tackled is the problem of WKVR's limited audience. Mark Cassel, program director, reports that "our listeners find us too unpredictable. They don't know what they're going to hear when they turn us on." In order to correct this problem, the radio station will adopt a scheduled pattern for the music to follow. For example, every Monday through Friday from noon to three o'clock, easy listening music will be aired. The DJs will have to be auditioned for the spots they want and must show continuity in their programs. Cassal hopes to "make the station more listenable, more predictable, and more reliable." It was also added that the programming department (News, Public Service, and Sports) needs more support and manpower.

Furthermore, a discussion was raised about the increasing amount of DJs and decreasing amount of time slots. It's probable that freshmen next year will have to work in a department for a year before they can become DJs. This will serve three purposes: the new student will learn more about the station before actually going on the air, will satisfy the need for manpower, and will prove dedication to WKVR.

In conclusion, Lynn Stellander, chief announcer, requested anyone who had suggestions or comments about the changes at WKVR to contact her by attending a WKVR board meeting, held every Wednesday at 3:30 in the Ellis College Center Blue room.

Raystown Job Available

It has just been announced that a part-time position at Raystown Lake is available for 9 weeks this summer. The job, which lasts from June 23 to August 31, 1980, embodies the title of Assistant Director for "The Summer of '80", a play production at Seven Points Amphitheatre. The required qualifications are that the person be experienced in theatre productions, have access to a car, have the ability to deal with the public on both a large-scale and on a one-to-one basis, and possess absolute dependability and willingness to work without supervision. Musical experience is also helpful.

The employee would be responsible in assisting the lighting, announcing, setting-up, and the collection of donations at each performance of the play. General assistance in the theatre workshop and the distribution of posters in the Huntingdon area once a week would be an assumed responsibility. Other jobs include the mailing of brochures and assistance in preparing the amphitheatre before the first performance.

Additional compensation is available for the person to produce and direct a children's play in association with the Carriage House Experimental Theatre for performance at Seven Points Amphitheatre. The cast of the play will include children ages 12-18.

To apply for this job, contact Professor Ibrook Tower in the Music Department, Juniata College, Huntingdon, PA 16652. The telephone no. is 814-643-4310 ext. 471. The application deadline is May 9, 1980.

Raft Regatta

will be given in each category for the "Raft With The Most Trash," "Best Constructed," "Best Theme," and "Best Finishing Time." These points will then be totaled to determine the winners.

Mike Stone advises perspective crew members to be "creative and unique in building their rafts." He also described the best building materials as "barrels, innertubes, and styrofoam." "From atop the bridges all along the route of the race," he believes will be the best place to watch the race for the less adventurous JC student.

A $15 registration fee is required from all participants. Five dollars of this fee goes to prize money, and the remaining $10 will be returned at the end of the race when clean-up and raft removal conditions are met. This high fee is also an attempt this year to keep litter on the Juniata River down to a minimum during the regatta.

The rafts will be picked up at designated places and times on both Friday night and Saturday morning by the Green Army. The rain date for the Raft Regatta will be the following day, Sunday May 4, or the next weekend May 10.

James Kidd, pianist, holds his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago and his master of music degree from Northwestern University. He performed for two years with the University of Chicago Contemporary Chamber Players under Ralph Shapey.

Kidd has performed throughout the Philadelphia area with a number of groups, including the Delaware Trio, the Friends of Chamber Music and the Diachronos Ensemble. He also has performed as a guest soloist with the Delos String Quartet, the Satori Woodwind Quintet and the Newark Symphony.

"The music department is excited about this quartet's appearance at Juniata," Mrs. Linton says, "and it wishes to remind area residents that they are most welcome to hear the quartet perform in Oller Auditorium on May 1."

New Train Service

by John George

This past weekend, a new Amtrak passenger service was initiated between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. The new "Pennsylvanian" does not require reservations, and a two dollar savings is available on one-way fares until June 30. Tickets may be obtained at any travel agency. The eastbound arrives in Huntingdon at 4:26 P.M., the westbound at 12:45 A.M., daily.

— The Baker Peace Studies Book Award, presented to a student who has established an outstanding academic record, particularly in courses in the Peace and Conflict Studies program;

— The Charles C. Ellis Memorial Scholarships, awarded to students who have demonstrated unusual competence in scholarship and good citizenship;

— The Juniata College Honor Society Scholarship, awarded on the basis of outstanding achievement and contribution to the life of the college community;

— Alumni Athletic Awards to the outstanding players in 13 varsity sports, plus the Stanford Mickle and Charles Bargerstock Awards — to outstanding male and female senior athletes, respectively — and the John E. Blood Award, to a senior athlete with four varsity letters and the highest grade point average.

In addition to the award presentations, Dr. Kenneth H. Rockwell, professor of chemistry and Juniata's 1979 Beachley Distinguished Professor, will deliver the Convocation address.

McCullen Joins Juniata Staff

Kevin G. McCullen, most recently of Corbin, Ky., has been named director of institutional planning and research at Juniata College, effective April.

To making the announcement, Juniata president Frederick M. Binder observed that "Mr. McCullen brings to his Juniata position impressive and wide-ranging credentials in his field, and the college considers itself fortunate in acquiring his services."

Immediately before coming to Juniata, McCullen had served in a similar capacity for Union (Ky.) College, where he was associate dean for planning and evaluation. While at Union, he also served in two other closely-related positions: as coordinator for strengthening developing institutions program and as coordinator for advanced institutional development program.

At Juniata, he will be primarily responsible for providing information and analyses needed for administrative decisions and for overseeing the design and implementation of improved institutional planning and evaluation processes.

Additionally, he will coordinate the completion of selected institutional questionnaires and serve as a resource person on current research about higher education.

McCullen, who will report directly to President Binder, also will be responsible for studies intended to project enrollments, to clarify the implications of alternative personnel policies, to review the effects of specific admissions procedures, and to determine the cost-effectiveness of the various aspects of Juniata's overall operation.

In addition to fulfilling the obligations of his various positions at Union — where he also served as assistant dean of the faculty and taught political science — McCullen was an external evaluator for the basic institutional development program at Tusculum College from 1976-79.

A 1965 graduate of St. Joseph's (Pa.) College with a B.S. degree in international relations, McCullen earned his M.S. degree in international studies from the University of Denver in 1969.

An avid writer, McCullen has authored numerous works about institutional and program management, including four which appeared in 1977: "Goal Setting and Progress Review Process," "Union College Goals, 1976-77: A Progress Report," and "A Guide to the Purposes, Characteristics and Development of Unit Objectives" and its related "A Guide to the Purposes, Characteristics and Development of Activity Plans."

In addition, he generated numerous grant proposals which produced more than $1.5 million for Union College since 1974.

Grid Captains Named

Juniors Steve Lach and Matt Osekowski, have been named captains of the 1980 Juniata College football team, new Indian head coach Bob Ash announced this week.

Lach, a defensive back, and Osekowski, an offensive tackle, were elected by their teammates.

The speedy Lach, twice first-team All-Middle Atlantic Conference, recorded 32 tackles last fall and grabbed a team-leading seven interceptions. He is a 5-10, 170-pound biology major.

At Altoona High School, he was named to the National-Honor Society and received a Johnstown Tribune-Democrat Scholar-Athletic Award.

Osekowski, a 6-1, 220-pounder, has started at both guard and tackle for the last two years. With excellent upper body strength, he leads the blocking on power sweeps and hails from Gateway High School. He is presently a business and biology major.

"I'm very pleased that the team has picked such outstanding leaders," said Ash. "It is very evident, in the short time I've been at Juniata that Steve and Matt have the respect of the entire squad.

"They are both extremely dedicated football players who will be excellent representatives of our football program both on and off the field."

The Indians open their 1980 football season September 20, traveling to Long Island to meet C.W. Post.

Wages Up

Inflation may be limiting the number of jobs available to college graduates, but it is increasing the starting salaries of those who do go to work, according to the College Placement Council.

Based on data collected from placement offices at 164 colleges and universities, the CPC reported this week that graduates in 24 different areas all reported increases in starting salary offers over mid-1979.

Leading the field were students majoring in petroleum engineering, who attracted the highest average offer of $23,748 annually, a 10.4% increase over figures reported in July, 1979. Other engineering graduates also did well as job offers extended to engineers accounted for 62% of offers extended to bachelor's level graduates.

The salary survey also noted that computer science graduates received over 50% of the offers made to science graduates. The average salary offers to graduates in business fields and humanities/social sciences also increased says the CPC, although in the latter field the percentage increases are more modest than other disciplines.

Poetry Contest

A $1000 grand prize will be awarded in the Sixth Annual Poetry Competition sponsored by the World of Poetry, a quarterly newsletter for poets.

Poems of all styles and on any subject are eligible to compete for the grand prize or for 49 other cash or merchandise awards.

Says Poetry Editor Eddie-Lou Cole, "We are encouraging poetic talent of every kind, and expect our contest to produce exciting discoveries — like Virginia Bates, a housewife from Woodbine, Maryland. She won our grand prize last year with her poem PIETA, about her son in Viet Nam."

Rules and official entry forms are available from World of Poetry, 2431 Stockton, Dept. N, Sacramento, California 95817.

Shep Speaks

by Mark "Shep" Infanti

"Going for the gold" has a lot of different connotations nowadays but there was a time when it's meaning was universal. Everyone knew that a gold medal in the Olympics was the pinacle of athletic achievement.

Perhaps it's a lust for gold that drives a man to run the mile in under four minutes, an obsession with the soft yellow metal that makes him give up three years of his life to train for one race, one fight, or one game; perhaps, but let's hope not.

I think there is more at stake in the 1980 Olympics than American's political pride. Even if the western countries could unite, (and they can't) in a boycott, do you really think it would do any good? Remember the African boycott of '72? I doubt if anyone else does either. I really don't think President Carter finds much comfort in the fact that so far the only response to his appeal for a boycott is that the United Kingdom has offered to not send her equestrian team, and that the Australian field hockey team absolutely refuses to participate in the Olympics unless the U.S. goes to Moscow.

Maybe we should stop to consider the consequences of such a boycott. Realistically, the absence of the U.S. would only mean more medals for the Russians. Ethnocentric pride withstanding we do have some of the best athletes in the world, and they deserve the chance to prove it.

Anyone who honestly believes that the Olympics can remain apolitical is painfully niave. One only needs to examine history to find proof of the opposite. The Berlin and Munich Olympics are perfect examples of the effect of politics on the games.

I hope no one will think me un-American for taking this stand. I know it's a heinous crime to disagree with the majority but look at it this way: maybe we could rewrite our eligibility rules, slip some "ringers" onto our team, then go over and beat the hell outa the Russians. That would make them look like the fools instead of us.

In golf this past week the Indians did not fair too well as they lost to Gettysburg in a dual match, 443-408, and to Albright and Wilkes in a triangular match, 457-450-448.

In the Gettysburg match the medalist for Juniata was Steve Stroup who shot an 84. He was followed by Jim LeDane with an 86, an 89 for Bill West, a 91 for John Hyman, and a 93 for Eric (Fur) Furman.

In the triangular match against Albright and Gettysburg John Hyman was the Juniata medalist with an 86. After Hyman were Bill West with a 90, a pair of 92's from Steve Stroup and Russ Geiger, and a 97 by Jim LeDane.

This week the Indians are at the M.A.C. Championships.

The Indian netters were defeated by a tough Elizabethtown team, 9-0, this past week at home but they came back to defeat Lycoming by the same, 9-0, score in their next match.

The next stop for the Indians are the M.A.C. Championships.

In track the Indians were defeated by the Red Raiders of Shippensburg by a 110-35 score. Tom Wise, Eric Bollinger, and Rich Weaver each had 5 points for the Juniata thinclads. Tom Wise took a first in the 800 with a time of, 2:01.45, Eric Bollinger placed first in the discus with a heave of, 133-4, and Rich Weaver threw the Javelin, 174, to capture a first.

In the Millersville Relays last week the Indian 4x200 relay team (of Bob Nourse, Bob Aravich, Tim Blankenstein, and Mike Miller) took a third with a time of, 1:36.4. Also for the Indians Eric Bollinger recorded a personal best in the discus with a throw of, 136-10. The next opponent for Juniata will be Dickinson on Tuesday.

Classic Seeks Winner

by Doug Williams

After four weeks of grueling basketball the Juniata Roundball Classic will finally have a winner. Of the 16 teams that began the basketball tournament only three are left.

This week the "RFs", "Ts" and "Shotguns" will jockey for the top stop of the double-elimination affair which began March 24. The "RFs" and "Ts" have only one loss while the "Shotguns" are undefeated.

The tournament is the brainchild of Steve Bowers, a Juniata senior. Bowers was inspired by a Sports Illustrated article on a similar tournament at Notre Dame.

"During my four years I complained a lot about apathy on campus. This being my last term at Juniata I realized that I've been a hypocrite, and decided to organize something," Bowers explained.

So with this in mind Bowers wrote a rational for the tournament submitting it to Athletic Director Bill Berrier. Berrier approved, and Steve assembled the 16 teams.

The tournament was designed to be a double-elimination streetball tourney. This assured each team of at least two rounds of action. The teams played best out of three games, 12 points each to determine a winner at each round. All games were played without referees or time clocks.

Some might challenge the absence of officials but Bowers says, "I was convinced that the tournament could succeed without refs. During four years of intramurals I've conlcuded that I.M. referees cause more problems than they solve. So far the games have met my expectations."

Bowers hopes the games will continue in the future. "The players' enthusiasm for the tournament (both winners and losers) has made the Classic a success to the point that several players have expressed an interest in making it an annual event."

Bad Week on the Court

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

Juniata's women's tennis team won six sets this past week, while their opponents tallied 15. In the process, JC dropped two of three matches and lowered their record to 3-3.

Nancy's Netters travelled to Elizabethtown last Tuesday to face the tough Blue Jays in what proved to be a very lopsided contest. E-town crowded the Indians 7-0.

Leslie Benedict	v	Beckie Donecker	4-6, 2-6
Sharon Ammarell	v	Jenny Haifley	0-6, 1-6
Debbie Baillie	v	Nancy Wilkins	0-6, 1-6

Janey Povey & Pam Morse	v	Linda Torgersen & Lisa Groff	1-6, 0-6

Alleghany Community College arrived on College Hill on Wednesday and left with a 5-2 loss. All of the singles players came up with convincing wins, but the doubles teams failed once again in their quest for that elusive first victory.

Leslie Benedict	v	Beth Carcella	6-2, 6-2
Sharon Ammarell	v	Laurie Hooper	6-3, 6-3
Megan Miller	v	Jenny Fisher	6-0, 6-0
Cindy Penatzer	v	Laurie Hechler	6-0, 6-0

Amy Powless & Annette Botti & Connie Warden & Nina Siebens	v	Laurie Hooper & Laurie Hechler Jane Fabian & Leslie Donahue	2-6, 4-6 2-6, 5-7

For the third straight day, Nancy's Netters took to the courts, this time at Susquehanna University in Selinsgrove. Cindy Penatzer was the only successful Indian in the 6-1 loss.

Leslie Benedict	v	Lynn Pickwell	4-6, 6-2, 0-6
Sharon Ammarell	v	Donna Gottshall	0-6, 2-6
Debbie Baillie	v	Ginny Lloyd	1-6, 5-7

The Shippensburg-Juniata match up scheduled for last Saturday was cancelled due to rain. The Tribe completed action this past Tuesday against Dickinson College. MAC's are scheduled for this weekend.

Coach Nancy Latimore attributed part of the team's problems to the calibre of play within Juniata's division. "We're finding that our Middle Atlantic Conference is quite tough. I've really been impressed with the quality of play within our conference."

Sandwich Sale

by Cheryl A. Ondechek

The Varsity "J" Club is in the midst of its spring fund raiser — they are selling ham and cheese sandwiches. The sandwiches are made fresh and sold once a week. The club will continue to sell these great sandwiches over the next three weeks. The dates left are May 7 (Wednesday night), May 14 (Wednesday night), and May 18 (Sunday of finals week).

Members of the club will bring the sandwiches through your dorms starting around 10:00. The cost of these delectable items is a mere 75¢. Why don't you save up your appetites on these days and help the "J" Club in the process?

Lacrosse Wins

by Marj Porter

The first Juniata Women's Lacrosse Club is now official! With much help, encouragement and support from Bill Berrier and Nancy Latimore, the Women's Lacrosse Club has finally been organized. On Saturday, April 26th the club made its debut. The 13 members traveled to Susquehanna University and tallied Juniata's first win, seven to five.

Amy Bolt opened with the first goal of the game and went on to score two more. Juniata's other goals were scored by Lauren DeHaven with two, and Connie Kilroy and Kathy ("Murph") Murphy with one each. The offense was aided by Amy Gruen, Beth Reuther and Alice Bricker.

Juniata also played a tough defensive game. With a lot of pressure from Susquehanna's offense, first-time goal-tender Deb Smith played a great game. She got a lot of support from Joanne Russell, Kathy Murphy, Marj Porter, Suzi Brown, Heather Roche, Amy Bolt and Sue Hoadley.

Although Juniata's club is young and inexperienced, the determination, enthusiasm, and spirit of its members made this first game a proven success. The club is looking forward to playing Elizabethtown College on April 29th and Wilson College on May 1st.

Cloister Decision Final

Rally Fails

by David Heisterkamp

Last Wednesday afternoon, a demonstration was conducted on the front lawn of Founders Hall protesting the recent decision by the administration to move women into the arch of Cloister dormitory. While the rain drizzled down 30 to 40 students, one with a megaphone stood in what looked to be a confused group of individuals and chanted "Free the Arch!" The chant only lasted about 30 seconds and it looked like the rally was going to be a flop. Rick Mayher, organizer of the protest stated that "not enough people seem to care about the decision. It proves school apathy."

After a short time in the rain, the demonstrators marched on to the porch of Founders chanting "We want Fred." To the surprise and cheers of the crowd, both President Fred Binder and Housing Director, Jack Linetty walked out and greeted them.

Immediately, the question of why women in the arch and why the breaking of the tradition was asked of President Binder. He said that "the students' committee recognized the Arch "as a solution to the housing shortage." The Arch houses the number of units needed to supply the extra amount of women attending Juniata next year.

When asked why women could not reside in a wing of Cloister, Jack Linetty explained that the wing's bathroom furnishings were not desirable for women and also that putting women on a wing would remove "good disciplined Cloister citizens."

It was apparent from what was said at the demonstration that, as Dr. Binder put it, "the Arch is a problem." Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Affairs, then came out of Founders to talk to the protesters and President Binder retired to his office.

Tilden continued by adding that the behavior in the Cloister arch was "designed to hurt other people and property." Tilden told the ralliers that last September the students living in the Arch were given a warning stating that if the vandalism did not stop, Arch students would suffer the consequences. True, lack of vandalism has improved greatly

Cloister Wins by One in Dorm Competition

The Residential Life Committee of Student Government announced earlier this week that Cloister dormitory finished one point ahead of the North Dorm complex in this year's Dorm of the Year Contest.

Cloister remained on top of the standings with a total of 53 points. North Dorms, which made an all out effort to catch and pass Cloister in the standings coordinated three programs in the last week of the competition but fell short of first place with 52 total points.

Because of the close finish both dorms will be awarded an all expense paid Raystown outing on Saturday, May 10, compliments of the Presidents Office. Originally only the first place finisher was to attend the event.

The complete standings are as follows: Cloister, 53; North, 52; Tussey-Terrace, 37; South, 36; Lesher, 25; Sherwood, 14; Long-Miller, 8; Flory-Kline, 8.

The campus witnessed an unusually good year in the way of dorm programming due to the diligent work of the residence hall steering committees. Some of the innovative programming included North's Polish Wedding Reception and Linetty Roast. Not to be outdone the men of Sherwood sponsored a pig roast this past weekend. Many dorms involved themselves in improving dormitory facilities — Cloister refurbished the Ranch and Tussey-Terrace renovated study rooms in the dorm. And dorms also sponsored all-campus parties throughout the year, such as South's traditional Octoberfest.

Lab Fees Not Wasted

by Bill Fester

Are Juniata students being "ripped off" by special course fees for courses which, in services and materials do not return the $25 special fee? Not so, according to Business Manager, William Alexander, who explains that the monies collected from these fees do not nearly cover the added costs of lab materials and other expenses which are incurred in out-of-the-classroom coursework.

Alexander stated that the money accumulated from this fee is placed in the Current General Revenue Fund, that huge pot where student tuition and housing money, revenues from the book-store and most other standard revenues are collected. From this general fund, money is then appropriated of each of the college's departments on the basis of the annual departmental budget, with more money going to those departments which require extra funds to meet operating expenses. No special course fee (or lab fee as they are sometimes known) is allocated directly to the course for which it was collected. This means that though you may be paying a special fee for Environmental Geology, the money could

Senators Elected Despite Problems

by Cathy Creswell

Elections for new dorm senators were held two weeks ago with the first Student Government meeting for the new senators held last night.

John Seymour, the new S.G. vice-president said he felt the elections went fairly well and that voter turn-out was adequate. There were four areas — Sherwood, Tussey, Terrace, and Northeast — in which no one ran for senator except on a write-in basis. This kept voting by people in these dorms to a minimum thereby cutting down voter participation.

Two other controversies marred the election. First, seniors were not allowed to vote. This hurt some candidates, especially the juniors. According to Seymour, there is nothing that states whether or not seniors can vote for dorm senators. What makes the ban on senior voting so inexplicable is that seniors were allowed to vote for Student Government president and vice-president earlier this year.

The other problem with the election was that it was held on the following Thursday rather than Tuesday after petitions were due in. No one seems to know why the election date shifted from Tuesday to Thursday.

Seymour expressed concern over these two problems saying that he hoped to work on the election format for next year so that problems like these do not occur again.

Seymour also felt that student apathy needs to be reduced, especially in those four dorms where no senators petitioned for offices. He also would like to see more freshmen get involved in Student Government. Seymour added that he was looking forward to working on these problems with the new senators next year in Student Government.

New senators were asked how

Laundry Costs Rise

by Heather MacCrindle

"I think you can be critical of the company in this thing," said James Quinlan, director of the Physical Plant when asked about the recent cost increase on washers and dryers on campus.

Since January 1 William Alexander, business manager, has been writing letters and calling the company repeatedly because of its ineffectual service and repairs to the machines all year. According to Quinlan, "we really had to get on them about not fixing the machines." Finally after two or three months the company sent their technical man, who decided that it was necessary to install security devices to reduce the "malicious" vandalism done to the machines in hopes of getting a "free wash."

This company has been with the school for two years now, and did not feel that a campus such as Juniata needed security devices when the machines were first

Editorial

Another Lost Increase

There has been displeasure voiced over the recent price-raisings of our washing and drying machines. These claims are not unfounded. In their never-ending quest for profits and their subsequent dividends to trustees and stockholders, our school and the Coin Automatic Laundry Equipment Company (CALECo) of Broomall, PA have taken it upon themselves to up the cost due to increased vandalism, higher utility outlays, and the cost of new security devices. This may be true but there has been vain service and repairs and have been few and far between this past year. If the price of cleaning a load of wash rises because of the misdeeds of a few not necessarily from this campus, then an alternative or a solution to the problem has to be found. Either we must procure new cleaning facilities or improve on the existing ones. Since improvement usually protends a new expenditure to be underwritten by someone (usually the exploited proletariat), then the existing system must be changed altogether or the huddled masses will go crusty. (They won't be huddled for long). We have no concrete suggestions for change, but we can produce some questions. Why weren't the machines safeguarded against vandalism before their initial installation and the cost of it tallied in the original bill? Maybe the manufacturer did not expect his machines to be located in such a barbaric academic jungle, but what can one expect you to do when the machine eats your last quarter and dime and has done so for the last few months because you can't use the other machines which run full-tilt because they at least partially function. It is a vicious, inevitable circle. You want cheap reliable service but the company says that in order to keep it cheap they have to raise the price to cover the cost of machines that are never fixed after they consume your last worldly possessions.

I am sure that the school and CALECo will gleefully enter in their ledger-books the miniscule figures of profit, but that slight profit will surely offset the subsequent slight tuition increase and the price of washing receptacles to other schools and firms so that we alone are keeping inflation at a standstill in this part of the country.

An alternative would be to boycott the campus machines and use the downtown machines. Except for the inconvenience, the tactic should prevail because we would be hitting them where it hurts most — in the pockets.

Mud volleyball questioned

Dear Editor,

Juniata is a college of traditions. New trends sometimes alter and destroy old customs. We can all think of at least one example of current trend setting around campus, most of them positive and beneficial. The mud volleyball tournament held May 2 on the Sherwood lawn is sure to become a tradition of the future. It was welcomed with enthusiasm, tremendous support and success. I applaud the students involved in its organization. There was however one major oversight. I feel the administration used poor if not inconsiderate judgement in approving the location of the games. After the nets were dismantled and everyone returned home for a shower the residents of Sherwood were left with a quarter of an acre of stenching sloppy mire. Not only is this unsightly and repugnent but for the last 2½ weeks of school during the nicest weather of the year, Sherwoodians will be denied use of the lawn. Let us not forget the muddy trail left by scores of students trodding to the lavatories throughout the afternoon. Mud is encrusted everywhere. It will stay that way until Monday when our custodian, Tony Pollicino, returns. I am sure that he will be thrilled to death over the results of the games. Were the residents of Sherwood asked if they would mind the consequences of the tournament? Need I pose that question? Next time administration decisions are made so hastily as to such things as locations of mud volleyball games, please consider some of the alternatives. The lawn in front of Founders Hall would be suitable!

Women in Cloister

To The Editor:

This open letter is written to describe both the process and the rationale for the decision to assign women students to the Cloister Arch for the academic year 1980-81. Early in the Fall of 1979, residents of the Arch were warned by staff members that if there were serious problems with behavior that women students would be assigned to the Arch. This was followed by a concentrated effort among staff members to involve residents of the Arch in hall programming and to promote responsible behavior. Although problems with behavior

Summer is over. Enthusiasm of a few hundred puppets is waiting to be released. Cars are loaded with determination. Wheels roll, heads spin. Huntingdon buzzes, and Juniata College awaits. Watch out world: onto the stage charges the Juniata freshman.

Yes, the Juniata freshman. An amazing puppet, flexible enough that one may open his head and pour most anything in. Strong-willed enough to get an A in every course.

Finally his parents are gone. Now the puppet is free (visible strings vanished) to expand his mind and do as he pleases. He struts through every dormitory. How clean the floors! (He doesn't notice the muddy footprints he leaves.) Buying books is such fun! (Just charge it with your very own I.D. card.) And how nice to eat in his own dining hall! (Even if the spaghetti was faintly green.)

First day of classes and the sun is shining brightly. Our puppet dances back from classes on a cloud. Only three short hours of classes a day, and sometimes classes are cancelled! He knows that Modes and Writing Program will be rewarding challenges. How exciting to think that a course was designed just for him!

No need to worry about that first low grade: our puppet has a party to go to tonight, and two club meetings to attend tomorrow. That rain doesn't matter: his parents bought him an umbrella.

Students Speak

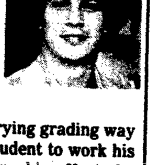
by Chris Corry
photographs by Tom Caldwell

This week's question was:

How do you feel about the new grading system that is being instituted next year?

I feel the new grading system will benefit the students who "almost" makes the better grade. If the academic quality of the student is to be shown clearly, the system must be mandatory.

Ann Cromer '80



The new grading system would be acceptable if I were a freshman starting next year. Since I am not, I think it is a rather insipid idea to change to a new grading system after I was just getting used to the old one. I think it's going to screw a lot of people up. I also believe the people who made the decision are a bunch of schmucks for not asking for any student input on the decision.

Jeff Keffer '81

I think that such a system is carrying grading way too far. It's hard enough for a C student to work his way to a "B" without discouraging his efforts by labeling his work "B-" and not giving him the credit he deserves. Also this would create more pressure than there already is on one student.

Jim Le Dane '83

I do not think the grading system should be changed. If it is changed it should at least be consistent among the professors. I am most disappointed about the fact that it may be changed without student input.

Jeff Rubin '80

He misses them for the first time.

Do well on your finals puppet, surely A's are still within reach. Don't mind the jerking of your strings, Thanksgiving is just around the corner. I know your roommate ruined your umbrella, but just write home for more money. Don't mind that bookbill, or the poor food. At least Modes and Writing Program will be over soon. Certainly you're still happy wallowing through the muck. Vacation is over. But now there's a new term to attack, complete with courses that the puppet picked himself! He's not worried about those three C's: the first term is always the hardest. But all this snow, and the courses seem harder than last term's! But he's not worried. Surely he can get a B in every course.

He begins to sleep in, and rarely cleans his room. His parents wonder why he doesn't write. He quits all his clubs, and bickers with his roommate. But he doesn't worry about school as much as he did fall term, and he parties more. He considers quitting. Not for the last time.

So where is our puppet's jauntiness? His strings seem to be old and worn. But he tells himself that he is only in a slump. And he is right: any toy played with becomes worn. He knows that a change of attitude is needed, and determines to do better next term. Finals are knocking at the door, and sometimes he listens.

How was vacation, puppet? "Short." But he is surprised to find that he received two B's and one C. The snow is gone, and a jog down Warm Springs Road is a good study break. He joins a club. Spring has arrived.

It seems that our puppet was restrung. The air is ripe for romance and outside activity. He practices both, but no longer lets his books get lost. He has come a long way, and knows it. He feels little pull on his strings, and knows that some day he may not need them. He forces his frizzled brain towards finals, almost enjoying the agony.

Finals are over now, and he sings his way back to bed. Our puppet must rest now, and prepare for the Sophomore Follies.

Finance Loss for Alfarata

by Lenora Golamis

The Alfarata Business Staff has been in the process, for the last two weeks of selling 1980 subscriptions. The staff has also added something new — one liners for one dollar. Students can have a sentence published to remind them of their years at Juniata. The student body has shown an amazing lack of response in both efforts of the college yearbook to make 1980 a successful year.

When 785 copies of the 1979 Alfaratas entered the Juniata market students responded mildly: after 220 were sent to seniors free, 435 were sold on campus with a few sent to various parents who had ordered them. One-hundred and thirty books remain unsold demonstrating a combination of poor planning and lack of appeal of the '79 Alfarata.

The staff now has the responsibility to overcome the mistakes of previous losses. The

Greusel Performance set for Tonight

Guitar Expert

Craig A. Greusel, a Juniata College music major and professional musician, will present his two-year recital in the Stone Church of the Brethren this Thursday evening, May 8.

The public is cordially invited to attend the recital, which begins at 8:15 p.m. There will be no charge for admission.

Greusel, a sophomore majoring in music performance, was recently contracted to entertain on a Greek cruise ship this summer, an achievement described by guitarist Ed McGuire as "reflecting Craig's talents, which are very impressive indeed."

McGuire — a distinguished musician who has performed with such stars as Stan Kenton, Tommy Newsom and Les Paul — is a part-time instructional assistant in music at Juniata and one of Greusel's instructors.

Proficient on a number of musical instruments, Greusel's specialties are guitar and banjo, and during his Thursday recital, he will perform on guitar and sing.

To be included on his Thursday program are a variety of guitar selections which will illustrate different styles of guitar music, including classical, native folk dances, Bach keyboard pieces transcribed for guitar, and Spanish-classical.

A special feature of the program will be Greusel's performance of a ballad he authored, chosen to illustrate the use of the guitar with vocals.

Also an accomplished vocalist, Greusel sings baritone with the Juniata Concert Choir and the J.C. Four, a student quartet. Additionally, he has been singing — professionally — for two years with Debra L. Hadden, a Juniata sophomore. The duo, known as "Craig and Debbie," frequently perform in the Huntingdon area.

Opening the recital will be a guitar quartet, which will perform selections by Bach. Its members, also students of McGuire, are: senior Spencer Steele, Tyrone; junior Jeffrey C. Turner, Altoona; and sophomores Mark J. Webster, Altoona, and Andrew B. Jones, Silver Spring, Md.

Also participating in the recital as soloists are Steele and David A Chianese, a junior from Johnstown. Margaret L. Donahue, a freshman flutist from Hershey, will accompany Greusel on a flute-guitar duet.

The Jive Bombers performed their unique style of music at the second anniversary coffeehouse of Laughing Bush Enterprises.

Laughing Bush Ent. Celebrates 2nd Year

by Heather MacCrindle and John George

Laughing Bush Enterprises held their second anniversary coffeehouse in Catharsis Lounge this past Friday night. Gracing the stage that night were two groups that epitomized the genre of their respective brands of music. The Jive Bombers, who made an earlier appearance this term, and Third Stream, a progressive jazz band, added an air of professionalism to the dank, drab environs of Catharsis. Although seating was purported to be scarce, Gary Lee Baker, a recent Juniata graduate, opened to a handful of patrons. After another belated start the evening was under way when Gary led off an exceptional evening of various musical styles that complemented one another.

His voice reminiscent of Graham Nash, Gary completed his set in a hushed, quiet manner. Gary, deliberate and careful in his picking on the acoustic guitar, played few popular, well-known songs. The well-liked songs that he played were both by Led Zeppelin. "Stairway to Heaven" was done expertly, but "Over The Hills And Far Away" was a bit cold and out of time. Masterfully done and not widely known with the audience were "Sea Gull" by Bad Company and "Carpet of the Sun" by Renaissance.

The Jive Bombers, comprised of Eddie Dewaine, Richard Sleigh and Jerry Zolten, then took to the stage armed with a plethora of blues/folk material. From what I have heard from them so far, they could play for hours on end without even thinking about their next song. Their background material is just phenomenal.

With the audience starting to come around to their unique brand of music, they went into such songs as "Hesitation Blues" and "You Ain't Going Nowhere" by Bob Dylan. "Cigarettes, Whiskey, and Wild, Wild Women" really opened the eyes and ears of the chatty, disrespectful crowd who were told once by the performers to tone down because they could not hear themselves play.

On Chuck Berry's "Monkee Business" and Louis Jordan's "Choo Choo for Boogie" the band was at their finest (which lasted their whole set). After a well-deserved encore, the trio returned to do a Hank Williams tune. "Hey Good Lookin' " was definitely not their style, but once again it came across perfectly.

Now Third Stream entered onstage and regular coffeehouse goers were treated to an excellent performance. If one likes jazz and "par excellence" jamming, then Laughing Bush's Coffeehouse is for the jazz aficionado.

Each musician was in his own right an accomplished performer. The woodwind player has won several awards, including "Jazz Performer of the Year." The band members formed cohesively as a group and played vigorously and intensely. Songs included the "Sanford and Son" theme, Eric Calus' "Lady", and the extremely difficult "Lone Ranger" theme from the "William Tell Overture".

The encore produced "Weathervane" by the Joe Farrel Group and one other progressive song. For this, the first appearance of a jazz group at Juniata, they were well-received and future engagements are welcome.

Nieto Speaks at Princeton

Dr. Jose Nieto, Juniata College professor of religion and chairman of the department, recently delivered two lectures at the Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N.J.

Dr. Nieto's two lectures were drawn from his extensive research for, and teaching of "Mysticism and Religious Experience," a course which he is currently teaching at Juniata. Some of this material was also used in part for his lectures at Bethany Theological Seminary in Chicago.

The first lecture, an afternoon address open to the public, was entitled "Mysticism Versus Religious Experience in Protestantism." The lecture was based on Dr. Nieto's recent research on the subject for a new book.

During his address, he explained the differences between mysticism and the religious experience in Protestantism, as well as world religions. He also presented his latest book, "Mystic Rebel Saint," which is a study of the Spanish sixteenth-century mystic St. John of the Cross. Dr. Nieto derived some pertinent material for his lecture from the book, and an open-discussion and question-and-answer period followed the talk.

Dr. Nieto's second lecture, which was presented that evening, was open only by invitation to graduate students and faculty members. His contribution to the colloquium was hinged around the methodological approach he used to research "Mystic Rebel Saint," which was published in Geneva 1979. All questions afterward referred to his book and the researching of it.

Dr. Nieto, who became a delegate this year to the North American and Caribbean Area Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, is a distinguished scholar who has published several books and numerous articles about the Reformation and Mysticism. He is serving the Alliance on a special theological committee.

Dr. Nieto credits his lectures at Princeton and his election to the Alliance to his extensive background in the Reformed tradition. He has been a member of the Juniata faculty since 1967 and holds a Th.M. degree and a Ph.D. degree from the Princeton Theological Seminary.

Breakfast Honors Women

Nancy R. Zinkham of Grove City, a senior majoring in mathematics and secondary education, was honored as "Juniata Woman of the Year" during the college's annual May Day Breakfast on May 1.

In all, 18 Juniata students were recognized on the basis of their cordiality and poise; personal competence and achievement in the arts, academics, sports and other fields; service to the college, community or both; and self-determination and responsibility.

The "Woman of the Year" was escorted by the "Juniata Man of the Year," Philip B. Jones, a senior liberal arts major from Metuchen, N.J. Members of the court included eight "Juniata Women," two from each class, and eight senior "Juniata Men."

Janet R. Lewis, assistant professor of philosophy and chairperson of the department, was the guest of honor. She also was the guest speaker.

Ms. Lewis, chairperson of the philosophy department since 1976, has been an advocate of women's studies at Juniata, developing and initiating the college's first tutorial course in that area.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1970, Ms. Lewis earned her B.A. degree (1964) from Wilson College and her M.A. degree in philosophy (1968) from Bryn Mawr College. Before coming to Juniata, she taught at Villanova University.

"Juniata Woman of the Year" is presented with her flowers from "Man of the Year" Philip Jones.

"Woman of the Year" Nancy Zinkham — an outstanding athlete and Dean's List student — is a 1980 Academic All-American basketball player. She also was named to the 1980 Division III All-American basketball team.

As a three-time captain of the women's basketball team, Ms. Zinkham has twice named to the All-Middle Atlantic Conference team, this year leading the Indians to a quarterfinal berth in AIAW Division III national championship play. A starter all four years, she holds 21 Indian single-game, season and career records.

Also a varsity volleyball player, Ms. Zinkham served as captain for each of the team's first three seasons, leading this year's edition to a fourth-place finish in the East.

Academically, Ms. Zinkham currently carries a 3.3 average (out of 4.0). She has been secretary of her class, a member of the Student Senate, an assistant in the public relations office, and a Homecoming Attendant. She also has been the recipient of two Juniata scholarships, the Alumni Annual Support Fund Scholarship and the Mr. and Mrs. P.M. Snider Scholarship.

Jones, also very active on the Juniata campus, is a member of the touring Concert Choir and the Student Senate. He seved as a disc jockey for WKVR, the college radio station, and as a feature columnist for the "Juniatian," the college newspaper.

Selected as "Juniata Women-1980" were Tina M. Eberly of Wyomissing Hills and Malinda C. Anderson of Indiana, seniors; Julie M. George of Pittsburgh and Sheri L. Matheson of Simsbury, Conn., juniors; Holly M. Dvorak of Camp Springs, Md., and Maura R. O'Conner of Mahwah, N.J., sophomores; and Nancy M. Roach of Johnstown and Paula S. Whetstone of Martinsburg, freshmen.

The other eight "Juniata Men" are Kenneth L. Anderson III of Newport; David E. Bender of Grantsville, Md.; Nathaniel E. Ehrlich of Wyomissing; Michael J. Baker of Forty-Fort; Joseph M. Orolin of Tyrone; Michael K. Stone of Stroudsburg; Mark D. Hyssong of Port Huron, Mich.; and Randy W. Cassell of Mechanicsburg.

The May Day Breakfast was attended by several hundred women — including students, faculty and staff members, wives of faculty and staff members, and numerous special guests.

A variety of student art is currently being exhibited at Shoemaker Galleries in Carnegie Hall.

The exhibit is being given to display the work of students involved in the visual arts in much the same way that play productions are presented to display the talents of those students involved in the performing arts.

The exhibit started on May 5 and will continue to May 17. It will include paintings, photos, ceramics, drawings and prints.

this year improved in the Arch, it was still below our college-wide standards. Residents, staff members and representatives from the Cloister Steering Committee recommended to Dean Tilden on April 1, 1980 that women be assigned to the Arch. It was their position that behavioral problems warranted this change and that it would also improve the quality of programming in Cloister.

The recommendation to make Cloister co-educational was taken to the Residential Life Committee and endorsed by them on April 15, 1980. After reporting on the decision to Student Government on April 16, 1980, the Residential Life Committee conducted a forum to review the issue. The forum was held on Sunday, April 20 in the Cloister Ranch and attended by between 30 and 40 students. The prevailing sentiment expressed by students at the forum was that women should not be assigned to the Arch.

The decision was reviewed at an April 21 meeting with the Residential Life Committee, student resident staff members and representatives of the Cloister Steering Committee. Relative advantages and disadvantages were discussed and evaluated. Based on the discussion at that meeting, the decision was confirmed by appropriate administrators.

Funds for Nuke Rally fair?

Dear Editor:

On April 26 a group of some 40 Juniata students and Andrew Murray traveled by bus to Washington, D.C. to "protest the use of nuclear weapons and energy." (Quoted from last week's Juniatian.) All that seems very respectable until one considers the list of campus organizations that gave money to pay for the trip: The Peace and Conflict Studies Committee, The Conservation Club, and Center Board.

That The Peace and Conflict Studies Committee should have donated is understandable, and The Conservation Club's contribution verges on being so, but I seriously question whether or not the role of Center Board includes the funding of programs with political overtones.

Center Board's mission, as laid down in the College Catalog, is to take on the "major responsibility for the planning, initiation and promotion of a broad cultural, educational, social and recreational program for the College community."

It might be argued that the protest was an educational experience, or that those who went were culturally enriched through their associations with other protesters, and I don't doubt that it was both a social and recreational experience. But the fact remains that the argument over whether or not we as a society should develop and use nuclear weapons and energy is an extremely sensitive one with a large number of people on both sides of the fence. Furthermore it is a political issue. And there are students on campus, myself included, who are offended by the fact that our funds have been used to support a movement with a political philosophy opposed to our own.

Exchange students encouraged

Dear editor,

I would just like to send my congratulations to those students who will be coming to Europe next year. It should be a very interesting year next year and I hope you enjoy it.

For me, the last 7 months have certainly been different. When you're told that the first 3 months are hard ones, believe it. It's not so much the language barrier as the fact that you have to adapt to a new way of life. (Imagine being yelled at for taking a shower everyday) Also for me not having any real friends was also very hard. The French and especially the Alsacians are a hard people to know. They come home and hide in their rooms. If you really want to know the "natives" you must be willing to make the effort and in some cases it's hard. There are many Americans here who are around just fellow Anglophiles. These are the ones going home as fast as they can. Those of us who have found friends here are leaving in June or July. After 7 months I find my longing to the U.S. again has decreased and if I was told I wasn't coming home for another year, I don't think I would mind. When I leave, I'll be leaving behind a boyfriend and many dear friends.

Just being over here has changed many of us. Talking to fellow Americans we've all realized that our views of life and of ourselves have changed. There are many unexpected things that have happened to us — many that I didn't expect. Although the problem doesn't arise as much when I speak, I find I'm having difficulties expressing myself in writing. I've started to take on the French structure of words and even speak more French than English. I will also have to learn to readapt to the U.S. It sounds crazy having to readjust to your native land but after having picked up French eating habits, etc. it will be hard.

Also just being here I've learned about who the Europeans are. Travelling around lets you see first hand how the people live. A few of us have been lucky enough to stay with German families. If he was wondering — I ate with the

by Chris Corry

Registration for the draft will begin this July, predicted the representative from the Central Committee on Conscientious Objection (C.C.C.O.) who spoke to students in Tussey Terrace lounge on Thursday, May 1. The informal meeting was open to any student interested in Conscientious Objection to war or the draft. Over 25 students attended the 8:00 meeting.

C.O.'s are people who feel that to kill people or help in a war effort at this point would violate their values or morals. Conscientious Objection is a legal way to avoid killing people during a war.

The C.O. option has been available since W.W. II and thousands have taken advantage of it. There are two types of C.O. status. Class 1-A-0 is for those who feel that they can participate in the military, only not in the actual killing. These C.O.'s work within the military as clerks, cooks, orderlies, or any number of other jobs. For those who can not morally participate within the military in any way, there is Class 1-0. Menial, low-paying civilian work is done by these people.

C.O. applicants are evaluated by their local draft board for sincerity and validity. The board, composed of selected volunteers, considers the claim on the basis of the form that the applicant has filled out, references, evidence of any past C.O. leanings, and perhaps an interview. The form used during the Viet-Nam war consisted of five essay type questions.

President Carter has requested that all men and women born in 1960 and 1961 be required to register for the draft. Registration simply involves filling out a card with certain information at the Post Office so that the name and address will be on record when and if a draft is instituted. The House of Representatives recently approved $13.3 million for draft registration. C.C.C.O. expects that 19 year olds will be required to register at the end of July and 18 year olds at the end of August. The present laws require only men to register but the American Civil Liberties Union is planning to take that to court as being unconstitutional.

Failure to register is a felony and punishable by five years in prison and/or $10,000.

Dr. Washburn, from Juniata's Geology Department, spoke at the meeting about his experiences with the draft in the 1960's. Washburn was granted C.O. Status.

If the draft does come, and many predict that it will, a war will probably follow close behind. In the history of the U.S. there has never been a registration without a subsequent draft and very rarely has there been a draft without a war. Anyone wishing to learn more about the draft or Conscientious Objection may write to: C.C.C.O., 2208 South Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 19146.

German exchange student from Piere's family one weekend. I've learned a lot about who and what the Germans, French, and Swiss are and having Grob and British and African friends I've learned about their countries, too.

I have no idea what you're expecting when you come to Europe next year but believe me it should be interesting. Just remember it's what you put into it that will determine if it was fun or not. Although it'll be nice to see home, family, and friends I am really sad to think that in 2½ months I'll be returning home to the land of gigantic cars and cakes with icing instead of cream on them. Bonn courage and Bonn onnee'.

Lab Fees

conceivably turn up in the chemistry department or may even be spent by the maintenance department.

Previously Juniata levied three different sets of special course fees, $10, $20 and $30, according to the predicted expense of the course. Several years ago, though, this policy was dropped as the confusion of the different fees created a "nightmare" for the accounting department, and the present one price policy was instituted.

How is it determined which courses will have a special course fee? Departments who feel a particular course incurs costs which exceed normal classroom expenses recommend the fee to the Executive Committee. If consent is granted by this group and also by the Registrar, the decision is finally reviewed by the Academic Dean. Throughout the procedure, factors such as the expenses of the course and also the number of students which are expected to take the course are also weighed in the decision.

Both the Business Manager and the Academic Dean feel that these fees do not always cover the extra costs of the courses to which they are applied. They noted, unfortunately, that there may be some inequality in the system which could require students to pay fees and not get their money's worth, though they feel that in all, special course fees do balance with the extra costs involved in those courses.

Asked if the special course fee now levied at $25 could be expected to remain at this rate in the future, Dean Hartman expressed considerable doubt. Rising costs of materials used in these courses have greatly deteriorated this overall balance and it is inevitable that the special course fee will soon be boosted.

Band Performs Classics

by Patty Rauschenberger

On Tuesday April 29, 1980 at 8:15 p.m. the Juniata Band performed in Oller Auditorium.

Under the direction of Ibrook Tower, the Band played a variety of music ranging from Johann Sebastian Bach's "Komm Susser Tod" to PDQ Bach's "Contrary Dances." Despite the small audience the band gave an excellent performance.

Soloist Kathy Kahler on the clarinet was outstanding. Other soloists, including Dean Roth on trumpet, Carl Umble on clarinet, John Farrugia and Stan Whitsel on percussion, represented some of the talent of Juniata's Band.

The evening was a relaxed one with Ibrook Tower explaining background information about each piece.

The second half of the program contained selections ranging from a Jazz-Blues piece, the "Jazz Suite," with an excellent alto sax solo by Susan Taliff, to what else but a marching song. "On to Victory March," from The Free Lance was no ordinary piece. John Philip Sousa's march consisted of five of his favorite marches all blended together making an impressive ending to the concert.

Short Cuts

by Mr. Wizard and Jesse Mae Laurie and the Sighs

It would be a waste of both time and ink to attempt a cut-by-cut review of this record. The only major disparity between any two songs on either side lies in the title alone. Without trying to be cruel, I can't believe that Atlantic Records, or any other reputable company, would distribute this stuff. With the petroleum shortage, one would think that they could be a bit more selective. Undoubtedly one of 1980's worst so far, Laurie and the Sighs shouldn't be permitted to disgrace the airwaves, or dirty anyone's stylus.

Frank Zappa —
I Don't Wanna Get Drafted

The title, and concept, of Mr. Zappa's latest single is nicely timed indeed. Although not representative of his finest productions, it is still rather good. One can only hope that the remainder of his upcoming album is as worthwhile as this '45.

over the past year but Tilden reported "the improvement has not been adequate," and the Arch needs some sort of help.

James Kiely, protesting with the group argued that "the students who caused the trouble are gone." He suggested that Cloister is a cohesive unit on a campus with little cohesion.

Tilden announced that the "decision is final!" There was nothing the students could do now to change the ruling made by the Residential Life Committee, the Student Government, and the Administration.

Frustrated by this, the group blamed the Student Government for misrepresenting the common attitude of the students and also that the administration did not communicate with the students on matters that directly concerned them. Tilden rebutted with: "Communication is a two way street." Linetty reminded the demonstrators that they had a voice through the Student Government which the students themselves elect. Tilden added that it was "not our fault about student representation."

A suggestion tossed in to possibly change matters was to conduct an all campus vote to "see what the students really think," one rallier said. Tilden, firm on his position, stated "It's too late."

Dissatisfied with the proceding moments, all hope of one student was thrown toward the alumni. All we can do now is to "contact the alumni by phone. Hit the administration in the pocket." But the decision was, and still is final.

Rick Mayher had reported earlier that some of the protesters knew that the decision was irreversible but showed up anyway." The under-lying purpose of the demonstration was according to demonstrators, to "show the administration that students care about their decisions and want a voice. The decision on the Arch was made; they only hope that in future matters the students will have more of a voice."

brought in. Quinlan questioned this decision at that time, and was told that schools in this "type of rural area" near a "non-large city atmosphere" usually don't experience a lot of vandalism. "In my opinion," says Quinlan, "these devices should have been on from the start."

The company installed the security devices, which are the large metal boxes over the coin slots including the huge padlock, during the week of April 21-25. This device protects the coin slots and wiring to prevent tampering. At this time they then inquired if they could raise the cost. The increased cost was mutually agreed upon by the college and the company, and says Mr. Alexander, "I believe it was warranted."

Alexander quotes increased cost in utilities, the overwhelming amount of damage to the machines, and the installation of these $100 a piece security devices as reasons for the price increase. This is the first price increase the company has asked for in their two years at the college.

The reliability of the company was another point criticized. The Residential Life Committee of Student Government has been bringing to Mr. Quinlan's attention the length of time it takes for a machine to be repaired, hindering all students in any particular dorm. Quinlan responds that the company has told him that it is not the damage itself, but the type of damage involved that takes so long for repair. A 6-8 week delay can be expected in ordering many parts. Alexander believes that the installation of the new security devices and increased price will add incentive to the company to keep the machines running.

Recent reports to both Quinlan and Alexander have indicated that the damage "has become a serious problem this year — worse than last year." The company has described the type of damage done to their machines as "worse here than in the laundromats in the ghettoes of South Philly."

"Over 90% of the damage is not caused by "normal wear and tear," states Alexander. Coin boxes have been broken into, doors and tops removed, knobs broken, and in Cloister one machine has been "totaled; wrecked beyond repair."

Alexander sees the installation of the security devices as an attempt to try to give the whole campus laundry service. "If this doesn't work," he says, "and isolated problems of vandalism continue to exist in specific dorms, the possibility will be seriously considered to remove the laundry equipment from that dorm."

May was named after Maia, the Roman goddess of earth and growth, since May is the time when things begin to grow. May's birthstone is the emerald and its flower is the lily of the valley. In the United States, May holidays this year include May 11, Mother's Day; May 17, Armed Forces Day and May 26, Memorial Day. In Canada, May 19 is Victoria Day.

Warm weather and sunshine follow sea worthy students down the Juniata River in this year's annual Raft Regatta.

Rafts Rewarded

by Bob Kemper

"This is authorized insanity," screamed one crew member as his raft bucked along the shallower waters of the Juniata River. "But it's a helluva time," were his final words to the waving crowd on the bridge as they watched him jump into the water along side his mates in an attempt to salvage their vessel. The 1980 Juniata College Raft Regatta had begun.

Fifty-five rafts of every possible design, construction, and theme, manned by 456 lovers of good old H_2O entered the water at Laney's Feed Mill beginning at 1:00 p.m. Saturday afternoon to begin their exodus to the Mill Creek Bridge, five-and-one-half miles away.

According to Raft Regatta chairman John Schneider, the main purpose of most of the rafts entered seemed to be to have a good time; competition seemed to rank second.

Although competition seemed to be of little concern to the majority of the boats, the Raft Regatta was not without its champions.

First place was awarded to raft No. 29, captained by Stan Whitsel; it accumulated 720 out of a possible 800 points. Second place was a tie between raft No. 14, which was led by Brian Thomas with 635 points and raft No. 4, manned by Dwight Lancaster. Raft No. 17 captured 275 points and third place under the command of Debbie Hadden. Fourth place, also a tie, went to crafts piloted by Bob Weld and John DeHass.

Boats entered in the competition were evaluated by six judges in four separate categories: construction, theme, time, and trash collection.

High waters at the finish line made docking the rafts near impossible for several crews, who were forced to continue down the river singing such favorites as Harry chapin's "Dance Band on the Titanic" until people from town could reach them in motor boats.

All of the rafts entered finished the race and only three minor injuries occured.

Enrollment Won't Drop, Recent Study Shows

The long anticipated decline in college and university enrollments may not be coming after all, says the American Council on Education (ACE).

The decline in the number of traditional college-age (18-24) people has produced predictions that college enrollment will drop by as much as 25% in the 1980's. But according to a recent ACE study, the decline could be much smaller than that, or college enrollments could level off or even increase as much as 3.5%.

The key, says ACE, is focusing on 12 enrollment strategies, which it projects could produce a net gain of 301,000 fulltime equivalent students by 1990, a 3.5% increase over 1980. The ACE study, prepared for the Interassociational Council on Policy Analysis and Research (ICPAR), is the first effort to determine how many more students could be produced by successful use of the strategies.

The strategies include increased enrollment of: men ages 35-64, women ages 20-34, lower income youth, minorities, employed people currently receiving education in industry and foreign students. They also call for an improvement in the retention rate of current students, an increase in high school graduation rates and in equivalency test certification for high school dropouts.

"The study shows that we have been far more pessimistic about the outlook for student enrollments than is justified," ACE President J.W. Peltason says. "It is clear that the decline in the so-called traditional college-age population group is not the only fact determining the prospects for American higher education enrollments in the 1980's."

The full ACE study will be published in June.

Carter Plans to Cut Aid to Students

If interest rates remain high, the Carter administration's plan to save money by reducing direct student loans and increasing guaranteed student loans could actually cost the government more money, Education Secretary Shirley Hufstedler admitted in a recent Congressional hearing.

President Carter's revised education budget lowers the fiscal 1980 National Direct Student Loan appropriation by $108 million to $178 million. The budget assumes needy students unable to get NDSL loans at 3% interest will receive help through the Guaranteed Student Loan program. GSL money comes from private lenders, but the government guarantees repayment and subsidizes the interest rate to keep it at 7%.

Rising interest rates have pushed the federal subsidy on GSL loans up to an unprecedented 17.7%, and if interest rates remain at that level, the increase in GLS costs will wipe out any savings from the NDSL cut.

Education Department official don't expect the high rates t continue although they admit GS costs will increase 40% this fisca year and 52% in fiscal 1981.

College officials and studen groups are vigorously opposing th NDSL cuts, saying they will force needy students to take out the more expensive GSL loans, which will in turn increase the burden o taxpayers.

price increase from $6.50 to $10.00 is an attempt to meet the budget. Business majors all over campus understand the difference between deficits and profits.

A deficit is a loss which needs to be overcome by some means. The government's deficit is made up in the form of borrowing from its citizens through the sale of bonds. The Alfarata luckily has the Student Government Association to bail it out when the staff suffers a deficit. Two years ago it was $2,000 and now the 1979 yearbook sale's approximate loss is $1,000. Each year SGA allocates funds for The Alfarata but by dishing out extra for the deficits SGA is taking away funds that could be used for other purposes.

By giving the class of 1979 yearbooks the staff suffered $1,430 in lost revenue which would have covered the deficit and given SGA the profits to use elsewhere. To eliminate the deficit and make the Alfarata more self-sufficient a proposal has been made to charge seniors. A strong objection arose: signs publicizing subscription sales mysteriously disappeared. As a result the decision to charge seniors is being reconsidered if the staff can sell 300 subscriptions by the end of this week.

Attraction Update

by John T. Concilus

Updates For Last Week's Listings

The Spyro Gyro concert slated for May 14 at the Academy of Music (Phila.) has been cancelled. The Tower has added two new shows: Willie Nile on May 16 & 17, and Johnathan Richmond for May 21. Mancini's in Pittsburgh has confirmed a 10:00 Bobby Bear appearance for the evening of May 27. Also of interest are rumors that Heart, Genesis, and John Denver will be in the Philadelphia area come summer.

The State College area night-spots, too numerous to list here, offer a good deal more than the average Huntingdon bar. Some of my favorites include: Highway Pizza (several bluegrass acts every Wed. night), Phyrst's (bluegrass every Fri. night), the Allen Room (easy-listening Mon.-Sat.), Jawbone's (free under 21 coffeehouses Fri. and Sat. evenings), and Gatsby's (Nickelodeon Night every Wed. — find out for yourself just what this entails). Watch for a Grateful Dead concert review in next week's issue of the Juniatian.

Award Established

The Huntingdon Branch of the American Association of University Women (AAUW) has established an annual award fund at Juniata College.

In announcing the gift, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder said that the award — officially titled the "Huntingdon Branch AAUW Award" — will be presented during Juniata's annual Awards Convocation each spring.

"We are most grateful to the Huntingdon Branch of the AAUW," Dr. Binder commented, added that "support of this nature, intended for deserving students, is most important, for it reinforces the values associated with academic achievement and all-around character development."

Martha Bowman, president of the Huntingdon Branch-AAUW, explained that the award will be presented to a graduating woman from the Huntingdon area who shows academic merit and who has been accepted to an accredited graduate school.

"In today's era of constantly rising costs, the Huntingdon Branch-AAUW decided that a viable contribution to higher education would be the establishment of an award that would help to offset the costs of graduate school for a qualified Juniata woman who is a native of the Huntingdon area," Mrs. Bowman remarked.

The first Huntingdon-Branch AAUW Award will be presented during Juniata's Awards Convocation on Wednesday, May 7. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Students to see SAT answers, scoring key

Students will be able to review their Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) answers and verify their scores under a program announced recently by the College Board.

For a fee that probably won't exceed $4, the College Board will send test takers their answer sheets, a scoring key and information on how the final score is tabulated. Correct answers to test questions won't be provided, however.

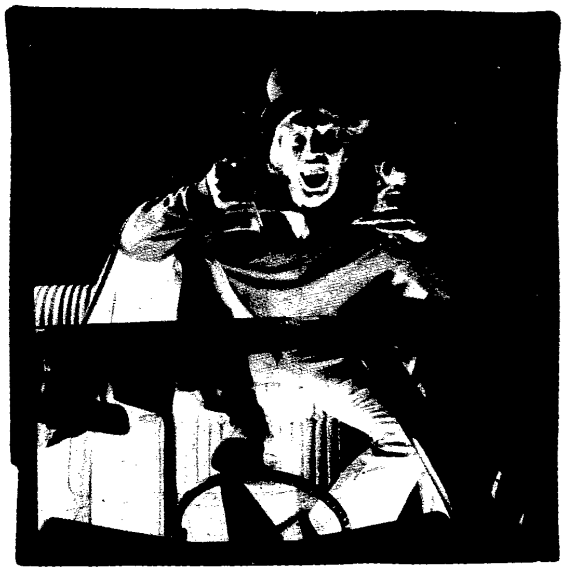
There are different kinds of experiments.



Every growing person has to experiment with many things to chart out their own lives. All experiments involve risk. In a sense, all active living is a risk. But some experiments are more responsible than others.

Some kinds of drinking, for example, are so potentially harmful to you and your friends that learning by experimenting would be senseless.

Like driving when you're not sure of how high you are. That's the last experiment for many. More young people die in drunk driving accidents than in any other way.

Another experiment that can be very nasty is using your body for a test tube for combining alcohol with other drugs.

Growing means experimenting. It also means learning to choose which experiments will help you get to where you want to be.

Jim McDaniel hits for two in the Roundball Classic championship game.

Shotguns Capture Classic

by Steve Bowers

The first annual J.C. Roundball Classic completed it's championship rounds last Wednesday with the "Shotguns" walking away with the title. "T" finished second in the 16 team tourney and the "R.F.'s" placed third.

The five week basketball tournament followed a double-elimination fomat which resulted in the above three teams qualifying for the championship rounds. Monday night, the "R.F.'s" (Andy Witmer, Paul Miller, Andy Berdy, Mike "the skywalker" Wilsey, and Tim Wood), played "T" (Tom Deep, Eric Biddle, Ed Yablonski, Tom McVay, Lee Hudzicki). Each team had one loss and the winner earned the right to play the "Shotguns" (no losses) in the finals. "T" won the contest but needed all 3 games to claim victory. Tuesday night "T" faced the "Shotguns" (Kerry Walsh, Jim McDaniel, Bill Henry, Jeff Snodgrass, Bill Wagoner). Since the "Shotguns" were undefeated "T" needed to beat the "Shotguns" in two consecutive rounds to win the crown. "T" defeated the "Shotguns" and the tourney moved to Wednesday night for the final round. That night, the "Shotguns" won the first game 12-9. "T" came back strong in the second game winning 12-8. In the final game of the evening, the "Shotguns" slipped past "T" 10-8 to win the championship.

Lacrosse Ties

by Marj Porter

Juniata's Women's Lacrosse Club finished its first season with an undefeated record. On Thursday, May 1st the club tied Wilson College with a score of seven to seven. Lauren DeHaven had five goals for Juniata and Connie Kilroy had two. Also helping out on offense was Amy Gruen, Beth Reuther, Kathy Murphy, Sue Hoadley and Amy Bolt.

Juniata's defense once again did a superb job. Deb Smith played another terrific game as goalie. Other defensive players included Suzi Brown, Cherise Kent, Nina Siebens and Amy Bolt.

Although the 1980 season for the Women's Lacrosse Club was short, it can still be counted as a success. The club is not only undefeated it has also set the stage for future seasons of Women's Lacrosse at Juniata. The success and organization of this club could not have been accomplished without the help and support from Bill Berrier and the Athletic Department, encouragement from friends and other interested people on campus, and the unending determination and enthusiasm of every member of the team.

Tribe Captures First Title

by Scott A. Lehigh

This past weekend the tribe swept a twinbill from Elizabethtown, 7-4, 6-4, thus capturing their first-ever Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest Section Crown. The first game was tossed by Senior Chris Lyons, going the distance he allowed four runs on eight hits, giving him a perfect record of 4-0 for the season. The offensive power was provided by senior Dave Bender, going three-for-four, Lyons and Jeff Ellena both two-for-three, and sophomore Don Stubbs who banged a crucial triple which scored two runs.

The second game found Bob McDonald on the mound for the tribe. He allowed four runs on seven hits and whiffed five batters. This win raised his record to 3-4. At the plate Senior Gwyn Woodward was two-for-four and again the heroics were by way of a Stubbs triple, scoring three runs.

Juniata's record now stands at 14-10 with a strong 7-1 showing in conference battle. The tribe is lead by Senior shortstop Gwyn Woodward hitting .389 with a .700 slugging percentage. The team will travel to Elizabethtown on Saturday to meet Northeast Section Champion Upsala. Good luck to all team members and coach Berrier!!!

Every fan knows that baseball just isn't the same without over-boiled hotdogs and watered down Schlitzes. The same goes for standing in the gallery of a golf tournament without first stopping in the club for a few cold ones. Langdon field doesn't have a concession stand, and the golf team doesn't have a gallery, let alone a club. What they do have though is champions.

After a fall and winter of watching the girls lead the way, Juniata's male athletes have finally started to get on the stick. In one week the Indians have claimed two M.A.C. championships, one in golf, and one in baseball.

On Monday, April 28, Steve "Grogan" Stroup captured a first place finish in the M.A.C. golf championships held at Hidden Springs Country Club in Horsham P.A. Posting an impressive 77 in the final round, Grogan beat out 104 other golfers for the individual title.

Despite terrible weather, the hard driving Junior managed a 42 on the front nine, and an amazing 35, even par on the back to lead the team to an eighth place finish in the field of 21.

The baseball team's double-header sweep of Elizabethtown on Saturday locked up the M.A.C. title. This is one of the most impressive sports accomplishments in the three years I have been here.

For most fans baseball is the sport in spring, and I think everyone can appreciate the impact of a championship mens team in a school that has had to rely on their women to bring home the bacon all year.

Just some of the people who had a good time at the 1st Annual Mud Volleyball Tournament.

Fun in the Mud

by Doug "Cornbread" Wallace

Last Friday the First Annual Mud Volleyball Tournament was held at Juniata College. The tourney, a project organized as part of a Small Group Decision Making Class, was an overwhelming success.

The lawn in front of Sherwood Dorm was chosen as the site for the tournament. The ground was dug up and saturated with three hoses on the day of the event. Then at 2:30 P.M. the spectacle began.

To get into the tournament participants had to register a co-ed team of eight. A total of 28 teams, including a group of professors, fought for the championship. It was a single elimination tournament (1 loss) with the games being played to 21, later the games had to be shortened to 11 due to the impending darkness. After five hours of grueling competition the Mud Marauders emerged as the champions. They received T-shirts as a result of their well-earned victory.

Participants and organizers both expressed interest in making the tourney an annual event. Everyone who played as well as those who watched felt it was one of the best all campus events of the year and hoped that it would become a tradition much like the Raft Regatta.

The Indian track team ended their season by competing in the M.A.C. Championships held at Ursinas College last Friday and Saturday. The team finished 14th out of 17 teams.

Senior Ed Mozer placed fourth in the shot with a personal best of 46-6, which is also only five inches shy of the school record. Senior Eric Bollinger took a fifth in the discus with a throw of 130-8. Congratulations to the track team and Coach Rogisch for a fine year.

The M.A.C. Championships for tennis were held this past week at Swarthmore College. The only singles entry for the Indians was junior Don Rice, and he was defeated in the first round of play.

The Juniata netters also had a doubles tandom of senior Mark Atwell and junior Steve Moser in the competition. They survived the first round by defeating their opponents, 6-4, 3-6, 6-2, but were silenced in the second round by a, 6-1, 6-3 score.

The last match of the season for Coach Post's men will be against Penn State-Altoona.

The Juniata linksmen completed their season by competing in the M.A.C. Championships held at the Hidden Springs Country Club in Horsham, Pa., last Monday. Steve Stroup was co-medalist of the Championship with a score of 77. Stroup, a junior and captain of the team, is the first golfer in Juniata history to win a M.A.C. Championship. Stroup's victory puts him in a position to gain an invitation to the NCAA Division 3 Championships.

Other scores for the Indians included a 98 for Johnny Hyman, a 91 for Bill West, and an 88 for freshman Jim LeDane.

1980-81 Academic Calendar Questioned

by Heather MacCrindle

The Student Concerns Committee is now in the process of discussing proposed changes to the 1980-81 Academic Calendar with President Binder, Dean Hartman, Arnie Tilden, Tom Nolan, and Bill Alexander.

The calendar which was finalized in February came to the attention of Ruth Ellen Klinger, dorm senator, about two weeks before Easter break, who brought up her concern at a Student Government meeting.

According to this calendar, third term finals are scheduled to last past Memorial Day, slating Commencement for May 31. This offers serious problems to all students hoping to enter the job market — chances of which at that late date would be minimal.

The Student Concerns Committee, headed by Julie George, distributed surveys at the end of April to all students informing them of this late ending academic year and offering their proposed alternatives.

Over half of the 200 students that responded preferred to have a shortened Easter break lasting only Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. This would push Commencement up at least a week to May 24. Those remaining voted for keeping the calendar as is or shortening other breaks. Julie George took these results to Arnie Tilden, showing him the number of students opposed to such a calendar.

Dean Hartman, when made aware of the student survey, stated that the making of the calendar was a "mechanical process." About every 6 years, just because of how the Julian calendar is set up regarding Leap Year, Commencement usually falls after Memorial Day.

He is "not at all opposed to trying to accommodate everyone," but will not be sympathetic to a "convenience vote" by the student body. If the costs of changing the calendar prove less than the costs in keeping it, he is in favor of changing it for "better educational reasons only."

Looking at the calendar right now, Dean Hartman also sees it as "perhaps not irreversible", but adds that changes would have to be made in the spring term schedule.

New Senators Meet

by Chris Corry

New members for the four Student Government committees were selected at the meeting held on Wednesday, May 7, the first meeting with recently elected dorm senators.

Don DeArmitt will chair the Budget and Management committee, assisted by Kelly Walasik, William Hallman, and Connie Warden. The budget for next year is 34,000 dollars before aid to WKVR, Kvasir, Alfarata and the Juniatian, and 15,800 dollars after these deductions. This committee is in charge of approving all budget requests, setting up the budget, reviewing club charters, and handling the Student Government refrigerators.

"Mainly what we will do (in this committee) is work with hall associations" explained Jim LeDane, chair of the Residential Life committee. "We do a lot of Juniata College's annual Awards Convocation was held on May 7 in Oller Hall. Following a speech by Dr. Kenneth Rockwell, the 1979-80 Beachley Distinguished Professor, awards were presented to juniors and seniors outstanding in academic and athletic pursuits.

American Diplomat to Speak at Graduation

Hermann F. Eilts, former U.S. Ambassador to Egypt (1973-79) and to Saudi Arabia (1965-70), will be the featured speaker during Juniata College's 101st commencement program on Sunday, May 25.

In making the announcement, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder also noted that the College will present Dr. Eilts with an honorary doctor of humane letters degree, in part recognizing "his significant contributions to American foreign policy in the Middle East."

The commencement ceremonies, scheduled for 2 p.m. on Oller Hall Lawn, will mark the conclusion of Juniata's 104th academic year. During the program, some 250 graduating seniors will hear Dr. Eilts deliver his address.

Currently the University Professor of International Relations and Research Professor of History and Political Science at Boston University, Dr. Eilts has a long and distinguished career in American foreign service.

An American diplomat for 32 years, Dr. Eilts began his career at the American Embassy in Iran, later serving at the U.S. embassies in Iraq, Lybia and Saudi Arabia.

As America's most recent past-Ambassador to Egypt, Dr. Eilts was instrumental in opening relations between Israel and Egypt and in negotiating the current peace in the Middle East.

In a March feature story, "A Mideast Peacemaker Remembers," the Philadelphia "Inquirer" commented: "It is safe to say that no American knows (Egyptian President Anwar) Sadat better than (Dr. Eilts)."

Among his many other honors is the Department of State's 1979 Distinguished Honor Award, the 1979 Joseph C. Wilson Award and the 1953 Arthur S. Flemming Award for distinguished government service.

Juniata Students Awarded

by Cathy Creswell

Academic and athletic recognition was given to outstanding Juniata students on May 7 at the Spring Awards Convocation held in Oller Hall.

The faculty along with seniors, dressed in caps and gowns, were present. President Binder in his introduction stressed that this was the most important convocation given on campus each year.

Dr. Rockwell, the 1979 Beachley Distinguished Professor at Juniata, gave the address. Rockwell made his address into a personal statement from his life here at Juniata which he has been involved with practically all his life.

Rockwell stated that he was concerned that in recent years process has replaced principle. A college education should not be like a conveyor belt but rather a time for individuals to grow.

Rockwell felt that part of the faculty's job is to stimulate student commitment. And he praised the outward signs of growth and independence displayed by the seniors.

After Rockwell's address academic and athletic awards were given out by Dr. Hartman, Dean of Academic Affairs, and William Berrier, Athletic Director.

VANDALISM

by Lucy Haggerstaller

Juniata is a quiet place, surrounded by the country, secure beside a peaceful little town. Here it's safe to leave doors unlocked 'cause no one's going to steal, you can kick off your shoes without worrying about glass. Right? Wrong. As residents of Kline can verify, even Juniata is not immune to crime or broken glass.

Early Sunday morning, two weekends ago, Juniata's quietness was shattered as were two large glass windows and a desk. The damage was reportedly done by some outsiders whose over zealous consumption at an East House social event did nothing to inhibit their destructive tendencies. Besides the demise of the mentioned, two fire extinguishers were emptied and three calculators and an amount of currency were stolen. The damage has been estimated at about $500.

The suspected villans, a trio of "bikers" from Harrisburg, were confronted at the scene by Juniata security guards and Huntingdon Borough Police. They were "afforded the opportunity to depart Juniata and Huntingdon," being advised that "their presence was not desired." When two of the bikers chose to remain in spite of repeated advice to do otherwise, they were apprehended for "defiant trespassing," transported to Borough headquarters and also booked for "disorderly conduct" and "resisting apprehension." The individuals were later released but are subject to a hearing before the District Magistrate.

Editorial:

Better Luck Next Year!

And so another class has paid its dues and will be released to society officially on May 25. It is hoped that they have received their $20,000 worth of educational experience but if not, too bad. It is out into the cruel, cruel world they go. They are no longer Juniata's problem. But the classes of 1981, '82, '83, and the naive, ignorant class of '84 soon to be arriving are. Or is it the other way around; Juniata is the problem of those who remain and are soon to be coming. What lies in waiting for Juniata students for the '80-'81 year?

Next year's students can look forward to seeing pluses and minuses on their little computer print-out for grades — maybe! And what does the ghost of Cloister Arch past have in store for those daring young women who have chosen to live in and save that den of iniquity? The fate of the term system also lies in student hands, unless no one bothers to ask them. And will there be spring break, and if so will there be summer jobs available after Memorial Day? And what about All Class Night, Mountain Day, Storming of the Arch; in other words, will there be any such thing as Juniata tradition?

The list of fates for those attending this establishment of higher education can go on and on. But there is one thing Juniata can have next year that it seemed to lack so severely this year — actual student input in the decision making process — if anyone is interested, that is. Two things are necessary, adequate representation and sufficient means of obtaining information. The Juniatian is dedicating itself to the cause of informing students. As a major source of communication on the campus the Juniatian intends to work with committees and organizations in informing students of times, places, and dates of meetings along with issues being dealt with. It is hoped that this will enable and encourage students to express their opinions and concerns. But all the media can do is inform. It is up to returning and incoming students to act. It is time students quit simply being pushed through the system. It is time the system begins working for the students!

Letters to the Editor

Senior Reflections

Dear Editor,

After 4 years of almost total anonymity, I have decided to break my vows of silence and speak out, not on any one issue, but just about my experiences here.

I haven't even graduated yet and already people are asking me for money. They tell me we've got to build a new gym, or, you have to give so we can have one of the highest ratings of alumni giving money to their alma mater. Well, shove it. I almost had to pawn off my parents just to get through this school and I don't have any extra cash for some gym I won't even see and whose construction will clutter up the middle of campus. What do you people want, my beer money?

There is now discussion on what should be the senior class gift. I vote for none. My reasoning is simple: why? People say tradition. To hell with tradition. If they can put females in the arch and try to do away with All Class Night we don't have to give a gift. Others say we owe it to our school; we don't owe anything to anybody but ourselves. Juniata is just like any other college. What makes it different is the people. My friends, acquaintances and enemies make up the Juniata experience, they are why I came back term after term. After I leave I'm not gonna miss the dorms or the gym, I'll miss the people. That's why I feel we shouldn't give a gift, instead let's use the money on ourselves, and have one BIG BASH! After all we owe it to ourselves.

Speaking of money, I would like to say that I am upset that Center Board helped finance the trip to the anti-nuke rally. If I knew they gave money for trips, my friends and I would have called our trip to Florida an educational experience and asked for funding.

I would now like to dwell on Juniata's largest student activity; complaining. From Food Service to maintenance, you name it and someone will cry over it. Problem is, when push comes to shove it's all hot air, because nobody does anything. I know of one person from the time he wakes up till he goes to bed who does nothing but complain about this school. You'd think he'd do us all a favor and transfer, but he won't. He's like everyone else, all talk.

Two of the biggest topics of complaint are student apathy and student's rights. The former is a fact, the latter non-existent. I'm probably as apathetic as anyone, in fact I wanted to start an apathy club, but I didn't care enough to do it. Let's face it, there's nothing to get excited about, no war, nobody cares about pollution, and Iran is beginning to get boring. Instead you expect me to get upset over moving girls into the arch. Be serious.

What does get me upset is when the administration tries to do something and people start saying our rights as students are being violated. We don't have rights, only privileges which can be revoked at any time. You had the right to choose what college you attend, but as soon as you enter you play by their rules. People ought to stop looking for confrontation and get into cooperation. I'm not saying you should be passive, just realistic.

At this time I would like to extend my deepest sympathy to Jack Linetty, Housing Director. It seems that when something goes wrong students always blame Jack. You know it's probably his fault that the rescue mission in Iran failed. Last year's fiasco with the cable company is a perfect example. First people said their rights were violated and second it was Jack's fault. Well folks, you signed the agreement and Jack couldn't do anything. Why can't you just face it, we, I was one, got caught doing something illegal. All I know is that in 4 years Jack has always been straight with my friends and me.

Well folks, this has been the ramblings of a cynical 22 year old whose tolerance for ignorance is at an all time low. I've only till May 25th to come up with that last great act of defiance, maybe I won't wear any clothes under my gown at graduation, or maybe I'll blow up Sherwood, or . . .

Thank you,
Thomas Drzewiecke

Decisions Criticized

Dear Editor,

I've decided to express my opinion about decision making. First I'll cover this institution's philosophy about decisions, and then I'll use recent behavior on the administration's part as a measure of their belief in this philosophy.

Being a liberal arts school,

"April is the cruellest month," said T.S. Eliot. Eliot was too kind, he should have expanded his thoughts to include other months. April could not be cruel without windy March, whose twentieth day shrieks like a sickening baby bird that it wants to fly to greater heights. The brown-tipped leaves of March's stubby flower, the jonquil, resemble the earthworm the mother crams into the baby's mouth. Even the month's name commands the world to march to its whimsy — either bikini-clad or umbrella-burdened.

But Eliot's hateful month is certainly a worthy adversary, particularly when All Fool's Day and the so-called "good" Friday curse each other on the same date, or when Easter falls on the sixth day of the month, which marks the courageous entrance of the United States into World War I in 1917. Of course Lincoln's assassination casts another vote for Eliot's month, as do the ridiculous name and aimless climbing of April's flower — the sweet pea.

May is a strong write-in vote with its wayward name refusing to commit itself to a single issue. It isn't satisfied with just one Memorial Day, it selfishly shifts between a "regular" and a "traditional" one — both of which occasionally insist on being called Decoration Day just to be ornery. May's pantywaisted lilies-of-the-valley indecisively flaunt themselves in either white or crayon-blue and trumpet proudly around tombstone wreaths on one of the Memorial Days.

And June is certainly on the ballot with its underhanded tactics. It thrusts the rose upon expectant noses as it pierces vulnerable lips with its thorns. It resorts to a single letter of the alphabet to remind us of the heroic D-day invasion of 1944, then asks us to worship the flag one day and our fathers the next. And in its middle June sinks to stealing May's indecisiveness by suddenly switching from spring to summer, sometimes even denying the change.

Perhaps Eliot's statement should be rephrased: "spring is the most bureaucratic season."

Dr. Crosby Honored

A retiring Juniata College faculty member — Dr. Kenneth W. Crosby, chairman of the history department — was honored last evening (May 9) during the college's annual Faculty-Trustee Dinner.

The dinner moderated by Juniata President Frederick M. Binder is a traditional highlight of the Board's annual Spring meeting, which concluded May 10 on the Juniata campus.

During the dinner, special recognition was afforded Dr. Crosby, the college's W. Newton and Hazel A. Long Professor of History. A Juniata faculty member for 32 years, Dr. Crosby will retire at the end of the current academic year.

Dr. Philbrook Smith, professor of history, introduced Dr. Crosby and presented him with a framed painting of 101-year-old Founders Hall, Juniata's first building on the present campus.

Recently renovated in a comprehensive $385,000 project, Founders is of special significance to many Juniatians. It is currently used to house administrative offices, including those of the president.

In introducing Dr. Crosby, Dr. Smith said: "Dr. Crosby is, above all, a man who believes sincerely in Juniata College and its values, which so closely mirror his own. He not only believes in a liberal Christian tradition, but more than any other man I know, he lives it. He and men and women like him made Juniata College a very special institution."

After responding to Dr. Smith's comments, Dr. Crosby was presented a stained glass Juniata shield by President Binder, who described him as "a first-rate educator who is deeply and justifiably admired and respected by generations of students and faculty members."

The shield, like the painting, is of special significance. Manufactured by Pike Stained Glass Studios in Rochester, N.Y., the shield contains Juniata's seal and is trimmed in blue and gold, the college colors. It is only presented to retiring members of the Juniata community and to select guests of honor.

In attendance at last evening's (May 9) dinner were six previous recipients of the shield, all of whom enjoy emeritus-emerita status: Dr. Harold B. Brumbaugh, vice president for college relations; Dr. Esther M. Doyle, Charles A. Dana Supported Professor of English; Dr. Calvert N. Ellis, president; Dr. Eva R. Hartzler, Charles A. Dana Professor of Chemistry; Jack E. Oller, professor of French and director of the foreign language laboratory; and Dr. Donald M. Rockwell, professor of chemistry.

Three other area residents — Donald S. Johnson, professor of music; Grace Madeira Shuler, catalog librarian; and Paul R. Yoder, professor of physics — also enjoy emeritus-emerita status and are past recipients of the shield, but they were unable to attend the dinner.

Dr. Crosby, the most recent recipient of the shield, has been a Juniata faculty member since 1948, chairing the history department since 1953.

A native of Ohio, he received an A.B. degree from the Cincinnati Bible Seminary in 1937 and a B.S. degree from Wilmington (Ohio) College in 1939. He received an A.M. degree from Haverford College in 1940 and began further graduate study — as a Teaching Fellow — at George Washington University the same year.

His study at George Washington was interrupted by World War II, during which he served as a Capt. Chaplain in the U.S. Army Air Force. Following the war, he returned to George Washington, where he continued to serve as a Teaching Fellow and from which he received his Ph.D. in 1949.

In recognition of his ability as an educator, Dr. Crosby received the first Beachley Distinguished Professor Award (1968), having been selected by faculty, students and administrators for the honor.

In 1976, Dr. Crosby's distinguished career was again recognized, as he was named to the W. Newton and Hazel A. Long Professorship in History, an endowed chair established to recognize quality teaching as the essential element in liberal arts education.

Dr. Crosby is married to the former Jane Miller, a 1938 Juniata graduate whom he met when he first came to the college. Mrs. Crosby, who also holds an A.M. degree from Cornell University, is a former home economics teacher at Juniata.

Following the dinner, the Trustees and faculty members attended a semi-formal dance in Memorial Gymnasium, allowing all an opportunity to socialize with Juniata students.

"Peanuts" Performance Set for Oller

The Juniata College Concert Choir will bring the well-known characters of the "Peanuts" comic strip to life when it presents "You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown" on Friday and Saturday, May 23 and 24.

Scheduled to begin each evening at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium, the musical was written by Clark Gesner in cooperation with Tams-Witmark Music Library, Inc. It is being produced and directed by Bruce A. and Marjorie Hirsch, associate professor of music and instructional assistant in music, respectively.

The Gesner musical is based on Charles M. Shultz' famous comic strip, and six of the strip's characters will be featured in the musical, with one cast of Juniata students performing on Friday evening and another on Saturday evening.

Schroeder will be portrayed by Bruce W. Rothenberger, a senior from Lansdale, and Richard Fonda, a freshman from State College; Linus by Scott Klinger, a junior from McClure, and Joseph A. DePra, a freshman from Johnstown; and Patty by Amy L. Woodworth, a junior from Boothwyn, and Sarah A. Nelling, a sophomore from Chanbersburg.

The Hirsches observed that the musical consists of sixteen songs, each of which depicts a scenario drawn from those portrayed in the comic strip.

They note, for example that Snoopy's fight with the Red Baron is portrayed ("The Red Baron"), as is Lucy's psychiatrist stand ("The Doctor Is In"), the characters' never-ending game of baseball ("The Baseball Game"), troubles in school ("The Book Report"), Linus and his blanket ("My blanket and Me"), Charlie Brown's hapless attempts to fly his kite ("The Kite") and the grand finale, "Happiness."

Student instrumentalists, also members of the Concert Choir, will accompany the vocalists. They will play a variety of instruments, including piano, celeste, flute, picolo and drums.

Out & About

by Patti Cook and Mark Coakley

Our Out and About session this week took us along route 26 to Kelly's Korner. It came to our attention that many people feel there is not a good local place to eat. Things such as "I wonder which hole we should go to tonight" have been heard many times. Well, we would like to put a stop to this fallacy. We have found a place that supplis good food and good drinks. The atmosphere isn't too bad and there is this great moving picture on the wall.

Anyway, with the beer and wine being up to standards, the drinks were apparently mixed with an expert hand — tasty with a nice little kick. If you don't mind the idea of eating a turtle, the snapper soup was great, and the members of our party (boy, did we have a party) that ordered the home-made vegetable soup thought it was yummy!

Our entrees consisted of chef salads which were piled high and delicious. One in our party had a club sandwich which was a strange and delicious combination — a Kelly's special. The New York Strip steak was cooked to order (medium) and was very good — our compliments to the chef. And the person with the Italian stomach had a sausage sandwich with sauce and onions. She thought it was quite tasty and hot to her palate. We also managed to consume fried mushrooms, which are also a Kelly's special, and traditional french fries.

Our eating experience was overall very pleasing. Along with the food, we enjoyed a casual, friendly atmosphere, a smiling waitress, and that great moving picture!

Dressed in long black gowns, capped with tassled hats symbolic of their scholastic achievements, the members of the Class of 1980 will hold the place of honor on Oller Lawn this Sunday afternoon. The approximately 250 students who comprise perhaps the largest class to ever graduate from Juniata will participate in Commencement outdoors if the weather permits. (The rain location is Memorial Gym.)

The seniors and their parents and friends in attendance will be addressed by Hermann Eilts, a retired American Ambassador to Cairo. Eilts is a former career diplomat who served on the U.S. Peacemaking Team in Egypt. He was present behind the images the public remembers; Sadat embracing Begin, Jimmy Carter grinning at Camp David, and the signing of the resulting treaty on the White House lawn.

Commencement would not be complete without any awards. Keeping with tradition the 1981 Beechly Distinguished Professor will be recognized and the Linback Award, an award honoring an outstanding but recently acquired faculty member, will be presented. The President of the college, Dr. Frederick Binder will recognize the graduates and the Juniata College Band will perform. They will receive diplomas, advice, congratulations and goodbye hugs and kisses before they leave this world of S.V.S., Food Service and all-nighters to embrace the "world out there."

Big Band Sound Returns

by Patty Rauschenberger

On Friday May 9, 1980, The Big Band Sound welcomed trustees, faculty and students to Juniata's annual semi-formal.

The semi-formal sponsored by Center Board dance committee, headed by Mary Crosby, began at 9:30 p.m. The aim of this dance was to provide a different type of entertainment than Juniata students are used to. Many turned out for the occasion.

At first students did not know how to dance to this "strange" music and many watched as the faculty and trustees had the floor. However, it was not long before everyone was up together dancing to polkas and taking a "Sentimental Journey." The Big Band Sound, under the direction of Dick Burkholder, played a variety of tunes which were new to some and old favorites to others.

Tables were set up on the floor for people to relax and enjoy the refreshments. The dance committee outdid themselves with a variety of food consisting of cheese balls, three different dips, vegetables, deviled eggs, sandwiches and meat. A vodka punch and wine were the finishing touches.

Student Art Displayed

by Patty Rauschenberger

Paintings, photos, and pottery by Juniata students are being shown in an Art Exhibit held in Shoemaker Galleries until May 17.

A unique feature in the pottery is the use of figures as handles on an interesting tea set and cups.

There is an excellent array of paintings ranging from a beautiful still life by Masumi Mizuzawa to town settings by Steve DePerrot. The diverse talent of Doris Rohrbaugh includes, a portrait of the cliffs, a room with an old fashioned stove and flower settings.

Anyone interested should stop by Shoemaker Galleries this week and browse around.

Professors Promoted

Three Juniata College faculty members were advanced in rank by the college's Board of Trustees during its annual, on-campus Spring Meeting on May 10.

In making the announcement, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder observed that all three were advanced to associate professor. They are: Dr. Linda Sue Esch of the mathematics department, Dr. Todd D. Gustafson of the biology department, and Dr. Ruth Elizabeth Reed of the chemistry department.

Dr. Esch is the recipient of the 1979 Lindback Foundation Award for Distinguished Teaching. She earned her M.A. degree in 1970 and her Ph.D. in 1974, both from Boston University.

Dr. Gustafson, who joined the Juniata faculty in 1976, holds both his Ph.D. and M.S. degree from the University of Wisconsin at Madison. He received his B.A.

Juniata stresses the importance of developing the ability to analyze information and make decisions based upon that information. Mastering of this ability is said to supply us with a sense of control. Juniata makes use of humanity requirements, Logic and Language, General Education courses, and Senior Values so that the student practices these skills throughout his/her college career.

All of this sounds great in the make-believe world of theory, but, based on recent actions of our administration, it tends to lose something in the translation into the language of the real world. Lately, our braintrust has taken it upon itself to make some very important decisions without much attention, if any, to the students. For example: the new grading system, and the term-semester debate, where our overwhelming opinion seems to have been forgotten in the analysis.

True belief in a philosophy is seriously tested when adhering to it could mean losing something that you want badly. I think it's about time for our administration to make another decision. Will you, or will you not practice what you preach? If not, I suggest that you either stop preaching, or at least change the sermon.

Sincerely,
Eric Biddle

Congratulations Extended

Dear Editor,

I'd like to congratulate Steve Bowers on a job well done. A boxscore of his performance throughout his basketball tournament would rank as follows: Bowers scores, unassisted.

More clearly stated, Steve Bowers, all by his lonesome, organized a tournament that combined the goal of an intramural program (student participation) with a higher level of play (by allowing varsity and J.V. players to play), and, through its unique set up (best out of 3 games, double elimination) the tournament was able to progress with most players maintaining a low keyed attitude.

Steve struggled through over anxious security guards who once turned out the lights on one game, unhappy students who were forced to stop their games, muddy floors, errant volleyballs, and, finally, an unforgiving quantity of schoolwork. Steve made great sacrifices to run the tournament and attend the games.

Steve produced an enormous individual performance so that others could experience the pleasures of teamwork. Thanks, Steve, your efforts have been appreciated.

Sincerely,
Eric Biddle

Housing System Unfair

Dear Editor,

In the May 8 issue of the Juniatian I was misquoted in an article entitled "Senators Elected Despite Problems" as saying, "I especially want to work on changing housing arrangements, I think more freshmen should be housed near upper classmen."

What I really said was that there should be a review of the housing procedure especially the policy of reserving rooms on each floor for freshmen.

I have come to the conclusion (from personal experience) that this policy causes more anger, resentment — more problems than it is worth. Indeed, after experiencing problems in getting a room in the dorm for which I was elected senator, I question the value of such a system.

I firmly believe that the dorms should be open to all classes and that there should be no "freshmen housing dorm" as Mr. Linetty puts it. Yet it appears that due to the present housing system, we are left with a sophomore housing complex, sophomore men in Sherwood and sophomore women in Lesher.

I feel that the current system of housing, in trying to be fair to the freshmen by being unfair to the sophomores is rather self defeating, especially to those who have invested much time and effort not to mention money in making their rooms comfortable only to be told that they have to move out because their room has been designated for incoming freshmen.

I realize that it is impossible to make everyone happy all of the time but surely there is a better system than the one we must comply with.

Sincerely,
William K. Hallman

SHORT CUTS

by Mr. Wizard and Jesse Mac

Def Leppard — On Through The Night

Def Leppard's first release seems to be a beginning. It is not a very strong album in any capacity, but it does show promise. Perhaps the most surprising aspect of this group is their age, or, their lack thereof. Judging by the pictures on the album cover, I would be surprised if any of the five members were over 19 years of age. Well, enough trivia.

The lyrics are, at best, lacking feeling, and composed primarily of cliches. At worst, they're simply awful. I'm not saying that song lyrics have to be profound, but they should convey some type of message or meaning. The vocal arrangements are not as strong as they could be; this may be attributable to poor production, but I strongly doubt it. On the other hand, they do seem to play fairly well together.

As I stated previously, this could be a beginning. Overall, it is rather mediocre, but only their next effort will tell whether they are on their way up or down.

Grace Slick — Dreams

When Grace Slick split from the Starship, I was curious as to what her solo career would produce. I have been pleasantly rewarded with Dreams. Her voice is back in force, and the lyrical power she once commanded has returned. While the arrangements are not typical of the Starship (guitarist Steve Zito wrote several of the tunes) the influence of their years with Grace remains evident. Nearly all of the cuts feature Grace's powerful voice; a voice that is undeniably one of the best in the business. I don't think anyone, Airplane/Starship fan or not, would be disappointed with this album.

Classic Cut-out Pick of the Week

Neil Young — Tonight's the Night

While Tonight's the Night is not widely known (in comparison to his other albums), Neil Young once termed it as his "strongest album". I tend to agree with him. The material on the record contains a little bit of everything; it shows his roots, where he has been, and for 1975, just where he was going. If you are getting tired of After the Goldrush, Harvest, etc., try this one.

P.S. He wasn't even depressed in those days.

ATTRACTIONS

Review: The Grateful Dead Live At State College

On Tuesday night, May 6, 1980, the Grateful Dead were super. Perhaps this is not the best way, journalistically speaking, to begin a concert review. However, I feel compelled to let everyone know at the onset; let's face it, most of you won't read the whole column. Well anyway, the Dead managed to overcome a host of difficulties, including poor acoustics, to assure me (or reassure me) that they are still one of the finest bands around. I don't go to a concert to hear a song identical to the one on the artist's album. If I did, I'd save the money, put on my headphones, and listen to my heart's content. I was not disappointed with Dead. From beginning to end, they jammed.

Although I was hoping to hear alot of my old favorites, I was quite impressed with material they played from their new album. Many of the newer songs displayed much of the same creativity that 'Dead-Heads' were hooked on years ago. After being disillusioned with Shakedown Street, I'm looking forward to hearing their latest studio effort as soon as it finds its way to Huntingdon.

I guess I'll end the way I started; the Grateful Dead were super. The crowd enjoyed the show, I enjoyed myself, and Dead seemed to enjoy themselves. I think that's what concerts are for. Have a good summer, and if you get the chance, see the Grateful Dead.

The Governs committee is chaired by John Seymour. Todd Gipe and Dan Roberts will assist on this committee.

"Next year we want to work with the vacation schedule and look into the trimester and semester question" states Paula Whetstone, head of the Student Concerns committee. Dave Thorton and Michele Single also chose to work on these projects.

"Most of the work of the senate goes on in committees," affirms Dean Arnold Tilden.

A proposal that each dorm association elect one student to sit on the Residential Life committee next year was raised by Susan Twombly, Associate Dean of Student Services. She felt that this practice would improve communications between students and Student Government. The idea will be discussed further.

Audrey Artz will fill in as voted Student Government as the student representative on the Student Services committee for the remainder of the year.

It would serve as liaison between Student Government and Committees. Jim LeDonne said the proposed Pub... Relations committee, one member from each of the four SG committees would constitute the publicity committee. It's a propaganda institution. Jim says SG voted to institute the committee.

Previously the choir - under the direction of Mr. Hirsch - made its annual tour performing 11 concerts in four states as well as its Homecoming Concert on the Juniata campus in early March.

Of Hirsch's Concert Choir, Jester Hairston, internationally known composer, conductor and arranger, has said, "I have conducted only one or two choirs on a par with Juniata's."

The public is cordially invited to attend either performance of "You're A Good Man Charlie Brown." However, because of the traditionally heavy attendance by alumni and parents on Saturday evening, it is suggested that area residents plan to hear and view the Friday evening presentation.

Shep Speaks

by Mark "Shep" Infanti

There's a four inch scar that runs across the back of my skull. No I didn't have a lobotomy as someone once jokingly suggested. The scar isn't all that serious, but the way I got it is.

I remember laying on the field, feeling the warm blood tangle with my soon to be shaven hair, trying to control the hot, bitter anger I felt towards the opposing player who just used by head for a soccer ball.

My head healed, but what about Daryle Stingly's back? In case you con't know, Daryle Stingly was paralyzed when Jack Tatum smashed him (on what some would call a late hit) nearly two years ago.

Both incidents represent a trend in American sports that has a lot of people worried about the future of athletics in general. Virtually every sport is subject to it, from auto racing to hockey, more and more violent is occurring each year.

Last week Pittsburgh's Bill Madlock slapped an umpire in the face with his glove. Not once, but three times. The league suspended him for 15 days, and fined him five thousand dollars. But that was too much for Bill, so he called Marvin Miller; you see Bill thinks he should get a paid vacation. I think he should face assault charges.

People don't go to see hockey games any more, they go to see the fights. Every team has an "enforcer", and it's inevitable that the two will clash at least once during the course of a game.

I know a lot of you are thinking this guy must be a baby, contact is good for a game, gets the blood flowing, makes them play harder. And I've often heard that there's "no such thing as a cheat shot", but I wonder what you Steelers fans will call it if someone leaves Lynn Swan or Franco squirming in agony on the turf of Three Rivers?

Roundball Classic Champs "The Shotguns."

Perspective

by Scot A. Lehigh

The Juniata baseball team had one of its tougher weeks of the season, dropping four out of five encounters last week. After clinching their first MAC title the tribe went on to defeat Penn State (Capital Campus), 11-6 on Monday. Kevin Showvaker notched his first victory for the Indians with relief help from Jeff Snyder and John "Saul" Seymour. The tribe's fifteenth hit attack was lead by underclassmen Jeff Miles and Carl Pavolic two-for-three, Gerry Crowley two-for-two and Senior Chris Lyons going two-for-four, while Jim Zimmerman and Don Pote provided the power with a homerun each.

On Tuesday, the York Spartans took a doubleheader from the tribe, 7-6, 9-2. On the mound, Greg Kucera received the starting nod for the first game. He went 5-2/3 innings giving up seven runs on ten hits and was relieved by Seymour. Juniata banged-out eleven hits with Pavolic going three-for-four and Dave Bender and Pote each ripping roundtrippers.

The second game found heavy hitting by the Spartans accounting for nine runs. Scott Johnson and Pat Daly shared the pitching duties, while Don Pote continued his hitting powers going three-for-three with two triples and Chris Lyons went two-for-three.

Juniata then traveled to Lock Haven to get back on the winning track, however the home team pulled a come from behind win in the bottom of the ninth. Mike Straka hurled eight innings before getting relief help from Pat Daly. Miles had two hits for the tribe while Bender and Ed McEwen each had a double.

This weekend found the tribe motoring to Elizabethtown to meet Upsala in a MAC tournament. The tribe was defeated 8-4, while Upsala went on to win the tournament. Bob McDonald pitched 5-2/3 innings with Seymour finishing the nine inning affair. McDonald gave up eight runs on seven hits, while walking eight batters and striking-out five. Senior Dave Bender and Sophomore Ed McEwen went three-for-four with Jeff Miles picking up two hits.

Later on this week the tribe will find out if they will receive any post-season bids. They could receive an at large NCAA bid or an invite to a ECAC tournament. It was a rough week for the tribe, however they've had a very successful season. The Juniata campus should be proud of their efforts.

Wrinkle in Warpath

by Doug "Cornbread" Wallace

With the Philadelphia 76ers making it to the NBA finals, and the Philadelphia Flyers making it to the Stanley Cup finals, Pennsylvania has a chance to have the World Champions in four major sports (baseball basketball, football, hockey). We all know that Pittsburgh is the "City of Champions" with their Bucs and Steelers, but now Philly has a chance to become a "City of Champions."

Philadelphia has long been remembered as a city of losers, and when they did get a team into the play-offs they were called chokers. When any other city has a play-off team that loses nothing much is said, but when a Philly play-off team loses they are called chokers. But in recent times no other city has had all of its sports teams make it to the play-offs. Sure the Phillies lost it in 76, 77, 78, and the Sixers lost it in 77, and the Eagles have lost in the play-offs the last two years, but if Philly superstars were pampered like the rest of the superstars in sports, I'm sure it would be a different story. Pittsburgh may be a "City of Champions" but their fans are losers. They have two World Champions, and one of them, the Pirates, barely drew over 1,000,000 fans, while the other one, the Steelers, may have to play their football in Pitt Stadium because Three Rivers is not taken care of properly.

Nowhere in the world are there better fans than in Philadelphia. Year after year they come out and cheer their heroes. Even though the Phillies finished 4th in their division they still drew nearly 3,000,000 people, while the Sixers, Flyers, and Eagles always play before sell-out crowds. Also the Philly sports teams play in two of the best sports complexes (Veterans Stadium, Spectrum) in the country.

So after years of frustration in which they have only won two major sports titles (Flyers in 73-74, 74-75), Philadelphia has a chance to become big winners. There is no doubt in my mind that the Sixers will face the Lakers, while the Flyers will destroy the Islanders. Plus the Phillies will finish strong this year, while the Eagles are just a game away from the Super Bowl. So the time is now for Philadelphia, a city where the best athletes perform before the best fans.

In track, senior Mike Miller, the Indian MVP, was the top scorer for the thinclads this year. He took five individual firsts, one second and three thirds, along with three relay wins and a relay second, to pile up 37.5 points.

Freshman middle-distance runner Tom Wise racked up four wins and 26.25 points to edge senior weightman Eric Bollinger for second place. Bollinger compiled 26 points.

Junior weightman Dave Headly was fourth with 23 points.

Freshman Dom DiGennaro, playing fifth and sixth singles, recorded the best individual record for the men's tennis team at 6-3. Juniors Don Rice — the Indian MVP — and Steve Moser recorded a 5-6 mark at the first position to lead all doubles teams.

Junior Cindy Penatzer, playing fourth and fifth singles, sported the Tribe's best record 4-1. Senior MVP Cindy Updergraff was 2-1 at third singles, while freshman Leslie Benedict finished 7-5, playing first singles. Benedict's record included three wins in five matches at the MAC individual championships.

Steve Stroup, the Tribe's MVP and conference co-medalist, recorded an 84.7 average over eight rounds to lead the golf squad. Junior Russ Geiger averaged 86.4 over five rounds, sophomore Bill West averaged 87.0 in eight outings, and sophomore John Hyman played eight rounds, averaging 87.8 strokes per match.

Hyman led the squad in three matches, Stroup in two, and Geiger in another.

Food Director Hired

by Chris Corry

Norm Gopsill has been hired to be the new Food Service Director. He is replacing Jeff DeWalt and he is responsible for the efficient running of Baker Refectory and Tote.

Tote may be looking forward to some changes under Gopsill. "It's not being utilized . . . especially in the evenings . . . And if we can find out what the student is looking for, it will be." A Deli line of food with such items as made-to-order sandwiches, pizzas, and hot subs is being considered. The menu may be changed after 7:00 p.m. every night. Bottled soda is now available at Tote and the dinner specials will continue throughout the year. Various other specials and gimmicks such as the free Coke glass with a meal, are being planned.

No major changes are anticipated for Baker Refectory, although Gopsill is keeping an open mind and welcomes any student input. "I believe in being available. Students should feel free to see Tom, myself or Christel."

One of Gopsill's ideas to improve communications is to eat a meal in the faculty lounge with a random sample of 25 to 30 students. Hopefully this would enable students to express their thoughts about the Food Service and get feedback. Gopsill wants "Not a large group because then it becomes me talking at them."

Norm Gopsill came to Hallmark Food Services and Juniata from the American Institute in Washington, D.C. where he was Food Service Director. He is pleased with both the company and the school finding Hallmark smaller and more personable than most of his previous companys. Gopsill has been in the Food Service business for ten years and has worked at several schools.

The new director came to Huntingdon, in part, " . . . Looking to get away from the big city atmosphere. The whole college has been very friendly." Gopsill is very satisfied with the student help. He finds the student workers "very friendly, co-operative" and they, like most of the students, try to approach him in a positive manner with their complaints and suggestions.

The early opening of cafeteria lines will not become a regular event, states Gopsill. "We have unofficially opened earlier to help alleviate line problems." The long lines forming during the first weeks of school will disappear soon Gopsill hopes. He doesn't like to rush students through line, and "I don't believe in predishing a lot of food." Students should have the time to look at the food and choose what they want, rather than just taking whatever has been dished up.

Loans Okayed

By Eric Prutsam

Two of the major concerns discussed at the Student Government meeting were loans and the Course and Teacher Evaluation Handbook.

Students Government Convenience Loans will be offered again this year. Interest free loans for up to $50 can be applied for Monday through Thursday during office hours and picked up on Thursday. The Financial Aid department is working with S.G. to ensure that loans are repaid within one month.

The course and Teacher Evaluation Handbooks have now been distributed to freshmen and sophomores. The evaluations were conducted immediately after fall and winter terms of the last academic year. It is hoped the publication will "enable students to have accurate expectations of what a course, and the professor of that course, is going to offer them based on the experiences of the students."

The response to the questionnaire was low. Only 20 to 30 percent of the students asked to fill out the survey did so. Because of the high cost — $1000 — to S.G. it is not known whether the yearly survey will continue. A copy of the publication is on reserve in the library for those who did not receive one.

Other business included plans to purchase vending machines for North and Founders. Also, refunds will be given out by dorm senators to students who lose money in the dorm machines. The Student Government officially chartered the Executives Club and presented the Dorm of the Year plaques to Cloister and North dorms. The next S.G. meeting will be Wednesday, October 1, at 8:00 p.m. in Ellis.

RD's Assume Duties

by Linda Sevick

Seven Resident Directors were placed in various dorms on campus this year, including in East Houses, as opposed to the two that Juniata has employed in recent years.

"The R.D.'s are not there just in a disciplinary role," Susan Twombly, Associate Dean of Student Services, said. "They were placed there to provide support and assistance for the resident assistants and help with programming among other administrative and counseling duties."

Bonnie Smith, R.D. in East Houses along with her husband, Mike, noticed some initial resistance from the students in keeping certain rules enforced probably because of the relative freedom enjoyed in recent years.

Resident Directors in other dorms include John Bird, Cloister; Ibrook Tower, Hess Apartments; Nancy Bauer, Lesher; Bob Smith, Sherwood; Cindy Boyer, South; and Lucy Breslin, Tussey/Terrace.

Reactions of the students range from favorable to critical. One resident of East Houses said she approves because there is too much administrative work for the R.A.'s to do. Another disapproved by stating that he feels that R.A.'s can keep the rules enforced by themselves.

An initial clash between the R.D.'s in East Houses and the residents occurred because of the restrictions placed on formerly-called "tower parties." The restriction of tower parties is mainly to keep the stairwells cleared for fire and insurance purposes.

Smith said she didn't realize the high number of people that attend these parties but that it should be possible to respect this regulation without any major difficulty.

Smith likes living with the students, though placed in a "difficult position," she said, between the administration and the students. Except for a few unfavorable confrontations the first weekend, she states the majority of the residents are understanding and cooperative.

Calendar Revised

During the Spring term of last year many students wre concerned about the proposed Administrative calendar year, fearing a late dismissal would make it harder to secure summer employment. After reviewing the results of the poll by the Student Concerns Committee a recommendation was made to the College Administration for a change in the proposed calendar year to favor an early graduation date. The Administration reviewed the request and announced that the calendar year would be altered in favor of an early graduation date of May 24, rather than Memorial Day.

New Decision on Mt. Day

by Patty Rauschenberger

This year Mountain Day will be held at Greenwood Furnace State Park. No date will be announced this year. Instead the Mountain Day Committee will choose a tentative date known only to them. In the case of bad weather the cancellation would effect only the Committee, not the college campus as a whole. This decision was made in an attempt to bring back the original tradition of Mountain Day, that of calling off classes for the day and taking off for a day in the mountains.

New events planned for this year are nature hikes, relay races and hay rides. These events are still in the planning stages but it is hoped all will take place. It would not be Mountain Day without the traditional events which include tug-of-war, egg toss and the faculty-senator football game.This year's winners of the egg toss will receive special trophies. The annual cross country race will also be held. Registration forms will be at the Information Desk in Ellis Hall.

In an effort to make Mountain Day a full day of activities for everyone to enjoy the day will begin at 9:30 a.m. instead of 8:00 a.m. and continue to 5:00 p.m. Buses will run every half hour at the beginning and end of the day. A schedule will be posted soon.

Food Service is also helping to make Mountain Day a full day by providing a hot lunch of barbecued chicken and spare ribs. They will also supply an afternoon snack of hot chocolate and fresh doughnuts.

The Mountain Day Committee hopes everyone will come out and join in the fun. If any one has any suggestions or ideas for Mountain Day it is not too late. Write to Mountain Day, Box 114.

S.G. Hours Announced

The Juniata College Student Government has established the following office hours: Monday through Friday, from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m. everyday. Students are encouraged to stop by the office located in the basement of Ellis College Center, across the hall from the Outing Service Office, to discuss any concerns they might have with their student representatives.

EDITORIAL

Hope for the Future?

What better way to start off a new academic year than on a positive note. It is optimistic to start a new term full of hope of good things to come. It is the 1980-81 Student Government that offers hope of a better Juniata, or at least a start.

The S.G. seems to have begun disproving the great fallacy that what the J.C. students say does not matter. Perhaps it does. Evidence can be found in the revision of the 1980-81 academic calendar. According to a survey conducted by S.G., students desired graduation to be moved up from May 31 to May 24, even though this meant shortening some of the yearly breaks. The students wanted it and they got it, for a change.

Student Government has big plans. They have set up a public relations department to work in cooperation with the communications organizations to improve information flow to students and from students. Great idea! Let's hope it works.

Also mentioned at the S.G. meeting was the idea of "getting someone to check up on the Senators periodically to make sure they are doing their job," according to S.G. meeting minutes. What an efficient way to see that Senators are doing what they are supposed to do, representing the students of their particular dorm. Just what the S.G. should do! Let's hope they do it.

S.G. can function as an essential tool, working for the benefit of students. As a matter of fact, that is its primary function, to work for the students. In the past the success rate has been questioned. But the past does not always necessarily dictate the future. S.G. this year shows a great amount of promise, but promise is not enough. Hope needs to be turned into reality. Good ideas are not worthwhile unless put into practice.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Joe Schall

"What's Along Muddy Run?" Adam asked.

God pointed. Adam looked down the stream that snaked past the tennis courts, through the IM fields, and branched out at East Houses. He saw a lump sitting on a bridge. God was pointing at the lump.

"What is along Muddy Run." said God. "Seek and ye shall find."

Adam was skeptical. The lump didn't look very appealing from a distance. He took a chance and asked God if they could make a bargain.

"Shoot," said God.

"You give me a hint about what's along Muddy Run," said Adam like a car salesman, "and I'll quit trying to peek at that big black book you're always reading."

God chuckled at Adam's ignorance and said "Adam I promise that if you go along Muddy Run once you will never have to peek at my big black book again, for you will know the ending. Along Muddy Run you will find a part of yourself, your very ribs, love, hate, sadness, joy, temptation, goodness, and even irony. In short Adam, you will find life."

Now Adam was truly tempted. Seeing the appetite in his eyes God said "but heed this warning Adam, if you journey along Muddy Run once you may never return to me completely. You will be changed Adam."

God repeated "changed" once more as Adam gaped at him. Adam looked again at the lump. "Is that life?" he wondered. He remembered the good times he and God had shared. They had passed through the Arch and walked hand in hand into Eden. It never rained in Eden. Did Adam want to give this up?

But then he remembered the book — the big black book he had always wanted to know the ending of. He had never gotten past "in the beginning." The thought of that book's secrets was more than he could bear. After all, he was 21. If he wasn't ready for life now he never would be.

"I will do it." said Adam after a deep breath, "I will go along Muddy Run. What do I have to do, dive into it?"

"No," said God with a sad smile, "it's quite simple. Just listen. It will take you. But be careful Adam, it may take you somewhere you don't want to go."

"I can handle it." said Adam with confidence.

Adam listened closely to Muddy Run, and the sound of its swirling currents suddenly increased. He covered his ears but he still hear it, thunking against his eardrums

New Profs at Juniata

by Randall Anderson

The Juniata College Science Department has three new professors for the 1980-81 academic year. They are Loren K. Rhodes, Computer Science; Douglas S. Glazier, Biology and Norman E. Siems, Physics.

Professor Rhodes is from McVeytown, Pa., not too far from Huntingdon. He received his master's degree this year from the Pennsylvania State University. He teaches Computer Science at Juniata. He is 22 years old and single. His hobbies include playing the piano and organ and singing in the choir of the Church of the Brethren, of which he is an active member.

Professor Glazier's hometown is St. Claire Shores, Michigan, a suburb of Detroit. He received his bachelor's degree in biology from Oakland University in Rochester, Michigan, and did his doctoral work in ecology at Cornell. He teaches Biology here, and hopes to teach such courses as The Evolution of Ecology and Vertebrate Natural History in the coming terms. Professor Glazier has a wife, Debbie, who also holds a PhD, in physiology, from Cornell. His hobbies include reading, favorite subjects being philosophy and natural history, and hiking.

Dr. Siems is from Drexel Hill, Pa. He got his bachelor's degree from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and his master's at Johns Hopkins, both in physics, and his doctorate in nuclear science from Cornell. Before coming to Juniata, where he is a professor of physics, he taught for four years in the U.S. Navy's Nuclear Power Program, and for seven years at Quincy College in Illinois. Dr. Siems, his wife and two daughters live in Huntingdon. His hobbies include golf, but his work demands most of his time.

Students Speak

by Nancy Bonlin

Q: Do you feel that the presence of the girls in the Arch affected the storming of the Arch in any way?

Todd Gipe — Sr. — No, the storming of the Arch is a matter of pride and would continue even if no one lived in the Arch.

Steve Pollock — Sr. — No, in fact, I enjoyed seeing a few girls get into the mud and join in the fun.

Beth Reuther — Soph. — Yes. The Arch has traditionally been the males' dominion on campus. I got the feeling that the men defending the Arch didn't know which end of the arch to protect, the end with their rivaling women or the end with the new male population, the freshmen. I personally was never in favor of women in the Arch.

Bill Haddad — Soph. — No. The "Storming" has been a Juniata tradition for decades, and I hardly feel that the girls' presence deferred upperclass efforts to defend the Arch.

Shaw Brothers To Perform Saturday at Juniata College

O'Brian & Severa — a Hit!

by John Kelly

"Direct from Los Angeles, California — O'Brian and Sevara! Enter two young men, one tall and thin and the other short and stocky. They walk quietly on stage and take their places. From the beginning it is apparent that these two young comedians are very professional. They have extremely gifted voices and the sound effects and impressions that they do are very good. They start rather slowly. Like a wrestler judging his opponent so O'Brian and Sevara feel out their audience. The attendance for the show was, unfortunately, a small one. This made it very difficult for them. But after breaking the ice with a few good jokes and sound effects both the audience and the comedians felt easier.

Their jokes were timely and topical. Yet they did not rely on just what had happened the day before, a fault of many other comedians. They got laughs about old War War II war movies and Dragnet. Sevara did one of the best impressions of Edith Bunker in a take off on All in the Family. Their jokes were aimed at times to the students and at others, to the townspeople. When they asked about the bus lines in Huntingdon and found out that there were not any they were not dismayed. They wondered when the stage coach came in! They did take offs on commercials and on TV sports shows. They were very perceptive about college dating.

Their jokes combined with weird sounds made the show. Their timing was very good. All in all O'Brian and Savara were very successful in getting laughs and in making the time spent well worth the money.

Sound effects and impressions add to the comedy of O'Brian and Severa.

"Carnival" Weekend Arrives

"Anything Goes" for Homecoming

by Robin Smith
Kelly Hussey

This weekend September 26-28, is Homecoming weekend. This year's theme is "Carnival" featuring actual carnival rides on Friday and Saturday. The Homecoming Committee has planned a variety of activities for all to enjoy. Friday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. the weekend begins with the Almost Anything Goes competition on Sherwood Field. Student teams of four men and four women will compete in various stunts. Friday evening at 7:00 p.m. the Center Board is sponsoring "The Electric Horseman" which will be shown in Oller Hall.

The Homecoming parade will begin Saturday morning at 10:00. The parade will head north on Moore Street to 18th Street, past Ellis Hall to the College Field. Floats entered by dorms, clubs, and all four classes will appear in this year's float competition. Monetary prizes will be awarded to the best float from each category. Also participating in the parade will be the nominees for the Homecoming Queen and her Court. The winners will be announced at half time during the football game, which begins at 1:30 p.m., against Albright.

A number of other athletic events have also been scheduled. The women's field hockey team will play Lycoming at 10:30 a.m. on Langdon Field. The cross country team will face Albright beginning at halftime of the football game on College Field. At 4:30 the volleyball team will play St. Francis in the Memorial Gym.

From 11:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m. a Coney Island luncheon will be served on Oller Hall lawn for $2.50. From noon to 1:00 p.m. there will be an Indian Club Buffet in the Ballroom of Ellis College Center; the cost will be $3.00.

At 3:30 p.m. Saturday afternoon the president's reception will be held in the main entrance to Memorial Gym. Saturday night's entertainment will consist of the Homecoming Concert featuring the Shaw Brothers, in Oller Auditorium for $2.00.

Around Juniata

by Maureen Morrissey

I can't say that I wasn't warned. They prepared me way back in orientation and even during my first few days at Juniata. Even so, I wasn't quite ready for "The Storming of the Arch" which took place this year on September 17.

The "storming" is a strong tradition held annually at the arch of Cloister. It involves all the sophmores, junior, and senior guys blocking the entrance of the arch while the freshmen guys try to fit through. This, I am told, stems from the idea that the upperclassmen guys want to protect the freshmen girls. Apparently, any freshman who is unable to fight his way through is unworthy of dating a freshman girl.

The scene I witnessed at Cloister cannot be compared with anything that I've seen before. It was chaos: small pieces of teeshirts flew through the air. Eggs were also thrown. Fights broke out as freshmen made a mad rush for the arch. No one made it completely through, however. Several guys were hurt and had to be carried off and someone was looking for the other half of his glasses. The spectators cheered for their class while the participants hurled insults toward their opponents' mothers.

To me, the whole thing seemed rather brutal, so I spoke to some of the freshmen who were involved. To my surprise they were all very positive about it. One freshman described it as "an organized, controlled gangfight." Everyone I spoke to said that, for the most part, the upperclassmen were good sports and that there was a lot of hand shaking. They also agreed that referees were an excellent idea.

Even though it was fun, there were many injuries. These included a concussion, a bruised spleen, injured backs, black eyes and numerous cuts and bruises.

One of the more comical incidents occured when two girls tried to get through. Needless to say, they were quickly removed.

"The Storming of the Arch" is by far the most fascinating tradition at Juniata. Vicious as it was, it was great that it was able to take place with good feelings. I'd like to see some kind of competition between the female upper and lower classmen.

Parents' Weekend Set to Go

by Heather MacCrindle

According to co-chairpersons of the Parents Weekend Committee, Barbie Simpson and Joy Sill, this year's Parents Weekend, scheduled for October 3, 4, and 5 should be a "big success." They have been planning for this weekend since last year, and Barbie says," Everything's fallen into place and we're set to go."

The Alumni Office and the Office of Development do the planning for Parents Weekend, under the direction of Katherine Miller, and Centerboard and the 27-member Parents Day Committee "makes it happen." Says Nancy Law, liason between Centerboard and its committees," the people on the committees do the necessary jobs," and the response this year to Centerboard's plea for committee members has been "phenomenal."

New additions have been planned for the schedule of events this year. A "Coffee With the Profs" is being held Saturday morning as an informal get-together for parents, students, and faculty members. Dr. William Russey will also be directing a new Saturday morning session called, "Window to the Classroom." This will offer Dr. Russey and faculty members from other academic departments the chance to explain their educational philosophies.

This year three cruises of Lake Raystown will be made available Friday night, Saturday morning, and Sunday afternoon. Space is limited to only 50 passengers per cruise, however, and committee members suggest that parents make reservations in advance.

The works of William Davis, director of the Museum of Art at Penn State University, will be on display both Friday and Saturday in Shoemaker Gallery. "Artists on the Hill" will again set up on the lawn of Oller Hall from 10:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m. on Saturday featuring handicrafts from professional artists of the Central Pennsylvania Area and Juniata students and faculty as well.

Saturday is cram-packed with activities, beginning with the annual seminars in the morning. Besides "Window to the Classroom," the Career Planning and Placement Office in cooperation with faculty and alumni will offer "Looking Both Ways," discussing academic and career offerings at Juniata.

A slide show entitled, "The Camera Never Blinks," produced by Joy Sill and Sheri Matheson will offer a look at student life, and Dr. Paul Schettler will exhibit his expertise in his field with his seminar, "Chemistry Can Be Explosively Fun."

Athletics is the feature for Saturday afternoon and following the football game, all parents are invited to their son's or daughter's dorm for receptions, hosted by the students. To top off both Friday and Saturday evenings, the Juniata College Band, under the direction of Ibrook Tower, will "Strike Up the Band" at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

The Parents Association Annual Breakfast Meeting is schedule for Sunday morning and Barbie encourages all students to pick up their complimentary student ticket to attend this meal with their parents.

Finally, the Parents Weekend will conclude with the All Campus Worship Service held at 10:30, featuring the voice of the Juniata College Choir.

Coffeehouse Gains Good Review

by Andy Davis

This year's first "coffeehouse" was held in Sherwood's "Catharsis" lounge on Tuesday, Sept. 16. It was sponsored by "Centerboard" and Laughing Bush, Ent. The musicians featured were Terry Beard (from Los Angeles) and Jill Winwood ("just back from England"). There was beer and popcorn (all you wanted for a two dollar cover charge: a good deal!) and the night in general was considered to be a success.

The pace of the evening started out slowly, the place being about half full by 8:00. Jill did a quiet accoustic set, her songs including works by Joni Mitchell, the Beatles, Cat Stevens, Simon and Garfunkle, and Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, among others.

By nine o'clock there was an unexpectedly large turnout. Terry Beard got the crowd rocking with a rambunctious show, pounding out rock'n'roll tunes — some Beatles, some Stephen Stills, and quite a few original tunes. There was a lot of interplay between the musician and the audience, and the crowd seemed to enjoy the show.

The quality of the sound system was good, and there was even a hastily improvised but effective light show. Waiters kept everyone's beer cups and popcorn-bowls full, and the general ambience was mellow.

Buses to Penn State and Lake Raystown will be running again this year. Signs will be posted in Ellis Hall stating the departure and arrival times for each place. Buses to Penn State run on Saturdays while buses to Lake Raystown run on Saturdays and Sundays. Anyone interested in driving the buses and is 21 years of age should see Mr. Wayne Justham.

Muddy Run

like hammerblows. Abruptly he was pitched headlong into the water and yanked downstream. "This is life, this is life." Muddy Run whispered to him. Adam again covered his ears but the whisper became a chant, and the chant became a scream. "This is life!" Muddy Run shrieked for the last time and tossed him on the bridge.

Adam shook the mud from his eyes and beheld the lump. It slowly changed into a beautiful dark-haired women with a tan. Adam was transfixed. He had never seen a woman or a tan before.

"Do, do I know you?" Adam stammered.

"Not yet, but you soon will." she promised with a wink.

Adam looked up the stream at God, but he was gazing into Muddy Run with sad and knowing eyes.

"G . . . God said that I would find life along Muddy Run." Adam said, looking at her carefully. "A . . . Are you life?"

The girl smiled and shook her head no.

"You mean you're not love, hate, sadness, joy, temptation, goodness, and even irony?" he asked, remembering that God had never been wrong before.

"No, silly." she said with another wink. "I am love. Only love."

Adam sighed happily. He believed her. Arm in arm they walked into East Houses. Adam didn't see the apple in her hand.

Campaign for Sports Center to be Launched at Homecoming

HUNTINGDON — Juniata College will launch a ten-year, $13-million development campaign — its largest ever — during Homecoming Weekend on Saturday, Sept. 27, it was announced today by Charles C. Ellis, chairman of the board of trustees.

Ellis, a 1940 Juniata graduate and senior vice-president of RCA, said the campaign will be known as "The Century II Campaign: An Investment in Continued Excellence," in observance of the 104-year-old college's entry into its second century.

Comprised of six objectives, the campaign will be highlighted by construction of a $4-million Sports+Recreation Center, which will provide Juniata with a six-lane swimming pool, a new two-station gymnasium and equal locker facilities for men and women.

Other of the campaign objectives are: $2.5 million for on-going support of the academic program; $2 million for endowment growth; $2 million for program enrichment; $1.5 million for campus development and renovation of existing buildings; and $1 million for scholarship assistance.

In making his announcement, Ellis further observed that Edwin L. Kennedy of New York City and Henry H. Gibble of Lititz will serve as honorary chairman and general chairman, respectively, during the initial stage of the campaign.

Charles R. (Chuck) Knox, vice president-football operations of the NFL's Buffalo Bills, will serve as the alumni gifts chairman.

All three men are members of Juniata's board of trustees, and Gibbel and Knox are 1957 and 1954 graduates, respectively. Kennedy, who received an honorary degree from Juniata in 1969, served as honorary chairman of the $10-million "Margin of Difference Campaign," successfully completed just three years ago.

Gibbel is executive vice president and secretary of Lititz Mutal Insurance Company, and Kennedy is a senior partner in Lehman Brothers, Kuhn and Leob, Inc., a New York City investment firm.

Ellis explained that the Sports+Recreation Center "is needed to provide current and prospective students with adequate facilities for varsity sports, intramural sports and the 'life-long' recreational sports the college emphasizes."

Juniata presently has 15 intercollegiate varsity sports and six intercollegiate club sports, while some 85 percent of its record-setting student body of 1300 students participate in an intramural sports program that often keeps its 30-year-old Memorial Gymnasium open until midnight.

"The new Sports+Recreation Center will allow Juniata to continue — and to expand — its commitment to providing its students with the opportunity to develop life-long physical fitness skills deemed necessary for healthy, well-rounded individuals," Ellis added.

Concurring, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder observed that "the present facility is being utilized to its limits, and the new center will provide not only additional recreational and intramural opportunities in swimming, but also additional space for currently-popular activities such as racquetball, handball, volleyball and indoor tennis."

As proposed, an additional recreational-improvement objective of the first stage of the development campaign is the construction of a new grandstand on the homeside of College Field. Beneath the grandstand will be locker facilities for the college's fall and spring athletic teams, as well as storage space.

Juniata's present facility, Memorial Gymnasium, was constructed in 1951 in honor of the nearly 700 Juniata graduates who served in World War II. It will be renovated and blended into the new structure.

Remarking about the "Century II Campaign" in general, Ellis noted that "its intention is to assure that the needs of this and of future generations of Juniata students are met.

"Juniata is going to begin its second century as it ended its first — as a highly-regarded liberal arts college dedicated to continuing excellence in all of its various programs.

Enrollment Drop

Secretary of Education Shirley M. Hufstedler today said that total enrollment in the Nation's schools and colleges is expected to approach 57.8 million this fall — a decrease from a year ago of nearly 1.3 percent.

The decline from last year's 58.5 million, she added, is indicated in the annual "back to school" forecast by the U.S. Department of Education's National Center for Education Statistics.

This estimated enrollment in formal education programs from kindergarten through graduate school for the start of academic year 1980-81 would be a decrease of more than 5.7 percent from the record high of 61.3 million students reached in the fall of 1975, Secretary Hufstedler stated.

According to the forecast, about 3.3 million persons will be employed as classroom teache.'s, and an additional 300,000 will be working as superintendents, principals, supervisors, and other staff members.

"Education in the fall of 1980 will be the primary activity of 61.4 million Americans," Secretary Hufstedler said. "In a Nation with a population of more than 222 million, almost three of 10 persons will be direct participants in the educational process.

All of the figures cited by the Secretary include students enrolled in publicly and privately controlled institutions.

Enrollment at the elementary school level (kindergarten through grade 8) is expected to decrease approximately 1.4 percent — from 31.6 million in the fall of 1979 to 31.2 million pupils this fall.

An increase of 1.1 percent, from 11.6 million last fall to 11.7 million students in the fall of 1980, is expected to bring enrollment in institutions of higher education to another all-time high. College enrollment, however, appears to be nearing its peak.

Fellowships Offered

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The National Research Council will again advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of Graduate Fellowships. Awards will be announced in March 1981.

Eligibility in the NSF Graduate Fellowship Program is limited to those individuals who, at the time of application, have not completed more than 20 semester hours/30 quarter hours, or equivalent, of study in any of the science fields listed below following completion of their first baccalaureate degree in science. New fellowships awarded in the Spring of 1981 will be for periods of three years, the second and third years contingent on certification to the Foundation by the fellowship institution of the student's satisfactory progress toward an advanced degree in science.

These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Applicants must be citizens of the United States, and will be judged on the basis of ability. The annual stipend for Graduate Fellows will be $4,800 for a twelve-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

Applicants will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test aptitude and scientific achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on December 13, 1980 at designated centers throughout the United States and in certain foreign countries.

The deadline date for the submission of applications for NSF Graduate Fellowships is November 26, 1980. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

Centerboard Committees Are in Full Swing

by Patty Rauschenberger

On Wednesday, Sept. 17, 1980 Juniata's Centerboard Committee held their first meeting.

The main business included events for this fall. A major event is the Concert Committee's October 16th concert, AMERICA. Centerboard together with WKVR are sponsoring this event. Advertisement has already begun. Prices are $7.00 students, $8.50 non-students, and $10.00 at the door. The concert committee is hoping for a big turnout, 2000 people are needed to break even.

Other fall events include HOMECOMING, PARENTS WEEKEND, and MOUNTAIN DAY. All the committees are in full swing to make each a success.

The Films committee has made several improvements this year. Programs are being made which will include the titles of the films and a brief description of each movie. Classical movies are on order to be shown before each feature film at no extra charge. The new quality sound system purchased for Oller Hall has made a noticeable improvement in the sound of the films.

For further information on the proceedings of this meeting look for the minutes which are posted on the bulletin boards in Ellis or see the Centerboard contact, Russ Cameron.

Women Like Life in Cloister Arch

by Nancy Gonlin Mary King

Starting last year, improvements have been made in Cloister. These include new beds, bedding and paneling in some of the rooms. It is planned that all rooms will be paneled and all doors will be replaced in Cloister. The reason for these improvements was the necessity for renovation, and not, in compliance with Cloister going co-ed.

Cloister was made co-ed because of the increasing proportion of women to men on campus. This being the first year of co-ed Cloister, residents of Cloister Wing and Arch were interviewed for an insight on any possible problems.

As the women occupy only the Arch, one resident suggested that the separated Wing and Arch eliminates the possibility of problems arising. All residents interviewed agreed that there are no current problems or resentment and foresee no future problems. One female resident felt that if the men resented the women at first they were gentlemen about it. A majority of the women feel there has been no resentment from the men. They all enjoy living in the Arch.

Housing Director, Mr. Lynetty, has heard no complaints. He feels lifestyle has improved and the presence of the women may have helped to tone down Cloister's traditional obstreperous image. Residents disagree. Cloiser is keeping up its tradition.

Indian Spikers Poised For Successful Season

Hoping to better last year's fourth-place finish at the AIAW Division III Eastern Regionals, the Juniata College volleyball squad opens its 1980 season Saturday, Sept. 20, hosting Bucknell and Clarion at 6:00 p.m.

"This is the best team we've ever had in three major respects," says fourth year coach Larry Bock. "We've never had better talent, we've never had more experience, and owing partly to the latter fact, we should play with unprecedented confidence."

While the Tribe returns seven letterwinners from last fall, however, depth could be a problem. Bock lost letterwomen Bridget Canon and Jean Wood during the summer and now the reserves are depleted.

In addition, 1979 MVP Amy Bowser, a senior setter-hitter, tore several ligaments in her ankle and will be sidelined during the early stages of the season.

Nonetheless, Bock's starting line-up will be extremely strong. Senior Julie George — 1978 MVP — returns at middle blocker, along with sophomore Sue Maclachlan, giving the Tribe one of the best middle games in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Sophomore Claudia Tweardy, rated as one of the premiere setters in the East, is back following a stellar frosh campaign. Tweardy will be the Tribe's lone setter until Bowser's return, when they will share the load.

To prepare for playoff action, the Indians will face their toughest schedule yet. Top dual and triangular foes include the likes of Edinboro — "the best team we'll ever have faced" — and York. Leading contenders in tourney action will be old nemesis Western Maryland, Cornell, Grove City, Fredonia and Mansfield, all of whom appear in October's Mansfield Invitational.

In the MAC, where the Tribe hopes to improve upon last season's third-place finish, Western Maryland is again the team to beat, having taken six straight encounters from the Tribe.

"We're playing the best teams we can," notes Bock. "We'll probably lose a few during the regular season, but the level of competition should help when the playoffs roll around. It should make us a better team, and a good record against those people won't hurt us in getting bids."

The complete Indian schedule:

Sept. 20, Bucknell & Clarion; 24, at Susquehanna; 27, St. Francis; 30, Penn State-Altoona.

Oct. 2, at Dickinson; 3, Pitt-Johnstown; 4, at Indiana (Pa.) with Edinboro; 9, Gettysburg; 10-11, at Washington (Md.) Tournament; 14, at St. Francis; 16, at Penn State-Altoona; 18, York & West Chester; 23, Elizabethtown; 24-25, at Mansfield Invitational; 28, Messiah.

Indian Stickers Primed For Opener

HUNTINGDON — Attempting to fashion its first winning season in seven varsity tries the Juniata College field hockey team will open its 1980 season Saturday, Sept. 20, visiting Western Maryland for an important Middle Atlantic Conference SouthWest Section contest.

Despite the loss of nine letterwomen, fourth-year coach Nancy Latimore feels this may be the year the Indians turn the corner with their program. "We have a number of very talented players returning, plus a potentially outstanding freshman class," she notes. "Even with our personnel losses, we have the talent to secure a winning record."

The Tribe opens with an improved Terrier squad and the level of competition remains high throughout the season. In the MAC SouthWest Section, Dickinson appears stronger, but Gettysburg again rates as the team to beat. Among independent foes, defending Division III national champ Shippensburg should be tough.

There will be a host of new faces in the starting lineup, especially on the attack, when senior striker Bonnie Cieslar is the only returner. Sophomores Rita Peachey and Michelle Ubaghs will battle for the other striker position.

On the wing, four freshmen are competing for starting berths. Liz Able and Nancy Fieldman have shown promise, as have classmates Patty Price and Pam Spencer.

Sophmore Kathy Murphy returns at one link position following a stellar freshman campaign. "We must get more offensive production from our links and Murph is ideally suited to do this," Latimore says.

Sophomore Lori Stewart and freshman Heidi Loomis are battling for the start on the other side.

On defense, where the Tribe is strongest, the halfback line returns intact, two outstanding freshmen enter at sweeper, and a two-year starter returns in the goal.

Sophomore Claire Warmerdam and junior Debbie Smith join junior Barb Pearson — 1979 Tribe MVP — to form one of the MAC's top halfback lines.

At sweeper, freshmen Laura Babiash and Theresa Sagan have been impressive in pre-season drills.

In goal, junior Nancy Young returns for her third year as a starter. Young recorded three shutouts last fall while compiling an .814 save percentage.

"Our goal, then, is to go over the .500 mark," Latimore concludes. "We have the talent — Cieslar, Pearson, Warmerdam and Young received USFHA all-star recognition last fall — and if we have necessary dedication and desire, we should be successful."

The complete Indian schedule:

Sept. 20, at Western Maryland; 24, at Frostburg; 27, Lycoming.

Oct. 2, Dickinson; 4, Centre County Club; 8, Gettysburg; 10, at Susquehanna; 11, at Lycoming; 15, Messiah; 25, Rider; 30, at Shippensburg.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

I lost a good friend this summer; we went back a long time, to about third grade. As lives go, he had a pretty full one, but now it's over.

When he died an era died with him. For over thirty years he coached Little League Baseball, the way it should be coached. He taught them how to hit, field, and throw, but more importantly, he taught them sportsmanship. Not every kid he coached went on to play high school and college baseball (quite a few did) but nearly everyone went on loving it.

Mr. "K" didn't die in the physical sense, but when he quit coaching a part of him, and every kid who ever played for him, was lost forever. He didn't quit because he lost his love of coaching, or kids. He quite because he was disgusted. Disgusted with the parents, the administration, and most of all, with the direction in which the program seems to be headed.

For a time I couldn't understand his reasoning, after all didn't he still have an obligation to the kids he coached? I mean, that's what Little League is for, the kids. Right?

I had a chance to find out for myself when my friend Al asked me to help him coach the team that Mr. "K" had left. It was an experience that neither of us will ever forget.

In five short weeks I learned more about sports, parents, and league officials than I care to remember. It all started in a rather innocent way. Al and I agreed that our main objective was to teach every kid, (from start to batboy) to enjoy the game. It seemed that the league agreed with us since they had a rule stating that every member of the team must play at least five innings a week.

The trouble started when we tried to put the rule to the test. After just a couple of weeks irrate parents and angry league officials began calling, then visiting us. It seems the rule wasn't intended to be taken literally. Johnny's mom was sure that Billy wouldn't mind sitting out so Johnny could play more. Even though the players were satisfied, the parents hated us. We were regarded as commies, no one played every kid. It's the American way, compete, compete, compete.

It was the fifth week of the season, and we were playing Huber Fuel, (a rather weak team), by the third inning we were leading 14-3, and the game was in the bag. Al put in one of the ten year olds for our twelve year old third baseman, Tommy, who had already batted five times. That's when the fireworks started. Tommy's dad stormed in the dugout, cursed us with words seldom heard outside of prison, then literally dragged his son home.

Two days later, after meeting with parents and league officials, we both quit. Little League Baseball was designed to do far more than produce future proballplayers. If we wanted we could start producing teams like Taiwan, where only the good players get to play.

If we are going to disregard the ethical principles, and reduce it to simple physical competition, why not just put the uniforms on the parents.

Indians Fall

by Scott A. Lehigh

Juniata and C.W. Post smashed helmets for the first time ever this past Saturday. For the Tribe it was their opener as well as the first regular season game for Juniata's new head coach, Rob Ash.

C.W. Post opened the scoring on a two yard run, 10 minutes into the first quarter, making the score 6-0.

The Indians, using their new Veer offense, sustained their first real drive in the second quarter only to be stopped on the six-inch line on what appeared to be a Mike Nett touchdown run. C.W. Post took over and on the next play tied an NCAA record with a 99 yard touchdown pass, thus making the score 12-0 in favor of Post.

Juniata freshman place-kicker Jack Hench put some new ink in the record books for the Tribe. Before the half ended he booted a 43 yard field goal tying the old record.

Starting the second half the Tribe again marched down the field, this time scoring on a Mike Nett touchdown run. However, Post, using their physical strength and size, drove on the Indians for two touchdowns and trapped them for a safety with the final score coming to C.W. Post 28, Juniata 10.

The Indians had some individual standouts for the game. Junior running back Tom Bell squirted for 87 yards on 25 carries while classmate Mike Nett completed 11 for 25 passes for 117 yards and one interception. Five of those passes were caught by Senior tight end Mike Valdisetri, proving to be his most productive day ever as an Indian. The Tribe's defense was lead by sophomore linebacker Bob Waszak making 15 tackles, 10 of which were solo. Junior tackles Matt Blauch and Dan Jendizejewski combined for 19 total tackles.

The Indians will appear this Saturday at College Field for the home opener and Homecoming game against Albright, who suffered a 45-3 smashing by Lycoming this past weekend.

Soccer Stumbles

by Chris Kanaskie

The Juniata College Soccer team began its second varsity season last Saturday against a powerful Elizabethtown College team, which is perenially a national power in Division III. E-town showed their power in a devasting 12-0 romp of Juniata.

Not only did E-town dominate on the scoreboard, but in all aspects of the game as well. Juniata was thoroughly out-skilled, out played and out manned. They were out manned because E-town was able to substitute early and often in the game. Juniata's inability to do this left them with a very tired team for a good deal of the game.

Sophomore stopper Jeff Dougherty, one of the people who played the entire 90 minutes of the match, offered the following comments. "We can't let this game get us down. We must be realistic here at Juniata about our level of play. We are a young, inexperienced team who must take everything one step at a time. We must realize this. As far as today's game was concerned, we all gave until we could give no more. I think we must utilize our entire team. We are going to play our hardest and try to the best of our ability."

The opening five minutes of the match looked very promising as Juniata took control and forced the flow of play their way. About ten minutes into the game an unfortunate thing happened. On a direct free kick from 30 yards out E-town was given a goal that never should have happened. Following this goal the entire tempo of the game changed.

What followed was amazing. Eleven goals and total domination by E-town. Most of these goals were caused by weak fundamentals in the J.C. team.

The difference in the quality of play between Juniata and E-town was like night and day, but despite the score, the Indians showed a lot of heart and determination throughout the match. They never gave up.

Says goalie Steve DiMarco, "I don't feel we played to our fullest potential. A couple of early mishaps lowered our spirits. This game, against the toughest foe we will face all season, is not indicative of the level of play we are capable of. I feel certain we will do better in our next game."

Juniata will travel to Selinsgrove on Wednesday, September 24, to face Susquehanna University.

Volleyball Begins

by Duane Wright

The Indian Volleyball team got off to a great beginning this season by defeating a veteran Clarion State team and a tough team from Bucknell in a three team event at Memorial Gym Saturday.

The Indians defeated the veteran team from Clarion 15-8, then saw Clarion beat Bucknell 15-11 and 15-7. Then the Indians beat Bucknell 15-9 and 15-1.

The Indians won using the offense and passing that has made them one of the better teams in the area. The team showed good preparation, hustle and teamwork throughout the matches. The Indians are 2-0 and play at Susquehanna and at home against St. Francis and then play at Penn State-Altoona next Tuesday.

C C Opens Season

The mens and womens first double dual cross-country meet was held under last Saturday's boiling sun at College Field. Dave Miller of Gettysburg was the winner in the 5.6 mile race in a time of 31:29. The Indian men suffered a humiliating defeat from the Bullets of Gettysburg, losing 15-45, with five Gettysburg runners crossing the finish line before Juniata's first runner, Tom Wise. Messiah had its own problems, losing to both Juniata (20-43) and to Gettysburg (19-44). After Messiah's first runner came in, Juniata placed nine runners before Messiah's second man finished. Juniata's first five men were Tom Wise, Bill Shuler, Greg Kidd, Tom Hoffman, and George Peterson.

The women didn't fair as well, as they dropped a heartbreaker to Messiah, losing by one point, 28-29, and losing so Gettysburg, 26-30. The winner over the 3.2 mile course was Sue Fetherholf of Gettysburg with a time of 21:10. The first five Juniata women were: Carolyn Andre, Dana Taylor, Mickey Pitale, Robin Bardman and Jeanne McLaughlin.

Century II Campaign Underway

4 Million Still Needed to Fund Sports Center

by Patty Rauschenberger & Chris Corry

The Century II Campaign officially commenced on Sept. 27 as the leadership team gathered in Alumni Hall. Thirteen million dollars is needed to complete the objectives of the massive development project which is scheduled to be completed by 1990.

The Sports and Recreation center is the most expensive of the six objectives, costing an estimated four million dollars. The center will be right next to the existing gym, where the parking lot is now located. New entrances and lobbies will be built on both the Ellis side of the gym and the side facing Beeghly Library. The current lobby will be expanded to include a Hall of Fame.

Two new regulation size basketball courts will be included on the upper level of the addition. These courts are meant to provide more time to Intramural sports and should step up I.M.'s by two hours.

A six-lane 25 meter (83 feet) swimming pool is to be on the lower level. Adequate space to erect bleachers has been provided should the need arise. The large all-purpose room will accommodate such sports as baseball, hockey and archery during bad weather. A dance studio, a weight-training room, a sauna and steam room, four handball courts, racquet-ball courts, and a wrestling area are other features of the future gym.

A first-aid training room, a coat room, new offices for coaches, faculty lockers (20 for each sex), and increased locker space for non-varsity sports are also planned. An equipment room is conveniently situated in the center of the complex so that it can simultaneously hand out intramural and varsity equipment.

A concrete, patio area has been suggested for right outside the gym lobby facing the library. This tree-lined space would have benches and could serve as a meeting and conversation area for the campus.

The football field is also to benefit from the funds. The stands are going to be elevated and expanded so that each of the fifteen hundred seats will command an optimum view. Locker rooms will be built underneath the stands and will be used by varsity sports such as football, soccer, softball, field hockey and cross country. This arrangement should take a strain off of the major facilities. New public rest rooms are also in the plans.

Renovations and campus development are included in the second objective. Special projects, to cost a total of 1.5 million, are the "refurbishment of Oller Auditorium, campus beautification, energy conservation, physical plant improvements, tennis court renovation, and the renovations of Founders Hall."

The Library Endowment Fund is to be increased according to the third objective of the campaign. Two million dollars is alloted for this goal.

One million will be spent on increased scholarship assistance.

Judge Named To Developmental Council

The Honorable Charles C. Brown, Jr., Judge of the Centre County Court of Common Pleas, has been named chairman of the President's Development Council at Juniata College, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder announced this week.

In making the announcement, Dr. Binder noted that Judge Brown — a Bellefonte native and 1959 Juniata graduate — will chair the 50-member council for a three-year term. The council meets semi-annually on the Juniata campus.

"We look forward to Judge Brown's energetic and effective leadership," said Dr. Binder, noting that the Judge most recently served Juniata as chairperson of the 1978-79 Annual Support Fund, to which a record 52 percent of the college's alumni contributed.

Judge Brown, who succeeds William E. Swigart, Jr., of Huntingdon in the post, will lead the council, which provides volunteer leadership for major development campaigns, both capital and annual. It also advises the college administration about plans for campus development and provides leadership for various other projects.

Centre County Common Pleas Court Judge since January, Judge Brown received his law degree from the New York University School of Law in 1962, having studied as a Root-Tilden Scholar.

Prior to his appointment as Judge, he served Centre County as district attorney for 12 years and was a partner in the Bellefonte and State College law firm of McQuaide, Blasko and Brown, Inc.

Judge Brown, who previously served as a member of the President's Development Council, also served a three-year term as an alumni representative to the college's board of trustees. He further has served his alma mater as president of its National Alumni Association, as a class fund agent and as a regional campaign chairman for its $10-million

Nieto Named Adjunct Professor at McCormick

Dr. Jose C. Nieto, Juniata College professor of religion and chairman of the department, has been invited to serve as an adjunct professor at McCormick Theological Seminary (Chicago), where he will teach a course about "Spanish Church Reformers."

The course, which is being offered for credit as part of McCormick's Latino Theological Studies Program, will be conducted over a two week period, from Sept. 29 through Oct. 3, and from Nov. 3 through Nov. 7.

Dr. Nieto, an accomplished scholar and author about the Spanish Reformation, will utilize two of his books in teaching the course: "Juan de Valdes y los Origenes de la Reforma en Espana e Italia" ("Juan de Valdes and the Origins of the Spanish and Italian Reformations") and "Mystic, Rebel, Saint: A Study of St. John of the Cross."

During the first week of the course, Dr. Nieto will focus upon Spanish Church reformers in Spain, and during the second week, upon Spanish Church reformers in exile.

Explaining that McCormick is a "pioneering institution in addressing the needs of Hispanics," Dr. Nieto observes that his course will be taught in Spanish, as are many of the courses in the seminary's bilingual graduate programs.

Dr. Nieto further notes that Hispanic students from across the U.S. attend McCormick, where they are able to incorporate courses taught by a number of professionals into their degree programs.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1967, Dr. Nieto holds a Th.M. degree and a Ph.D. from the Princeton Theological Seminary,

U.N. Calls for Cease Fire

Iraq has agreed to a U.N. call for a cease fire in the fighting. Iran, however, refuses to agree with the cease fire order and has warned other Persian Gulf states that if they do not stop assisting Iraq, Iran will declare war on them as well.

Independent Candidate John Anderson spoke out against politically active religious organizations claiming that they are failing to maintain a separation between the church and the state.

In light of the Iran-Iraq war, a cold winter this year will force the International Energy Commission to put into effect its Emergency Mechanism, which will call for the United States and 21 other countries to share oil.

EDITORIAL

There is a time during an editor's life that causes premature writer's cramp and a coincidental loss of words. Words flow but ideas don't. We could write on end about trite happenings on campus that aren't worth mentioning, but we do because we just wanted to complain, anyway.

We sometimes view ourselves as the insurgents trying to rise and overcome those wicked perpetrators — the administration. By complaining and pointing out some of the misdeeds on this campus, we on this newspaper's editorial staff are trying to make life better for all on this campus. Too many times we cut down rather than praise. When something noteworthy does happen, we try to mention it — either in the editorial or, as in most cases, in a straightforward news article.

We are human and we tend to bitch too often. The only time that praise is evocked from us, it is something out of the ordinary. We forget to extrol the ordinary.

Even we forget that we have the right to say anything we want in this paper. Freedom of the press is taken for granted until it becomes regulated or censored. Sometimes we get chided for our views, but it was printed because we have the right to express ourselves.

Even we as students forget how lucky we are to be here. An opportunity like this (a college education) only comes to a very small percentage of the world's population. Yet most of us do not make the most of this unique opportunity. We go through college anxiously awaiting our hallowed graduation date. It is expected to want to move on in life, but some of us feel that college is a chore, something we are forced to do. College is not a chore; it is to be savored and not rushed. Each experience must be lived to the fullest, whether it is good or bad. We are here to grow. You can't grow by gobbling down your food. You have to chew it slowly and enjoy each bite.

Funds will be granted on both need and merit.

A wide variety of projects are being planned under the fifth objective in an effort to improve the educational program. Two million dollars will be spent on "audio-visual aids, laboratory equipment, computer assisted instruction techniques, new and special courses, research and travel programs for faculty, and on-campus programs and lectures."

The last goal of this massive campaign will help take the strain off the annual budget, which last year exceeded $8.5 million.

The interest shown by the student body was a factor in the decision to build a sports center. Eighty-five percent of the student body participates in Intramural sports. The complex is not intended to expand the varsity sport program as much as it is aimed at providing each student with the opportunity to participate in a variety of athletic activities.

Five hundred thousand dollars, or 13% to 14%, has already been raised for the Sports center. This money was raised in only five months; the remainder of the 4 million needed for the center will hopefully be raised during the next two years.

Dr. Frederick Binder is "delighted with the positive attitude shown by everyone to make this campaign work."

Campaign leadership includes: Edwin L. Kennedy as Honorary Chairman, Henry H. Gibbel as General Chairman, and Dorothy Lehman Hershberger as Assistant General Chairman.

Q — If the Presidential Election were held today, who do you think would win and why?

Joe Spaeth — Reagan, because the American people don't have the intelligence to know what is good or bad for them.

Sandy Nicholas — I think Ronald Reagan would win because Carter has done such a bad job.

Randy Nolen — Reagan — because I feel that the American people are looking for a change for the better, which Carter has not produced.

Eileen Suber — Each candidate has his good points as well as his bad points. In the future months one candidate will hopefully stand out. This is the candidate I will choose.

Parade Highlights Homecoming

by Kathy Novak

Juniata's 1980 homecoming queen was crowned Saturday during halftime of the Juniata vs. Albright football game to climax this year's homecoming weekend. Other events included in the festivities was a parade, an "Almost Anything Goes" competition and a carnival.

Mindy Anderson, last year's queen, crowned Betty Ann Sahlaney as this years homecoming queen. Attendants from each class comprising the court were: Barbie Simpson, senior; Kelly Walasik, junior; Clair Warmerdam, sophomore; and Patty Price and Kelly Hussey (tie), freshmen.

Floats, bands, and the homecoming queen nominees and their attendants made up most of the Saturday morning parade which traveled from Huntingdon to Juniata College. Ed Kaminsky, Janet Lewis, Jay Buchanan and Kim Richardson judged the floats at the start of the parade on originality, creativity, following the theme of "Carnival," attractiveness and enthusiasm of the participants.

Lesher won the dorm float competition, followed by Tussey/Terrace in second place and a tie between North and South for third.

The junior class won the class float competition with the senior class placing second.

"High Octane" won the "Almost Anything Goes" competition held on Friday afternoon. Three events comprised the competition: the amoeba run, where members were tied together and raced to the other side of the field; an obstacle course and a clothes change, in which team members dressed and undressed in various articles of clothing.

Members of the winning team included: John Farrugia, Paul Cardish, Sandy Good, Diana Griffis, Bethanne Hare, Richard Fonda, Louis Kalkines, and Margaret Stover.

"Moonshiners" won second place in the competition. The team consisted of Sue Torcivia, Rich Schwartz, Rick Bungan, Pat Hepner, Sue Brown, Lenora Golamis, Carol Johnson, and Lynn Goodale.

Oller Lawn was the setting for a carnival held Friday evening and Saturday. The most popular attraction was a dunking booth in which faculty members and students participated.

Other attractions included a ferris wheel, a merry-go-round and a scrambler.

I've seen toilet paper hanging from trees.
I've seen fires set in dumpsters.
I've walked on water in the hallway.
I've walked on glass in the bathroom.
Juniata my feet hurt.
Juniata Truth Sets Free.
Juniata I was ignorant when I was a kid, I'm not sorry.
The truth is I'm no longer ignorant.
The truth is I love to learn.
The truth is I love to study.
The truth is I don't study for tests.
The truth is I study for me.
Juniata when will you let me learn my truth?
When will you respect my privacy?
When will you see me through my eyes?
When will the toilet paper and broken glass and fires and hidden costs and truth disappear?
Juniata never.

Wake up, I'm addressing you.
Juniata fire your custodians and sniff.
Juniata smell the truth.
You'd better consider your tower of truth.
Your tower of truth consists of approximately 1200 students 600 joints of marijuana 10 hits of acid 2 administrative feet in 1 mouth a fallen Arch an unprintable bathroom wall that goes 1000 miles an hour and approximately 1200 truths.
Juniata remember Elvis Presley.
Remember Freddy Prinze.
Juniata you drink to forget.
Juniata admit it.
Juniata I have a confession to make:
I went to a party and didn't have fun.
I took a girl to my room and she didn't stay
I broke a bottle once to shatter my own anger.
Juniata I was angry at you.
It occurs to me that I am part of Juniata.
How can I live with myself?

Juniata I care.
I care enough to clean your broken glasses.
I care enough to shake your hand.
I care enough to shake my fist.
Juniata I haven't even mentioned the flying furniture.
I hear that flying furniture is intense. Broken brooms are intense. Swallowed goldfish are intense. Puke is intense. 4:00 a.m. is intense.
Everything is intense but me.
Juniata this is quite serious.
This is the impression I get from looking into Muddy Run.
Juniata is this correct?
It's true I'm skipping class today — I'm going to walk around campus and study the broken-bottle truth.
Juniata I'm setting the truth free.

Geology, Service and Outdoors Highlighted

Editor's Note — Extracurricular activities are as much a part of college as studying. Each week, three of Juniata's organizations will be delved into to see what they are about, what they are doing, and how one can become a member.

The Andrew Lawson Geological Society gives an opportunity for anyone interested in geology to get together. Membership is always open. Bi-monthly meetings are on Wednesdays at 8 o'clock. Tentative events of Andy Lawson include a museum trip, a speleological adventure and Mr. Bill Martin is to speak to the group about opportunities in the job market and graduate school. Officers are President Dana Cope, Vice-president David Shenberger, Treasurer Mimi Cummins, and Secretary Vicki Meyer. Juniata's geology professors, Dr. Mutti, Dr. Trexler and Dr. Washburn advise the organization. Andy Lawson's next meeting will be held October 8th.

Interested in helping the community or raising money for charity? Then Circle K Club is for you. This club is a social service organization. Circle K is responsible for recruiting donors for the blood mobile. Last year they held the M.S. Marathon. Tentative events for this year include a special olympics and perhaps a Halloween party for the elderly of downtown apartments. President Fay Youngmark heads the organization. Becky Smiley is the Vice-president, Sherilyn Jackman is Treasurer and Cindy Schierl the Secretary. The Kiwanis Club of Huntingdon sponsors Circle K. On-campus advisors are Mrs. Cherry and Foster Ulrich. Circle K holds its meetings on the first and third Mondays of each month at 8 o'clock in the Circle K office in the basement of Ellis. There are no membership requirements and one may join any time.

The Outing Service (Laughing Bush Enterprises) is here to offer everyone a good time. This organization rents equipment (such as tents, canoes, skis), sponsors trips and holds coffeehouses. The Outing Service has planned many fall events. The Hawk Mountain trip offers camping on the Appalachian Trail. On October 29th, a trip to Trough Creek is planned. Another event at the beginning of November is a rock climbing slide presentation and a demonstration on the High Climbs. Two fall coffeehouses are also on the agenda. To rent equipment or partake in the trips visit Laughing Bush during mealtimes. Directors are Jeff Taylor and Cindy Goldstein.

America Concert Coming Soon

by Maureen Morr'ssey

Juniata's Concert Committee has been busy lately putting together the October 16 AMERICA concert. This past week's meeting included discussions on radio promotion, posters for advertisement, security and ticket sellers.

The committee is hoping to sell 2000 tickets to break even but profit is not their only motivation. The members get satisfaction in just bringing great entertainment to Juniata and this attitude prevails throughout their meetings.

The committee is interested in getting another big-name band but a lot is involved in doing so. The band's agent must first be contacted. Then the story of the group's schedule comes into the picture along with money. The chances of another top group playing Juniata depends on the success of the AMERICA show. Since Juniata's students have such diverse tastes in music, it would be difficult to have a group play that would please everyone.

Tickets for the AMERICA show go on sale Thursday at 11:00 in the Blue Room in Ellis. Prices are $7.00 for J.C. students, $8.50 for non-students and $10.00 at the door. And be sure to stay tuned to WKVR for AMERICA music specials to warm you up for the real thing.

Chamber Orchestra Visits Juniata

by Ruth Batik

Last Tuesday evening the Juniata College Artist Series presented its first event of the '80-81 season, and it would have been difficult to find a more excellent and entertaining program than that given by the New York Pro Arte Chamber Orchestra. Under the direction of its founder, Raffael Adler, the 12-member string orchestra performed a program of works by Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, Ernest Bloch and Felix Mendelssohn. With superb technical execution and interpretation the orchestra led the audience through a series of intricate, structured pieces.

Although captivated by the audial effect, many listeners were surprised at the appearance of the orchestra. After coming onstage in formal attire the musicians performed while standing instead of following the more traditional, formal custom of playing while seated. But one of the musicians later explained to me that they feel this habit improves their ability to project the sound they are creating. Also, the unorthodox (but quite proper) conducting habits of Mr. Adler disconcerted some of the more observant audience members. These points, along with the charming comments offered by Mr. Adler in the middle of the program, provided an informal, interesting twist to an evening of formal entertainment.

The next Artist Series event will be The Ensemble For Early Music, on Tuesday October 21. Season tickets are still available.

The Rolling Stones — Emotional Rescue

"I think the time has come/to get up and get out/into something new," sings Mick Jagger on the surprising first song on this album, Dance. Reflecting the New York night club scene, which Jagger and Keith Richards have become a part of, Dance is a funky, soul-infused song that's so compelling your feet start moving by themselves when you hear it. It is a change for the Stones, but this pure funk sounds fresh, vibrant and alive.

In the same vein is Emotional Rescue. It reminds one of Miss You from the album Some Girls. The falsetto vocals, background synthesizer and plucked bass combine to form another downright pop-funk tune. This breakaway song comes on even stronger than Miss You. It's bound to shock and outrage some old Stones fans, most of whom won't admit the word "disco" exists, but it represents the group's musical progress and experimentation, as well as the environment in which Jagger and Richards now live, New York City — discoteque capital of the world. On top of this, it's simply a great song that should not be taken lightly.

Send it to Me is a joyful and fun reggae song. The dominant bass, scraping guitars and off-beat drums blend to form the Stone's own brand of reggae, a musical

Poly. Sci. Films

by Ruth Batik

The Political Science department of Juniata College will present a series of films about South African nations. Varying in age and perspective, the films offer insights into the character and growth of African countries. Each film will be shown twice on the scheduled date; once at 3:00 in Alumni Auditorium, and again at 8:00 in the basement of Beeghley Library. The dates are as follows: October 2, 6, 20, 23, 27, November 10 and 13. Admission is free and everyone is welcome to attend.

genre they've played before on the album Black and Blue.

Down in the Hole, a mournful electric blues tune, and Summer Romance represent the traditional Stones sound — Rhythym and Blues and Rock'n'Roll. In these songs, and also in Where the Boys Go and She's So Cold, the Stones prove they can still belt out the blues and roll out driving, rhythmic rockers. They still enjoy geting back to their roots.

While they are expanding into new musical areas, reflecting their artistry and lifestyles, the Rolling Stones have not become the commercial disco machine many people probably thought they had upon first hearing the title track. Emotional Rescue mixes fresh, trendy funk with what the Stones have always been known for — Rock and Roll. The result makes for some fine listening. And dancing.

More Instructors Hired

by Randal Anderson

The L.A. Beeghly Library has a new Technical Services Librarian for the 1980-81 academic year, John P. Mulvaney. Mr. Mulvaney is originally from Berkeley Heights, New Jersey. He holds a bachelor's degree in french from St. John's College in Collegeville, Minnesota, a master's in biblical hebrew from the University of Toronoto, and a master of library science degree from Rutgers. Before coming to Juniata, Mr. Mulvaney worked for five years at the Hill Manuscript Microfilm Library at St. John's and also for American Hoeshst, a chemical company. He is the Technical Services Librarian here, in charge of cataloguing all new library aquisitions. Mr. Mulvaney is unmarried and his hobbies include reading and listening to classical music.

The Juniata College Educational Department has two new professors for the 1980-81 academic year. They are Harriet E. Darling and Howard F. Long.

Ms. Darling is from Mitchell, South Dakota. She received her bachelor's and master's degrees from South Dakota State University, and has done her course work for a Ph.D. at the University of Maryland. She has previously taught at South Dakota State, was a graduate assistant at the University of Maryland, and worked for the Fairfax County, Virginia Office for Children. Here at Juniata, Ms. Darling is an instructor in Education and is in charge of the Early Childhood Center. She is single and her hobbies are reading and conversation, playing the recorder and singing in the choir at the Stone Church of the Brethren.

Dr. Long's hometown is Baltimore, Maryland. He graduated from Juniata in 1950, attended Harvard Business School, received an M.Ed. from Goucher College in Maryland (he was the first male graduate of this former girl's school), and a Ph.D. in Human Development from the University of Maryland. Before coming here he worked for ten years in the agricultural chemicals business, taught at private elementary schools for seven years, was a Fellow at the Institute for Child Study at the University of Maryland, and also taught at the graduate level there.

Social Service Tries to Place Volunteers

by Peg Whalen

The Social Service Club is back this year, stronger and more active than ever before. President Bonnie Cieslar described the club's proposed plans for the upcoming year. The primary focus this year is in placing volunteers from the campus in various county organizations. Some of these programs include the Child Day Care Center in town, Headstart, Easter Seals, Big Brother-Big Sister and Horsepower.

At their last meeting on Tues. Sept. 16, Pam Milner from Horsepower presented a film to the club. She described the program in which handicapped persons are rehabilitated through the care and riding of horses. Many of the club's twenty-five to thirty members expressed an interest in volunteering for Horsepower.

Another major program they are involved with is Big Brother-Big Sister. Karen Lee, the club's faculty advisor has collaborated with a teacher at the Juniata Valley Elementary School in inviting the activity. A volunteer in this program would be required to spend a few hours once a week for roughly six months with a child. The extensive expenditure of time insures that a relationship can develop in which the youngster will feel secure.

Headstart, an organization for preschool age children, is also in need of volunteers. The children come from low income families in the Huntingdon area. The program focuses on adequate nutrition and the other basic needs of a young child.

When asked what qualities a volunteer should have Bonnie said dedication to helping others and a willingness to make commitments of time and effort were necessary. Although volunteers receive no monetary reward for their work, the organizations in which they are involved are reimbursed by the state for every hour the volunteers work. The amount of money received from the government is based on the current minimum wage value.

In addition to volunteer placement the club is continuing with its annual fund raising. Already planned is the sale of carnations on Valentine's Day, which has been very successful in past years. The club also plans to observe National Handicap Awareness Week from Oct. 12 through Oct. 18. They have not yet decided on what they will do but a fund raiser seems likely.

The club has in previous years arranged for presentations on such topics as alcohol and drug abuse and family planning. They also hosted picnics and parties for students. This year the Juniata campus will benefit from some of the same interesting and industrious efforts of the Social Service Club.

High School Seniors to Visit Juniata

High school seniors who are interested in attending college — any college — are invited to attend a Visitor's Day at Juniata College on Saturday, Oct. 11.

Sponsored by Juniata's admissions office, the day is designed to acquaint high school seniors and their parents with an overview of the college experience.

Gayle W. Kreider, Juniata director of admissions, observes that "many high school seniors — who are preparing to attend college — don't really know much about the college experience. Visitor's Day will offer these students an opportunity to explore various aspects of college life and to have a wide-range of questions about college answered."

Visitor's Day will begin at 9:30 a.m. in the main lobby of Ellis College Center with registration, light refreshments and a tour of the building.

At 10 a.m., Mr. Kreider will welcome the visitors in the Ellis College Center Ballroom. Her welcome will include a brief overview of the day's activities and an introduction to Juniata's admissions staff.

During the next 40 minutes, a group of upperclass Juniata students will conduct a panel discussion about how their expectations of college were — or were not — met. Composed of both male and female students, the panel also will answer questions from the floor about college life.

At 10:50 a.m., the visitors will circulate freely around the Ballroom, where a faculty member from each of Juniata's academic apartments will be available at a table for discussion and questions.

In addition, four special tables — financial aid, athletics, career planning and placement and admissions — will be staffed by experienced Juniata personnel to answer specific questions about the college's services and opportunities in these areas.

A complimentary lunch will begin at 11:30 in Baker Refectory, the college's dining hall, during which the seniors and their parents will have an opportunity to converse with faculty members and students.

Following lunch, the day's formal activities will conclude with Juniata students providing tours of the campus. The tours will include residence halls, classrooms, laboratories and other campus buildings and areas.

Mrs. Kreider notes that high school seniors and their parents who are interested in attending should contact the admissions office at Juniata College by telephoning 814-643-4310, ext. 420.

Miles Sparks J.C. in Homecoming Win

by Steve Thomas

Saturday afternoon, in the first game of the season played on College Field, Rob Ash's Indians tamed the Albright Lions with a 35-10 lashing. The win evened the Tribe's record at 1-1, while the Lions fell to 0-2

The defensive play of the Indians had to please Ton Rogish. The tribe forced eleven turnovers and dropped the Lions nine times in their own backfield. The Lions' quarterbacks were a dismal 7-1-2 on the day. Juniata's Tom Devine and Ron Schaffer were responsible for the interceptions and jointly contributed 17 tackles to the Indians' cause. Working in the pits, the Indians' Matt Blauch provided 12 tackles, four of which were in the Lions' backfield. Mike Ford also displayed impressive defensive ability by knocking down nine Lions, a couple of their passes and recovering a fumble.

Juniata's defense gave a fine performance for the Homecoming game, but the offense too, showed spurts of brilliance. After Juniata's QB Mike Nett left the game with a sprained ankle midway through the second period, the Jeff Miles show began. Stepping in for the injured Nett, Miles burst over the right tackle and went 16 yards for a touchdown. It was Miles' first opportunity to play quarterback. Miles led the tribe with 102 years on 15 carries and in the passing department completed 4 passes on 10 attempts for 107 and two interceptions. Miles also threw two touchdown passes. Tom Bell had a little difficulty handling the ball, like everyone else on the field, but he utilized his deceptive quickness to pick up 98 yards on 20 carries.

Albright was first on the scoreboard with a 42 yard field goal with 7:31 remaining in the first period. The Lions only lead of the game was short-lived, however, as the Indians drove 83 yards in 10 plays on their next possession. Mike Nett went off left tackle to get the six that was followed by a Jack Hench kick.

Juniata's next drive started on their own 47 yard line and went down to the two, where Albright recovered a Tom Bell fumble. The Lions failed to get a first down and punted the ball. From the 38 yard line of the Lions, Nett connected on the 17 yarder to Ed Yablonski. Nett was injured on the next play. Miles followed with a 16 yard dash into the endzone. Hench missed the kick, but Juniata still commanded a 13-3 lead.

Juniata held Albright to four plays again. Taking over on the Albright 46, Miles pitched right to Bell, who carried the ball to the 25. Pat Davis spurted for six more yards to the 19. Miles, not one to waste time, hit Yablonski on the goal line to cap the three play scoring march. Hench's kick split the uprights and Juniata led 20-3. They took the lead into the locker-room for the half.

The third quarter was scoreless until the 5:20 mark. Following a Kevin Morrow fumble recovery on the Albright 33, Miles took the Tribe down the field again. Bell, on a 21 yard dash, brought the Indians to the 6 yard line. On fourth and goal, Pat Davis took a pitch wide around the right end for six. Tom Devine tossed to TE Bob Silsbee for the two point conversion. Juniata was up 28-3. The Indians owned the ball for over ten minutes in the third period, while the Lions never had more than four consecutive plays.

Miles was intercepted on the first play of the fourth quarter. Five minutes later the scoreboard changed to 28-10 as the Lions punched out 68 yards in 12 plays. It was the only real drive mounted by the Lions the entire game.

The next score came after Juniata recovered another Albright fumble on the JC 17 yard line. On the second play of the possession, Miles hit Eric Biddle with a short pass. Biddle raced 81 yards down the right sideline for a touchdown. Hench again followed with the extra point, and Juniata ended the game with a 35-10 win.

Shep Speaks

Shep Speaks
by Mark Infanti

I read a disturbing article today in one of the local papers. It seems that after one-hundred and eleven years college football's oldest rivalry is about to end. Since 1869 the orange and black of Princeton and the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers have met each fall for their traditional clash.

Like so many other traditions in sports this one seems to be a victim of the commercialization of college athletics. It's true that through a change in the emphasis of some college sports programs, the Ivy League and the NCAA schools have drifted apart; and a pretty solid argument can be made for eliminating Princeton from Rutgers schedule but I for one would hate to see it happen.

I'm sure that old timers can recall numerous close games between the two teams, and although I'm young, and the names don't stick with me, I also have some memories from Princeton-Rutgers games.

I remember a blustery November day about five or six years ago when the two teams met at Palmer Stadium in Princeton. I went with some friends from Rutgers, (even though inside I was for Princeton), and we sipped whiskey from alpine flasks, smuggled in under our coast.

The game was a battle of "no-names", neither team had any super stars, and both were suffering through mediocre seasons but it was a classic. A real defensive battle, with goal line stands at each end, bone jarring hits, and game saving tackles.

After a scoreless first half, Rutgers came out fired up, and scored on their initial drive. They went for the two point conversion and failed. For the next sixteen minutes the score stayed that way; then with virtually no time left on the clock Princeton scored on a desperation touch-down pass.

In their agony and escatasy the fans rushed on the field and tore down the goal posts. The referees were baffled, and had little choice but to rule that Princeton had to attempt the two point conversion. Rutgers held, and the game ended a tie.

Most fans would probably choose to see Penn State play Nebraska, and I doubt that the promoters would argue with them; yet I doubt that they will ever see a game with as much excitement and enthusiasm as that insignificant game between those two old rivals.

C.C. Tames Lions

by Bill Shuler

Performing in front of the largest crowd ever to witness the start and finish of a Juniata cross-country meet, the mens cross-country team put on quite a show for the Homecoming crowd. Bouncing back from last week's split decision against Gettysburg and Messiah, the Indian harriers (with several alumni runners also competing) abused the hapless Albright Lions 18-45. The Indian alumni also managed to inflict some damage on the Lions, as well as against their alma mater. Paul Wilson, a member of the infamous 1974 Indian squad, won the overall race with an excellent 30:58 clocking over the treacherous 5.6 mile run. Wilson was followed by senior captain Bill Shuler, the first scoring Indian. Jack McCullough, a teammate of Wilson from 'those glory years, was third, with sophomore Tom Wise close behind.

The cooler temperatures made for near perfect running conditions, and as a result several of the Indian runners had stellar performances. Following Shuler and Wise on the outing was freshman-flop-turned-sophomore-sensation, Huntingdon's own Tom Hoffman, then came George Peterson, LaRoy Castor, Andy Pearson and Greg "Dinky" Kidd to round out the top seven. Coach Don Mitchell was pleased with the teams performance and is optimistic towards future opponents. The Indians next meet will be the Johnstown Invitational on Saturday, October 4.

Field Hockey Wins 2 of 3

by Doug Wallace

The Juniata College women's field hockey team is 2-1 after three games this year. After defeating Western Maryland on the road, 3-0, the Indians traveled to Frostburg and were beaten by the Bobcats, 3-0. The Indian stickers then faced Lycoming in the first home game of the year, in front of a large Homecoming Day crowd. The team did not let the fans down, as they proceded to destroy Lycoming, 6-0. Freshman again dominated the scoring with Liz Abel leading the way with 1 goal and 3 assists, also scoring were freshman Pam Spencer who had 2 goals and 1 assist, freshman Patty Price with 1 goal and 1 assist, freshman Nancy Fieldman with 1 goal, and senior Bonnie Csislar with 1 goal. Goalie Nanci Young turned in another sterling performance with her second shutout of the year, and the fourth of her career. Young has yet to be scored on in MAC competition this year. The next game for the Indians will be on Saturday at home against the Centre County Club at 10:30.

Party Policies Basically Unchanged

Use Of Lounge Areas Encouraged By Increased Occupant Capacity

by Kathy Novak

Social functions at Juniata will be basically under the same regulations concerning the use of alcoholic beverages as last year. The emphasis this year seems to be placed on the utilization of the lounge areas provided by each dorm for social activities rather than halls, dorm rooms or stairways.

In order to encourage use of the recreation rooms for parties the capacity which the lounges can accommodate has been raised in several dorms across campus including South, Tussey-Terrace, Sherwood and East Houses. The number of half kegs available for consumption has also been increased in a few of the dorms.

The typical "Tower" parties are now nonexistent. The assemblage of students in the halls and stairwells constitutes a fire hazard and is in violation of the alcohol policies. This applies not only to East Houses but also to similar affairs anywhere on campus.

Non-alcoholic beverages must also be present at every party in a ratio of 15:1; that is, for every half a keg of beer, one gallon of non-alcoholic drinks must be supplied. A certain percentage of money must also go toward the purchase of food. Additional policies and guidelines were distributed to all students at the beginning of the term.

Failure to adhere to these policies will result in an administrative hearing before the Dean, from which further disciplinary actions may result.

RHA To Aid Residential Life Committee

The Residence Hall Association began its secnd year the beginning of September. It is a new concept at Juniata, initiated only last year. Prior to its establishment the only structure within the residence halls was the Resident Assistant on each floor.

The Residence Association was introduced because the administration felt that the Resident Life Committee was responsible for many decisions that required a greater student representation. The Residential Life Committee studied the concept of the Residence Hall Association and endorsed it.

The principle behind the association is student involvement. It provides a structure for self government. It is a breeding ground for student involvement and leadership. The Residence Association will get together with student government in the areas where they overlap and try to compliment each other.

This year a constitution was established governing the association. Student representatives are elected from each dorm along with two freshmen. All students are welcome to attend the meetings. The meetings are held regularly although there is no established meeting time.

The Residence Hall Association will plan events for Juniata Students such as competitions between dorms, dorm parties, and a variety of other activities.

Showers Drizzle In South

If anyone wondered why unprintable obscenities were heard from the bathrooms in South Dorm it was because of the mysteriously low water pressure in the showers. It was like trying to wash your hair in a light, spring drizzle. Obviously at 6:30 in the morning this was no picnic. "Uh . . . How much was the tuition again, Dad?"

Many of the bathers resorted to filling buckets with the slow falling trickle and then pouring it over their heads while the others could not be bothered and just did not shower.

This all lasted about five days, then the water pressure reappeared just as mysteriously as it had disappeared. No one seems to know why or how.

The girls in South are not worried about a reoccurrence, however. They were told by residents in Sherwood that they were more than welcome to use their showers anytime they wish.

Large Selections Enhance Artist-on-the-Hill

by Ruth Batik

On Saturday, as part of the parents weekend activities, various artists and craftsmen united to present the Artists-on-the-Hill show. Although attendance was low, those who did go really seemed to enjoy the displays and took advantage of the selection, which was excellent. Even though the number of displays was slightly smaller than usual, the quality and diversity of the show compensated for size. Anything from Christmas ornaments to jewelry to photography could be found along with more unusual items.

One such display was that of Ukranian Easter eggs, offered by a friendly older couple from Pittsburgh. The painted eggs hold special religious and cultural significance for the Ukranian people and their creation has become a finely developed art in itself. This couple offered intricately painted eggs, kits and equipment, and an eagerness to share their nationality and heritage with anyone who was interested.

Another artist displayed a more local, but equally unique, art: that of split oak weaving. This practical craft flourished in the Appalachian hills, but is seldom seen today. The young man who brought it to J.C. for the day explained that he does all of his own work; starting with a white oak sapling which he splits into fine pieces and from this he weaves durable and beautiful baskets, chairbottoms, etc.

Although some of the participants came a good distance, local talent was also present. Kevin Brown, a sophomore at Juniata, displayed his handmade candles, and Louise Heberling, a J.C. alumnus, offered pottery and unusual earthy mirrors and ornaments. Like most of the other artists Mrs. Heberling said her art is a creative outlet for her and participating in the show was an enjoyable activity.

So in spite of cloudy skies and cool winds, the Artists-on-the-Hill show was a rewarding and successful experience.

S.G. Introduces Student-Advisory Committees

by Eric Prutsman

Student government has now set up student-advisory committees that will serve as "checks" to help point out improvements that can be made in the security and maintenance areas. The advisory groups will work hand-in-hand with the security and maintenance departments to help foster a better relationship with the student body. Students that have an interest in serving on one of the Ad-Hoc committees are asked to contact Doug Klepfer through the Student Government office. Senators in charge of the committees are: Todd Gipe and Connie Warden, maintenance; Jim LeDane, security.

A committee for Food Service was originally planned but an alternative idea from the Director of Food Service, Norm Gopsill, has been suggested. Gopsill plans on inviting 20-30 students, per week, to eat a meal with him to find out changes that could possibly be looked into by Food Service. With 20 different students coming each week it is hoped that the limitations found with small, permanent groups will be avoided.

A topic brought up from a previous meeting was that of finding a way to keep the Senators in line and doing their jobs. A student government "informer" will be used to make sure (1) all freshman and sophomores received their Course and Teacher Evaluation Handbooks, (2) that there are refund signs on the vending machines, (3) the bulletin boards have up to date information on them, (4) that the Senator is making contacts with

Regan's Policy Labeled "Quicksilver" Economics By Carter

President Carter referred to Ronald Regan's proposed tax cut, increased defense spending and balanced budget as "Quick Silver Economics," claiming that such a plan will only benefit the rich while hurting the poor.

In what was termed the greatest maritime rescue of all time, 519 passengers were saved from certain death when the luxuary liner they were aboard caught fire in an Alaskan Bay.

After several air strikes, Iraq managed to sieze control of several strategic Iranian port cities. In the course of their attacks, it has been rumored that Iraq is also dropping booby-trapped pens and toys on other Iranian cities.

Who Are They

Trying To Kid?

A miraculous thing happens to Juniata every so often. This wonderful transformation can usually be observed only on special weekends of the year. When one walks around and observes the "green army" (blue crew) busier than usual and maintenance working harder than usual to fix what has been broken for so long and food service putting on its best spreads, it is almost guaranteed that someone is expected on campus.

President Carter's strategy of boycotting the summer Olympics was partially based on the loss of face the Soviets would suffer. After all, thousands of dollars were put into fixing up the city of Moscow so as to deceive the world about conditions in the Soviet Union. Those communists were trying to deceive the world! But the world would have known better, right? Well, maybe.

Juniata, unlike the poor Russians, is usually very successful in its deceptive ploys. Alumni and Parent's weekends were both recently celebrated at J.C. The grounds looked wonderful; the meals were exceptional. For those people in South Parent's weekend came along at a most opportune time. For days men had stood around staring at a broken steam pipe outside of South while people in South stared at dripping showers. Then miraculously the pipe was fixed and covered, working once again and looking good as new. Parents arrived the next day. And this year the Juniata planners were more clever than usual. Alumni weekend and Parent's weekend were scheduled consecutively, which minimizes effort, the major overhaul only has to be done once and merely tidied up the next week.

But now it is over, at least until the next Trustees Weekend. Who cares about the students who have to look at the place day in and day out, who have to eat here day in and day out. Who needs to impress them? It is the parents that have to be impressed as they are footing the bill; it is the alumni that have to be impressed so they give contributions (although they all know better and see through the deceptive ploy); it is the trustees that have to be impressed into believing that Juniata is flawless and that everyone performs to perfection.

Well the blue crew can relax and so can maintenance. And the food will get worse before it gets better (they have to make up for the extraordinary meals served the last two weekends somehow). It is business as usual, nothing special, no one cares. But when students observe a new flurry of activities around the campus again, expect company!

Letter to the Editor

"The Juniatian" welcomes letters from our readers. Letters should not exceed 350 words and must be received the Monday before the date of publication. All letters are subject to condensation by "The Juniatian" for space reasons. Anonymous letters will not be considered for publication.

The purpose of writing this letter is to express our dissatisfaction over the present system of funding hall projects by the Student Government.

The goal of hall projects, as stated to us by the SG, is to encourage hall unity. It is the SG's feeling, they have told us, that the more projects a hall has the more unity can be attained. Hence a standard of 15 dollars per project has been established (this figure applies to our hall). Regardless of the number of legitimate projects, $15 can be had.

What is our hall to do? 30 members and only $15; that is 50 cents per person. Here is our project outline for the rest of the term. Our goal is to achieve maximum hall unity, but at no cost to hall members.

Week 6 — Soda Party — We plan to essemble in the RA's room and walk down to the Quick Shopper together. Everyone can purchase a soda, any flavor. We shall then walk back to campus together. 30 sodas x 50 cents equals $15.

Week 7 — Candy Party — We plan to walk down to the A&P, for a change in scenery. Once again everybody will be limited to 50 cents, hopefully to buy two small candy bars. Once again we will return together.

Week 8 — Damn Trip — We want to do something different this week. We plan to rent a college 12-seat van for $14. Since we will be charged a mileage fee after 50 miles, only one van trip will be possible. So twelve of us will drive out to Seven Points in the van and split the remaining $1 for our lunch. Two sodas between 12 of us.

Week 9 — Cook-out — We will take our $15 and buy 3 sirloin steaks for 30 people. Hopefully with only 10 people to a steak all will get at least a bite of sirloin. But we will have all the water we can drink from our hall water fountains.

Week 10 — Paint Party — This week we want to paint our hall a

"I'm setting the truth free!" Oedipus screamed as he stood before Beeghly Library with a burning branch in his hand.

Socrates frowned.

"Yes, I'm setting the truth free!" Oedipus said again. "I'm burning down Beeghly Library. Beeghly promised to teach me the truth, but I've been unemployed since I graduated."

"You want to hear something funny?" Socrates asked.

"No mommy jokes." Oedipus warned.

"No, no, not that kind of funny," Socrates grinned. "You're blaming Beeghly for not teaching you the truth, but you put very little personal effort into your learning. I'm not sure you even know the truth, but if so, how is burning down Beeghly going to set it free?"

"It will set free the fact that Beeghly doesn't really teach the truth." Oedipus reasoned.

"And what is the truth?" Socrates asked.

"The truth is I'm unemployed!" Oedipus snapped angrily, still holding the burning branch high.

"No Oedipus," Socrates said, still shaking his head, "you ignored my question. What is the truth that Beeghly tried to teach you?"

"I . . . I never learned it." Oedipus admitted.

"Exactly." Socrates said. "You never learned it because you spent so much time with the girls. The whole campus knows that you slept with 1st Terrace, 2nd South, and 3rd Northwest."

"But I was taken from my parents when I was young." Oedipus protested with a wink. "I

Students Speak

Q — Are you in favor of Juniata converting to semesters?

Mark Cassel — No, although I see some major benefits in doing so. The changeover would cause too many problems for returning students and therefore outweighs the possible benefits.

Susan Evans — Yes, it allows for a more relaxed atmosphere and would allow for one long break as opposed to a lot of short ones. It also allows the senior class to graduate earlier in May.

Beth Ann Stravino — No, I am not. Financial advantages of a semester system should not outweigh the fine academic programs already established for a trimester program. The transition, with the conflicts of administration vs. faculty, would be chaotic. I don't think the students or the quality of Juniata education should be decreased.

David A. Heisterkamp — No, Juniata should remain unique in its trimester system. I've enjoyed the difference Juniata has provided with its scheduling and would be disappointed if the trimester were abolished. Keep Trimesters!

Club Corner

by Nancy Gonlin

Center Board, Alfarata, and Juniata Executives Club were interviewed this week to see what they are up to.

Center Board's objective is to improve the social life of Juniata's student body. It is responsible for numerous events. Anyone may join any committee under Center Board and help plan special events at any time. Center Board committees include Film, Dance, Concert, and the Artist Series. Special events brought to the student body by Center Board are Homecoming, Parent's Weekend, Mountain Day, Madrigal Dinner, Spring Fest, Raft Regatta and May Day. Russ Cameron is chairperson of Center Board; Scott Johnson, vice-chairperson; Dana Taylor, secretary; Nancy Law, committee liaison; and Ruth Ellen Klinger, liaison from Student Government. Center Board meetings are on Tuesdays at 3 o'clock. Office hours are 12:30 to 2:30 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

The Alfarata is Juniata's history book. This year's editor-in-chief is Janet Zuna. Bob Krizner is the business manager. The yearbook staff is composed of editors for various sections of the yearbook and the people who work under their direction. One can join the staff at any time. Various sections one can work on are Faculty (editor Barb Parks), Underclassmen (Betsy Frear), Clubs (Kathy Welch), Special Events (Aleta Yaskovitch), Sports (Lenora Golamis), Photography (Patty Squires), Business and Advertising (Bob Krizner), and the Senior Section (editor Cathy Hunt). Amy Powless is in charge of artwork for the yearbook. Professor Janet Lewis advises the yearbook staff. The staff meets when there is the need to. Contact Janet Zuna if you would like to be a part of this year's staff.

Juniata Executives Club gives those people interested in business a chance to practice planning and organizing. The members can take part in several committees. The Activities Committee is co-headed by John Agnew and Diane Hauck. Bob Krizner is the chairperson of the Accounting Committee. Co-chairpersons of the Marketing Committee are Milan Tweardy and Sandy DiFelice. Marianne Morgan heads the Internal Affairs Committee. George Bojalad is President of the Executives Club, Mary Burns the Secretary, and Joe Sloan the Treasurer. If interested in joining, one can contact any of the above officers at any time. Some of the club events include the dunking booth at the Homecoming carnival, a raffle for tickets to the America concert and a road rally. Members offer help in holding accounting tutorials and perform volunteer income tax assistance to the elderly of Huntingdon. The executive board meets bi-monthly. General meetings are held at least once a month. Committees meet when it is necessary to do so. Members must partake in one or more of the standing committees and pay dues of one dollar for the year. Contact any of the board members to join — membership is always open.

Out & About

Okay — Parent's Weekend is over. We all know what that means at the Baker Refectory. Those horrible little fish patties, lots of baked spaghetti and that meat loaf that needs a great deal of ketchup. What to do? Get to the Wrangler Steak House on route 22.

A group of us went the other night and it was good. We sampled steak, seafood, salad and potatoes. The salad bar alone was worth the trip. The average cost of each meal was about $5.00, which isn't too steep for a nice dinner out. The food, service and general atmosphere was satisfactory.

The set-up is a glorified cafeteria style in that everything but the main course is picked up via trays. When the main course is ready it is brought to your table by a waitress.

The atmosphere is very comfortable. The walls are decorated with fish, squirrels, deer and raccoon courtesy of a local taxidermist.

If anything The Wrangler Steak House offers Juniata students an option of where to eat. If the opportunity arises, go to the Steak House — it's a nice switch.

The Cars — Panorama

Panorama features elements which have become standard for the Cars: Ric Ocasek's "wierdo" lyrics (he pays no attention to what a word means, but how it sounds) and often disjointed rhythyms, a steady streamlined bass and drums section and layering — Successive layers of synthesizer and guitar riffs piled on the basic melody, creating a "crowded" sound.

Touch and Go, the single off the album, features some strong, clean drumming by David Robinson and an easy-flowing feel, not as incohesive as some of the tunes are. Elliot Easton adds some nice volume-pedal guitar, and Greg Hawkes' continuous synthesizer pervades the background. And, of course, Ocasek sings in his fifties-style vocal: "touch and go-uh-uh-oh-woh."

Don't Tell Me No is the best cut. It brings out the Cars' potential as a hard-rock band that still has originality, artiness, and a sense of humor.

Other good cuts are reminiscent of the Cars' earlier albums and their established sound — Gimme Some Slack, Misfit Kid and Down Boys. But there are several experimental tunes, like You Wear Those Eyes and Panorama that discredit the Cars — they're disappointments.

While there are a few good tunes here, nothing comes close to You're All I've Got Tonight, Let's Go or A Lot on My Head. Ocasek's growing experimentation and the increasing use of studio effects is disheartening; the Cars should get back to party music that five guys could really play onstage.

Females Organize

by Nancy Gonlin

Women's Programming is getting its events underway for 1980-81. At the meeting on September 30, fall events were being planned. Tentative events include a coffeehouse, a panel discussion on the presidential candidates' views on women's issues with guest speakers, and a wine and cheese party. Dates of these events will be decided upon in the near future.

Members enlisted in the various committees (Publicity, Entertainment, Communication, and Panel Discussion/Speakers) are to start planning events. The Communications Committee is new this year. The purpose is to communicate with other schools who have women's programming and exchange ideas with them.

The women discussed fund-raising activities, the possibility of having a reading room containing selected information especially helpful to women, and more support for women's athletic events.

Women's Programming is seeking a new name. A few suggestions were made at the meeting, but nothing substantial has been agreed upon yet.

The Publicity Committee plans to help expand membership by widely publicizing meetings and events. Women's Programming is open to suggestions all the time. Directors are Patti Cook and Lynn Goodale. The next meeting is October 6.

never even knew who they were. I need lots of love to relieve my frustrations. Besides, I was just doing a little extra work for my P.O.E."

"What was your P.O.E.?"Socrates asked.

"Deviant Behavior." Oedipus grinned.

Socrates was not amused: "Oedipus you're the type that asks for truth but looks for ignorance. You wouldn't know the truth if it stood right before you. You want to burn down Beeghly, but you rarely opened one of its books. You blame your free love life on the parents you never knew. What would you do it I told you that Beeghly is your true father?"

In answer, Oedipus threw the burning branch on the foot of Beeghly, and the library burst into flame.

"Oedipus!" Socrates screamed as if his very soul was aflame, "I was telling you the truth. Beeghly really was your father, and now you've killed him!"

Oedipus was dumbfounded, but too concerned about himself to mourn the dead.

"Then who is my mother?" Oedipus screamed, shaking Socrates by the neck. "I must know the truth Socrates! Who is my mother?"

"Lesher!" Socrates managed to choke out.

Oedipus gasped, released Socrates, and gazed toward the dorm. A halo of smoke shimmered above Lesher, seeming to anticipate Oedipus's coming. He had always felt a strange attraction towards Lesher, and now he understood why.

"I will join my mother." Oedipus said firmly as he walked off. "I will set the truth free."

Socrates sighed sadly, thinking that if Oedipus would have put as much into Beeghly as he was putting into Lesher perhaps he could "set the truth free," but first he had to face up to the truth about himself.

Socrates stared into the fire with watery eyes.

Oedipus limped towards Lesher with fiery eyes.

Faculty Member is Flutist on New Album

Diane W. Gold of State College, part-time instructional assistant in music at Juniata College, is the featured flutist on a recently-released recording album, "Music for Flute and Strings by Three Americans."

Recorded by Ms. Gold and the Alard Quartet — the quartet-in-residence at The Pennsylvania State University since 1962 — the album consists of three works: "Theme and Variations, Opus 80" by Amy Cheney Beach (1867-1944), "Divertimento" by Katherine Hoover (1937-), and "A Night Piece" by Arthur Foote (1853-1937).

The album was recorded in Penn State's Recital Hall in December, 1979, and released by Leonarda Productions, Inc., of New York City during the summer. It is an easy-listening album of romantic music and is available in the Juniata College Bookstore.

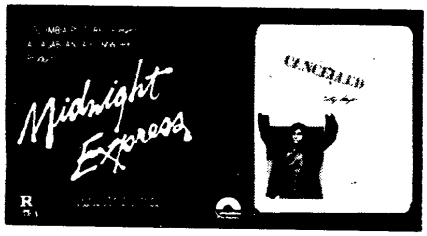
Ms. Gold, whose performance on the album received warm praise from Philadelphia "Inquirer" music critic Daniel Webster in a Sept. 7 review, also teaches classes at Bucknell University and serves as an instructor at the State College Music Academy.

A part-time member of the Juniata faculty since 1975, Ms. Gold holds a bachelor of music degree from the Eastman School of Music (1962) and an M.A. degree from Columbia University (1965). Her instructors have included Joseph Mariano, Albert Tipton and Julius Baker.

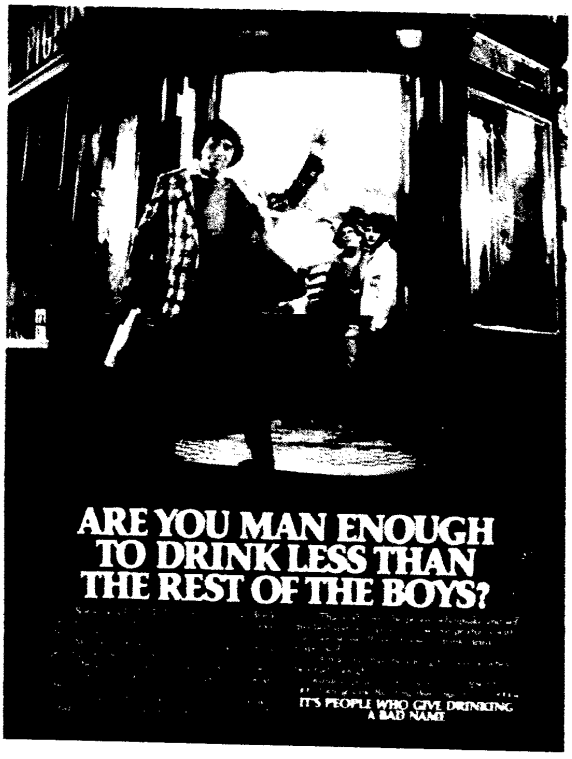
In addition to her appearances as a soloist with the Alard Quartet, Ms. Gold has performed with the Eastman Wind Ensemble and is principal flutist of the Nittany Valley Symphony Orchestra (formerly the State College Symphony Orchestra). She also is a member of the Huntingdon Trio of Philadelphia.

A frequent recitalist, she has played at the Philadelphia Art Alliance, at the National Gallery in Washington, D.C., and in New York City at the Guggenheim Museum, the A.I.R. Gallery and Donnell Library.

Ms. Gold is an affiliate performing member of the League of Women Composers and a member of Sigma Alpha Iota (professional music fraternity for women) and the National Flute Association.



Midnight Express Oct. 10, 7 p.m.



The Admissions Office will be holding the first of three Open House Programs this Saturday, October 11. The high school seniors and their families attending will be meeting with professors and current students to learn more about Juniata. The day also includes a tour of campus and lunch in the cafeteria. The visitors will be eating from 11:30 until 12:15, so be prepared for long lines at those times!

Faculty Expanded

by Randall Anderson

The Art Department at Juniata has a new professor this year, Vida J. Hull. Ms. Hull is from Alliance, Ohio. She received her bachelor's degree from Rollins College, her master's at Ohio State University, and her Ph.D. from Bryn Mawr. She has previously taught at Philadelphia Community College, and was an Andrew Mellon post-doctorate Fellow at the University of Pittsburgh. Here at Juniata, Ms. Hull teaches Art History. She has a nine-year-old son, and her hobbies include writing and sculpture. She is also a Trekker — an active and avid fan of Star Trek.

The English Department also has a new prof for the 1980-81 academic year, Richard F. Iacovoni. His home was Salt Lake City, Utah. He received his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Nevada, and his Ph.D. from the University of Utah. This is Mr. Iacovoni's first full-time position, and he teaches composition, business communications and theater. He will be directing the fall play, Shadow Box. He has a daughter, Nikki. In his spare time he plays guitar and writes music. He also enjoys softball, tennis and skiing.

The Swing Kings Play 'Old Favorites'

by Patty Rauschenberger

On Saturday, October 4, Centerboard's Dance Committee held its first semi-formal of the year in Memorial Gym. Due to the success of last year's Spring formal, Centerboard decided to present another Swing Band dance in honor of Parent's Weekend.

"The Autumn Swingfest" attracted a bigger crowd than expected as more tables were needed to accommodate everyone. Candles and soft lights were used to set the mood for a quiet relaxing evening. Tables for four and eight were decorated with pumpkins.

Music was provided by The Swing Kings under the direction of Gene Borza. The momentum of the dance seemed to break down due to long pauses between songs. However, this thirteen piece band played excellently with outstanding performances on trumpet and trombone. The music ranged from polkas to "I'm In The Mood For Love." A jazz piece, "In The Mood," got people hopping but the band's specialty was old favorites like "Sentimental Journey."

Food consisted of a variety of cheeses and crackers served along with three different punches.

Dance Committee Chairperson, Maura O'Connor said "the dance went really well." The parents' comments were all very positive and this dance was successful enough to have again next year.

new and exciting color. After spending $15 on a gallon of "gorgeous green" paint we have a slight problem. No money for brushes. Luckily Mrs. Miller is understanding of our funding crisis and issues one roll of toilet paper per hall member to be used for spreading paint.

We realize these projects sound a bit silly. Just stop and think of what sort of project can be funded with 50 cents per person.

As a hall we planned one big project for this term. We all went water skiing at Seven Points. We all feel that our goal of increasing hall unity was accomplished. Thus our project can be deemed a success, except for one thing: Funding. We spent $50 on food, which still left us hungry; $30 on gas for our boat; and $31.40 on renting a van. The $15 covered the initial cost of the van. The mileage charge increased our fee an extra $16.40. The Student Government was able to give up an other $10, but this was a special case. We now must come up with $86.40 out or our pockets.

there's lots of living and loving ahead

Is this situation reasonable? We don't expect such an expensive project to be entirely funded. But if we carry through with our tentative plans, the present SG policy will enable us to get $75. Is that reasonable?

What we would like to see is a policy which allots a certain amount of money per hall member per term for projects. It would be up to the hall to use such money as they see fit. (i.e. five projects or one.)

Without a change in policy perhaps we will be seen on Sunday mornings in the Ellis game room. Our hall projects shall be pinball arcade expeditions. Thanks to the SG we shall each have a skinny quarter in each hand.

his dorm residents, (5) that the Senator is working with the Residence Hall Association. As of this time no Senators have made any objections to the use of an "undercover agent" checking up on them.

Under Budget Management it was recorded that the Rugby club had asked for $700 to help with their $1500 a year budget. Considering that the sum asked for is quite large, Student Government decided to okay $150 for the time being and look further into the matter to see whether or not the rest ($550) can be appropriated later to the club.

An issue to be discussed in more detail at the next meeting will be the voting process. What the issue concerns is to make it necessary for the Senate to vote unanimously on an issue at the same meeting at which the issue is brought up. Also the Student Government will check into the allegation that Campus Security has given parking tickets to students who have not had their cars on campus yet this year.

All Juniata students are reminded that Student Government meetings are "open", meaning that anyone can attend. The next meeting will be held on Wed., October 15 at 8:00 p.m.

Soccer Improving

Break Scoring Draught Against Kings

by Chris Kanaskie

Despite their 0-6 mark thus far the Juniata soccer team continues to show signs of improvement.

Last week the team faced two opponents, Lebanon Valley and Kings College, and came away both times on the short end 2-0 and 3-2, respectively.

Although they lost both matches, J.C. outplayed, outhustled, and out shot their opponents.

Last Wednesday's encounter against Lebanon Valley was a disappointment for the team.

Showing obviously better conditioning, the J.C. booters gave Lebanon Valley all they could handle. But alas, they could not buy a goal.

This, coupled with two unfortunate tallies by Lebanon Valley, lead to the Indian demise.

Saturday's game, against Kings College, in front of a large and supportive Parent's Weekend crowd, was the heartbreaker of the season.

Outshooting the opponents 32-12 (which is a new team record), J.C. took control from the start.

Dan "Hutch" Hutchinson scored the Indian's first goal of the season on a picture perfect feed from Gus Creedon. Kings quickly retaliated and knotted the score at 1-1, which was the score at halftime.

The second half was a very exciting 45 minutes of soccer. Both teams scored one goal apiece on penalty kicks. J.C.'s goal was scored by Gun Creedon. Indian goalie Mark Infanti made the save of the game when he turned away a penalty shot.

The score remained at two despite a ferocious attack on Kings goal by J.C.

The teams then played two 10 minute overtime periods, which decided the game in heartbreaking fashion.

Immediately into the first overtime period, Dave Mattern hit the crossbar; that's how close J.C. came to victory.

Juniata continued to bombard the Kings' goal for most of the 20 minutes. Then, being caught up on offense, Kings' scored the winning goal with less than 1 minute remaining in the game.

The entire team played outstanding and were very heartened by the game. They are looking forward to Wednesday's game against Wilkes College.

They are hoping for a large turnout to root them on.

Spiker Streak Broken

by Duane Wright

The JC Volleyball team raised its record to 7-0 before losing two matches last weekend. During the week, the Tribe defeated Penn State-Altoona 15-2, 15-2, 15-0; Dickinson 15-4,15-3,15-11 and UPJ 15-1,16-14,15-6. Then last Saturday at a dual match between IUP and Edinboro the Tribe tasted defeat for the first and second time this season. Against IUP the girls must have been due for a bad match as they were quickly defeated 13-15, 6-15. But against Edinboro, they got their act back together and played a fine match although losing by identical scores of 13-15. So now the JC Volleyball team is 7-2. This week they try to resume their winning ways at home against Gettysburg on Thursday and then at the Washington Tournament on Friday and Saturday.

Golfers Fall

by Andy Berdy

The Juniata golf team traveled to St. Francis College on Sept. 15 for a fall match and saw the St. Francis linksman post some remarkable scores to beat the Indians 311 to 347.

Steve Stroup was the low man for the Tribe with a 77. He was followed by Bill West and Mike Appleby with 85's and Bob Hendricks with a 100. But that wasn't enough to beat the Red Flash as they burned up the course with Medalist Steve Persio's 73, Kevin Knee's 74 and John Aumm's 78. Rick Nelson added an 86 to round out the St. Francis scoring.

The Indians traveled to Dickinson on Sept. 25 for the Dickinson Invitational. The Tribe finished seventh out of the seven teams that competed. Steve Stroup and Jim LeDane led Juniata with 80's, Johnny Hyman added an 86 and Eric Fuhrmann an 89. Lebanon Valley won the event posting a score of 304 for their four man team. The host Dickinson team finished fifth in the tourney. Scott Newman was Medalist in the event, firing a one over par 73 on his home course.

The fall season is now over for the Tribe golfers but they show promise for next spring with many returning players.

Astros Clinch Title

by Duane Wright

For the first time in National League history there was a divisional tie. The Los Angeles Dodgers and the Houston Astros both finished the season with identical 92-70 records. The Astros went into LA needing only one win to clinch the title but the Dodgers hung tough and won all of the games in the final series of the season, to force the tie.

In the tie-breaking game the Astros jumped on top in the first inning, scoring two unearned runs. Houston then increased their lead to 4-0 in the third inning when Art Howe hit a two run homer.

In the fourth inning the Astros loaded the bases off Dodger pitcher Rick Sutcliffe, who was replaced by Joe Beckwitt. Beckwitt gave up a two run single to Howe, who had four RBI's in the game, and the Astro lead increased to 7-0.

The Dodgers were able to muster only one run in the game as Houston pitcher Joe Niekro went on to win his 20th of the season. It is the first time the Astros have been in the playoffs in their nineteen year history.

Indians Lose Heartbreaker

by Steve Thomas

In football the Tribe bit the bullet Saturday afternoon as Gettysburg took the contest 42-35 on College Field. Juniata's record fell to 1-2 overall and held at 1-0 in the MAC Northern Division. The Southern Division Bullets upped their mark to 3-1 all told and stayed at 1-1 in the conference play.

The game was a battle of offenses. The Gettysburg Bullets had 383 total yards to 325 for Juniata. Scott Dudak led the Bullets' attack with 106 yards on the grounds and three touchdowns. Juniata's Jeff Miles bettered his slate from last week by scoring four touchdowns and rushing for 151 yards.

Tom Bell supplied the Indians with 78 yards on 17 attempts and threw a touchdown pass to Eric Biddle for a two-point conversion. Miles and bell entered the contest as the second and third rushers in the 19 team MAC. Gettysburg QB John Murphy threw for 160 yards on 10 completions of 14 attempts.

The Indians only tallied 80 yards with their aerial assault. Miles was 2-17, throwing one interception, Net hit 3-5 for 38 yards, and Bell threw one ball for a touchdown.

Although seventy-seven points were scored in the game, the defenses had their moments. Tom McVay's interception in the second period set up a Juniata score. Linebackers Bob Waszak and Mike Ford were continually active and combined for 24 tackles for the Indians. Gettysburg's DE Tony Librizzi came up with 14 tackles for the Bullets.

Juniata scored first with a Miles sneak with 4:30 remaining in the first period. Hench's kick made the score 7-0. The Bullets tied it early in the second period on an 11 yard dash by Scott Dudak and a kick by Mike Ercole. The Indians went up 13-7 on a Miles touchdown around the 6:00 mark of the second period. Hench's kick was blocked.

McVey's interception came on the Bullet's next possession. and Miles and Bell moved the ball down the field in six plays. Miles took it from the five and the good kick put Juniata ahead 20-7. Gettysburg received the ball on the twenty with 3:30 left in the half. Nine plays and 80 yards later, Dudak ran it in from the two. Juniata took a 20-14 lead into the lockerroom.

Gettysburg could not sustain a drive with their first possession of the second half and punted to the Juniata 13. The Indians marched down to the GC 22 where Tom Bell ran left and threw his first college ball for a touchdown on a halfback pass. Eric Biddle pulled it in the corner of the endzone. Hench put it through the poles and the Tribe led 27-14. The Bullets returned the kickoff to the 50.

From there it only took two and a half minutes to bring them within six. With the score 27-21 and the momentum of the game in Gettysburg's favor, the blocked Hench kick of the second period became more important.

Juniata was stopped cold and was forced to punt. Gettysburg started on the JC 46 and didn't stop until they scored on a four yard pass from Murphy to Stanley. The kick was good, and the Bullets took their first lead 28-27.

An interception on their own 45 cut short the Indians' next drive. The Bullets capitalized on the mistake and five plays later were in the endzone again. They commanded the lead 35-27. Juniata tied the score with a 68 yard drive capped by a Miles touchdown. Bell threw another halfback pass to Biddle for the two-pointer. There was 1:38 remaining in the game.

Juniata attempted an on-side kick that Gettysburg recovered on their own 43. It only took one play. John Scott caught a Murphy pass for 57 yards and the score. The kick was good, and the game finished 42-35 in favor of the Bullets.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

When the joints get stiff and the bones get brittle, most athletes give up professional sports. But some, a gifted few, just keep going on and on. Gordie Howe, George Blanda, Pele, Jim Kaat and Muhamed Ali, are a few.

Last Sunday they had a half time feature on two men, one in his forties, the other fifty, who were playing college football. I don't know what makes some men more durable than others. Some would claim it's conditioning, others heredity, but most would have to agree that avoiding injury is a major factor in lasting in any sport.

Two of the oldest players in baseball made significant contributions to their respective teams on Sunday. Many Mota, the perenial pinch hitter of the Dodgers smashed a run scoring double to force an extra playoff game. Across the continent, Tim McCarver who has played in four decades, ripped a single in his pinchhitting role for the Phillies.

Some are more successful than others, witness Muhamed Ali who many would say hung on too long. Larry Holmes crushed him in the tenth round on Friday night. Even for sixteen million dollars it's tough to believe that a man would allow himself to be beat to a pulp.

It seems to me that many will remember Ali as the old man who tried to hang on too long rather than as the great boxer he was. Despite his records, he disgraced his image by failing to retire with grace. It's too bad that some men don't know when to quit. If not for the sake of avoiding the pain of not being able to perform up to par, they should retire to keep from being permanently injured.

Some like Pele, who could have continued know instinctively when the time has come, others just hang on until they get cut. To me this is one of the greatest tragedies in sports.

Harlem Wizards

Fans who have watched the Harlem Wizards in past seasons know that they shouldn't leave their seats until the final buzzer sounds. Now an additional ingredient has been added to the Wizard show.

He is known as "Peanuts" — at 5 feet 2 inches — the smallest pro basketball player in the world.

Born James Woolard, he has given the name "Peanuts" when he began playing basketball as a youngster, against the big guys. His amazing "Olympic" speed and agility leaves his opponent far up the courts as he makes his moves to the basket. His dribbling and ball-handling are uncanny.

"Peanuts" played his collegiate basketball at Lincoln University in Missouri. Joining the Wizards in their summer program in July 1976, he was an instant attraction, and his show game improved with each contest.

Off the court he is quiet and reserved, but once he dons his Wizard uniform he becomes an aggressive puma.

A math major in college, he hopes to become a professor of math when his playing days are over.

In a game of giants, he proves there is room for the little man.

After the game ends, youngsters in the crowd surround him for autographs and to ask questions. Many are as tall or taller than this unique young man, who has just awed them with his fantastic performance.

"Peanuts" and the Wizards can be seen on SUN., OCT. 12 at 7:00 p.m. in the Juniata College Gym. This hilarious show sponsored by the Huntingdon Area Jaycees will pit the zany Harlem Wizards against county All Stars. Tickets are available at a discount price from any Huntingdon Area Jaycee or at the door if seating is available.

C.C. Flushes Flash

by Gregg Kidd

Saturday, October 4th, 10:00 a.m., the silent, cold air was shattered by the crack of a gun followed by the light steps of 400 runners clammering for a good position at the start of the Johnstown Invitational 10,000 meter run. In this mass of runners, there was a special meeting between two cross-country teams: the Juniata Indians vs. the St. Francis Red Flash. With all of the team members having their best personal performances, Juniata flushed the Red Flash 19 to 44, bringing the team's record to 3 and 1.

The 6.2 miles road run maintained level ground as it would through a residential district of Johnstown, PA, with the start and finish of the race being marked by the world-famous Incline Plan, "the largest of its kind in Pennsylvania."

The first JC harrier to cross the finish line was the 78 and 79 C. Clifford Brown MVP awardee, Bill Shuler, who breezed the course in 33:10 to entitle him to 12th place overall and a priceless trophy for 1st in his age group. Andy pearson, a sophomore pre-med student, was clocked at 33:44 to rank 16th place and to receive the silver sneaker trophy for 3rd in his age group.

The remaining squad members checked in as follows: George Peterson, LeRoy Castor III, Tom Hoffman, Tony "Offensive Guards" Calderelli, Greg Kidd, Michelle Murray, Tim Swartz, and Dave Deisher.

By the time The Juniatian hits the newstands, the JCCC team will have settled a grudge match against the Susquehanna Hooters on SU's 4.8 mile road course. Typifying the views of the whole team, Dr. Mitchell comments: "I want Susquehanna, and I want 'em bad." To find out the results of the meet, consult your nearest cross-country runner.

Undaunted by the stream of publicity, the Indians are looking forward to winning the remainder of their meets and to having pretty earrings embedded in their earlobes.

Phillies Clinch N.L. East

by Doug Wallace

Last Saturday the Philadelphia Phillies clinched their fourth division title in five years with a dramatic 6-4 victory in 11 innings over the Expos in Montreal.

The Phillies and Expos were tied with identical 89-70 records going into this last 3-game series of the year. So the team that won two games would be the division champs for 1980. Montreal had the homefield advantage but this didn't stop "those chokers from Philadelphia."

Getting outstanding pitching from Dick Ruthven and Tug McGraw the Phillies won the first game 2-1, as MVP candidate Mike Schmidt drove in both runs with a sacrifice fly and his 47th home run of the year.

Then on Saturday the two teams met again with the Expos having to win to keep their hopes alive and the Phillies needing only 1 win for the title. At the end of the regulation 9 innings the two teams were deadlocked 4-4.

Then in the top of the 11th inning Mr. Schmidt did what he does better than anybody in the game, he cracked his 48th home run of the year to give the Phils a two run lead that they held onto for the win and the title.

Also I would like to congratulate probable Cy Young award winner Steve Carlton (24-9), and probable Rookie-of-the-year award winner Lonnie Smith (.336, 33 stolen bases), on outstanding years.

The Phillies will meet the Astros in the N.L. Championship series. Good luck Phillies, it's about time you've got some!

Washing Machines Still Broken

Student Concerns Committee of SG Offers Help

by Maureen Morrissey

Of course everyone was angered by the washing machines malfunctioning, but no one knew what to do about it. However, the residents at South Dorm spoke to their dorm senator, Michele Singel, and she in turn spoke to Mr. Jim Quinlan, head of the Physical Plant. Mr. Quinlan was well aware of the problem and was able to answer many questions that students had been wondering about. He also offered a few suggestions on how students can better take care of the machines.

There were a couple of reasons as to why many students had to wear dirty clothes for awhile. A few of the washers' motors have burnt out. This is being taken care of. New motors are on order and will be installed soon. But the main problem was that many of the machines were jammed full with change. It seems that CALICO, Juniata's washer company had installed new security boxes on them. These boxes worked fine as far as safeguarding the washers go but somehow they managed to jam up with quarters. This explains why all the washers were out of service at the same time. They have recently been emptied and are now working.

Mr. Quinlin stated that CALICO has performed as well as can be expected from any company. Problems of this kind can always be anticipated. CALICO's contract has them coming to empty the machines approximately once a month and they have been living up to this. It was difficult getting them on the phone at the onset of the problem but once they were made aware of the existing problems they tried to take care of them.

Mr. Quinlin and his secretary were quick to point out that when they do receive a complaint it is written up immediately and steps are taken that same day to rectify it. They agreed to Michele's wish to meet about once a month just to keep the flow of communications open concerning any maintenance problems that students might be having. In the meantime, students can be reminded to use less detergent in their wash and to please watch out for overloading. It is these factors that cause a washing machine's motor to burn out.

Michele would also like to stress that Student Concerns does care and that students should feel free to go to the committee with any problems they have. If Student Concerns can't solve the problem they can refer students to the correct committee to work out a specific problem.

News Briefs

Castro To Release Jailed U.S. Citizens

In a surprise move, the Cuban Diplomatic Representative to the U.S. announced earlier this week that Fidel Castro will allow all U.S. citizens being held in Cuban jails to be released. The charges against these prisoners range from hijacking and drug trafficking to dropping religious material by plane over Havana.

In other news, Manhattan Distric Attorney Robert Morganthau predicted crime will "inevitably rise" in the 80's due to cutbacks in police funds as well as the increasing drug traffic from South-East Asian countries.

John Anderson, Presidential hopeful, announced Monday while in New York City for the Columbus Day parade courting Italian-American votes, that he proposes raising the Social Security age requirements gradually from 65 to 68 due to the advances in medical sciences in an attempt to help save the financially ailing Social Security problem.

In Algeria sharp after-shocks jolted the northwestern territories of the country; it is believed that possibly 20,000 people or more have died from the earthquake that rocked this North African country.

Anti-Draft Committee Comes to Juniata

by Rebecca Welliver

This week has been designated National Anti-Draft week by 54 national organizations collectively called the Committee Against Registration and the Draft (CARD). It is the intention of this committee to educate persons as to the consequences of the institution of the draft, to publicize and promote the individual's alternative to draft registration and military service, and to encourage persons to write letters sharing their views on the draft with government leaders (who are especially receptive at this election time).

Before an individual decides upon a personal position regarding the draft issue, CARD wants him/her to be aware of the detriments of registration and conscription:

— A report made by the Selective Service System this year estimated that only seven to thirteen days in overall mobilization time is gained through peacetime registration and concluded that post mobilization was "by far the most cost effective". The White House chose to supress this report.

— With the institution of a draft, the President is given the authority to take unilateral military action independent of Congressional or public support.

— Drafted individuals lose several of their personal rights including the right to trail by jury, the right to many forms of political protest and free speech, and the right to pursue personal goals involving employment, family life, education, etc.

— The draft system discriminates against the poor and against minorities, persons who cannot afford identifying or implementing the loopholes of the system.

— Our country already (without the draft) maintains a military force of over two million persons on active duty, over 800,000 in the Selected Reserve and National Guard, and 400,000 in the Individual Ready Reserve.

Several alternatives exist for the individual forced with draft registration. Compliance and military service is one option. Another is a form of modified compliance — agreement to perform noncombatant duties within the military structure (such as being a medic or chaplain). Yet another is the application for Conscientious Objection status (an officially recognized positions which entails civilian service). Finally, there is the illegal refusal to register for the draft and the subsequent subjection to criminal penalties.

Several persons on the Juniata campus share CARD's concern and have set up an informative display in the Post Office area of Ellis. All interested in more information concerning registration and the draft are encouraged to take advantage of this display during the remainder of this week.

The Student Government meeting has been changed to next Tuesday at 8:00 in the faculty lounge at the Ellis College Center.

Vandalism Strikes Juniata Campus

by Linda Sevick

Numerous Juniata students have been subjected to vandalism this term, but Director of Security Harry Crawford said the problem is no more significant than last year.

Bunk beds, a telephone and a chair were among items stolen from East House apartments. Two cars were also vandalized, one with $100 damage, and a bike was stolen from behind the Cloister, worth about $250. Security has no suspects and no leads on any of these incidents.

Some items were stolen over the summer when students had possessions stored either in their rooms or in a storage area, in which case it was the "individual's risk," according to Crawford. He added that sometimes R.A.'s leave storage areas unlocked when they return at the end of the summer.

Crawford stated that if students did not sign up the items they stored over the summer, such as lumber for bunk beds, the maintenance staff has no way of knowing whether it is junk or not and often dispose of it.

"Juniata has less of a problem with crime than most other colleges," Crawford said. "Statistically we should have one suicide and two sexual assaults per 100 students; Juniata has had neither," he said.

"This is probably because by and large we do not have many people from inner-city type backgrounds," Crawford stated, "and most people in this area do not have an opportunistic outlook."

Although Juniata is relatively quiet, a campus-wide problem exists in that students, staff and faculty are careless about locking doors and offices after they leave according to Crawford.

"There is a lack of full understanding that we are in the 20th century and we just cannot leave things not completely secure," he stated. "The security operation at Juniata cannot accept full responsibility in these cases;" he said, "the primary responsibility rests on the user/owner/occupant."

Editorial

How Secure Does Security Keep Us

You know who they are. You have seen them around either walking their beat or scouting around in their tiny white car with all the options. No, they were not the people who helped you find your stolen bunk beds — those were the guys next door. The people I'm talking about are Security guards, they don't get involved with such things as stolen property; that's all a matter of "individual risk."

What does security do then? Good question — did you check to see what department the guy who signed your on-campus parking ticket works for? That's right, Security gives out tickets to all the cars that are parked where they shouldn't be. They have no trouble spotting cars in "NO PARKING" zones but if you are one of those people who have recently had their car vandalized in a legitimate parking area and reported it to Security, then you are headed for a dead end. They can offer no suspects or leads for any of the vandalism done on campus so far this year. If your car was vandalized in a "NO PARKING" area, however, and you complain loud enough, and promise to have the car towed away immediately, chances are good that they won't give you a parking ticket.

Are parking tickets the only things our Security force is allowed to act on? According to Mr. Crawford, Director of Security, the problem with crime on campus is no more significant this year then it was last year? Mr. Crawford also pointed out that Juniata's crime rate is not as severe as other schools. Does this mean that security only has to act when there is a marginal increase in crime? No. You are "Security", why don't you help us feel secure?

The reason cited by Mr. Crawford for Juniata's low crime rate is that we have few people from the "inner city" areas, as if these urban dwellers are the only ones capable of stealing bunk beds and raping their roommates. It is not security's job to classify people into managable stereotypes. Their job is to protect every student regardless of who they are or where they came from.

Statistically, Mr. Crawford pointed out, Juniata can expect one suicide and two sexual assaults for every 100 students. So far we have experienced none of these, at least recently, but what would happen if they should occur? How could a group of men with no leads on a dented fender be expected to track down a rapist or stop a suicide jumper?

Students do not go to Security with a problem just to be told it is their responsibility. Students were not issued walkie-talkies and uniforms when they enrolled in Juniata, nor were they briefed on correct police procedure. They were, however, shown where the Security office is — for all the good it does them.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I'm afraid I wasn't as careful as I should have been when writing last week's "Along Muddy Run." In the article Oedipus slept with 1st Terrace, 2nd South, 3rd Northwest, and Lesher, but I was speaking of these halls and the dorm as a single, figurative, person — not as individuals. I was not cutting down the girls who live in these places, I was cutting down Oedipus.

The only reason I used Lesher as Oedipus's mother was because it was the only girl's dorm. The only reason I mentioned 1st Terrace, 2nd South, and 3rd Northwest was because I wanted a 1,2,3 progression for emphasis. The only person I was cutting at was Oedipus. I will be more careful with satire from now on; I didn't mean to do any damage with it. I certainly wouldn't cut down some of the finest people in this school. Please accept my deepest apologies.

Sincerely,
Joe Schall

Dear Editor,

Sure, the Juniata Executives Club's Road Rally to be held on Sunday, October 19 sounds fun. But it seems doubtful that the JEC's Activities Committee remembers the world-wide energy crisis or the raging war in Iran-Iraq — perhaps they wish to consume all U.S. oil so the U.S. will become involved in the Iran-Iraq war, good for the economy, you know.

A club supposedly involved in business activities or any club for that matter should give a bit of thought to any activity so contrary to the conservation of natural resources. A Road Rally, an event which requires one hundred miles worth of gasoline per entry is an unnecessary extravagance and furthermore plain stupidity. American consumerism hits again.

Also, this event plays to a specific audience — those with cars and money to fill the tank. Next time, why not plan a less consumeristic activity? One which the entire campus can participate in.

Sincerely,
Mary M. Dickson

Dear Editor,

What is so wrong with trying to impress people? Last week's editorial knocked Juniata for making good impressions on its visitors. What Juniata student didn't try to impress the Admission's office when applying? What college (admittedly a business) would not put on its "best spreads" for its customers? We

"It's that time of year again," he sighed unhappily.

"You're making a mountain out of a molehill," she said. "Just relax and quit worrying."

He — the left side of the rope — dreaded Mountain Day every year, while she — the right side of the rope — welcomed it. Ever since their marriage they had been used as the tug-of-war rope. Each year he argued that they should stay home, but her argument for tradition always won out.

"I should be home in bed," he grumbled.

"Relax, dear," she said soothingly, "if we didn't get out once in awhile we'd be defeating our purpose. We need and deserve some fun and activity. Please give a little and enjoy it honey. Just unwind, dear."

He remained taut.

"Please dear, you've got to unwind," she repeated, "it's time for the tug-of-war."

"Oh, all right." he whined, giving in as usual and unwinding out on the grass.

He was gruffly picked up by the group of hands and he felt lonely for the first time in a year, but she comforted him as she was picked up. She soothed him the best she could, but he could barely hear her over the shouting.

Then it happened. He knew it had to come eventually, but each year it was a shock. He was gripped so hard and stretched so tightly he thought he would be torn away from her. He wanted to

Q: What is your opinion on the secrecy of Mountain Day?

Beth Fogleman — It doesn't allow the faculty or the administration to plan anything around the date and it of course keeps the students in a state of limbo.

Patti DePra — Mountain Day should be announced at least one day in advance. That way, students would know whether or not they have to study for a test on that day.

Frank D'Amico — It shouldn't be a secret so that I can sleep in.

Beth Weader — It's a nice idea, but I think too many people plan on it and then it doesn't happen. It just screws up everybody's schedules.

Barb Brecht — I think it's fun. The suspense is great!

scream, but he was afraid of choking.

But she enjoyed the sweat that rolled over her, the stretching of her knots, and the tension the playful struggle always soothed. Mountain Day always relieved the knotted up, coiled feeling that she developed during fall term. And she knew how he would feel after the tug-of-war (even though he didn't); if she had lips she would have licked him in anticipation.

Whenever he was pulled away from her he panicked, but as he was pulled toward her his hopes grew. Finally, just before the struggle ended, he realized that he had little control over the pull of the rope or his inner feelings, and he gave into the struggle and thus set free his emotions. He wanted to shout joyfully like the students were — it was so good to stretch out and feel useful. And because he finally unwound completely he felt closer to her than ever before during the climax, even though they were stretched tight.

The tug-of-war ended and he and she were dropped to the ground together. Even though he was all "pulled out," he felt somehow refreshed. He didn't know which side had won, but he had a feeling they both had.

"Now wasn't that relaxing exhausting, and wonderful?" she asked.

"It sure was," he agreed. "I haven't felt this good for at least a year.

"And you know what the best part of all is?" she said. "Now we get to roll together again."

They did so, and as their ends touched they kissed tenderly.

"It's that time of year again," she sighed happily.

Mrs. Vivian Narehood is the creator of this piece which is, according to Cr. Crosby, "the most convincing piece of live art in the Humanities Center." Mrs. Narehood used hand dyed and processed wool and fibers and weaved them on a linen background. This creation, dedicated to a friend who died of cancer, was commissioned by the Women's Faculty Committee.

Hot Wax

AC/DC is one of the most dedicated and inspired bands around. They play with an unbounded fervor that is infectious. Every song they play is a continuation of the last and their entire repertiore is one big loud, grinding rocker. They live to play. Back in Black is a prime example of this credo. Despite the untimely death of their trademark lead singer Bon Scott, the group remained intact, found a new vocalist, Brian Johnson (whose voice is just as unique, in its own way, as was Scott's) and made this album, which is definitely their best. Lead singers may die but rock'n'roll lives on.

Angus and Malcom Young, the guitarist-brothers and leaders of the group, come on just as strong as usual. The chopping, deafening chords and rhythms they pound out are not so simple as one may expect upon first listening; careful examination shows that these guys have split-second timing and can reel off some quite complex runs. Phil Rudd is one of the best drummers around — he plays a basic, uncompromising beat. Cliff Williams bass, however, is merely a thump-thump-thump in the background. New singer Brian Johnson ranges from a piercing (wail) to a funky gravel-voice. The whole album is given a clean, precise overall sound by producer Mutt Lange, who puts all the pieces together.

Some of the best cuts are Hell's Bells, You Shook Me All Night Long and Rock and Roll Ain't Noise Pollution. This album is pure fun. AC/DC is concerned not with trends or style but with playing hard rock with zest and spark. They succeed on Back in Black as never before.

Out & About

by Heather MacCrindle

Whether you travel to State College to drop in on old friends, crash the frats or catch a Penn State football game, the weekend just won't be complete without "munching out" at one of the dozens of restaurants along College Avenue.

The pick for last weekend was "Hi Way Pizza Pub" at 340 East College Avenue. It's not easy to miss with its antique cut glass windows facing onto the Penn State campus and it is "definitely pizza eating atmosphere" as one of my hungry companions noted. Full of antique mirrors, lamps, beer advertisements and bar fixtures its decor is right out of a saloon in a John Wayne Western.

The waiting line for tables was slowly growing as we got our seat at 5:00 p.m., most of it being students avoiding cafeteria food on a Saturday night.

Pizza, of course, is their specialty, for they have four different sizes to choose from: 10", 12", 14", and 16" pies ranging from $2.25 to $4.50 in price. Ordering a 10" pie with extra cheese and pepperoni, it was given a 9 on a scale of 10 and a "definitely better than OIP." The usual extra topping were available for the pizzas but unusual items were also included in the menu like bacon, eggplant, sprouts, zucchini and salami.

Of the many varieties of grinders (hot oven subs) offered, two were sampled by our group — the turkey and hot sausage grinders. About $2.50, they were again compared to OIP's as "crustier and spicier," but having less cheese. OIP outranked these grinders in one area, however: Hi Way Grinders were made on store bought rolls not even comparable in quality to the OIP home made rolls.

Four types of stromboli also highlighted the menu averaging $2.25 in price. Served cappocollo and salami strombolies my fellow connoisseurs of Italian food noticed a more than usual amount of sauce, skimpy amounts of filling, and to the despair of one, "NO green peppers!"

Other items on the menu included stuffed pizza, calzone, antipasta, salad, marinated vegetables or mushrooms, beer, and wine with sundaes, pie, and cake for dessert.

The pizza dough was hand

The Ski Club provides Juniata students with well-coordinated skiing activities. Two major events are the trips to Blue Knob and the trip to Vermont. Gus Creedon is in charge of the Blue Knob trip. For four Tuesdays during Winter Term, students can ski at Blue Knob for $40. During winter vacation, a four day-four night ski trip is planned to Vermont. Sherri Casparian is chairperson of this trip. The Ski Club has fund raisers such as the Snow Party this past weekend to help with ski activities. Steve Deperrot is the president and Mary Burns is treasurer/fund-raising coordinator. Non-members may also partake in ski activities. Membership is always open; there are no requirements.

The Varsity "J" Club's exclusive membership is for those athletes who have lettered twice in varsity sports. Activities are primarily fund-raising. The Club pays half the price of an athlete's varsity jacket. "J" Club activities include raffles for a basket of cheer, a football game ball, and a half keg of beer. They also hold sandwich sales, dances and Casino Night. The athletes are required to participate in fund raisers in order to receive a varsity jacket. Participation is encouraged to help develop the "J" Club into a good athletic organization as well. President of the club is Sharon Mumma; vice-president, Guy Bennardo; secretary, Sharon Ammarel; and treasurer, Nancy Roach. Coach Nancy Latimore sponsors the group.

Beta Beta Beta, more commonly known as Tri-Beta, is Juniata's only National Honor Society. Its purpose is to stimulate interest in biology. Tri-Beta functions as an honor and professional society for students of the biological sciences. To be a member, one must take an application. There are two types of membership; active and associate. Active members must have a 3.0 GPA in biology courses and a 3.0 overall. Also, three biology courses (one an upper level) must be completed. Associate members must demonstrate an interest in biology and be approaching the requirements. Tri-Beta has various activities. There are speakers about every two weeks. Everyone is welcome to listen to the speakers. Fund raising activities include mum sales and plant sales. Inductions and volleyball games with other clubs are some of Tri-Beta's social activities. Future events include field trips, more speakers, social activities and educational activities. During Christmas break Tri-Beta may attend the National Convention in Memphis, Tennessee. Dr. Todd Gustafson advises Tri-Beta. Cathy Oliver is

by Ruth Batik

This past weekend the J.C. Concert Choir participated in a Brethren District Conference in Harleysville, a small town in eastern Pennsylvania. It was the choir's first performance this year away from Juniata, and once again they proved that hard work really does pay off. The program consisted of pieces by Handel, Bach and Mozart: challenging pieces which they performed with sensitivity and finesse.

The weekend was like a mini-tour for the choir; they performed Saturday evening, spent the night with area families and left at 7:30 the next morning to provide the morning service for a large nursing home near Lititz, Pa. A group of choir members presented a program of readings and a skit, then the choir performed. The residents and visitors really enjoyed the program and it was a good experience for the choir as well.

Like any other extracurricular activity choir is a demanding and time-consuming affair. In addition to four hours of practice per week as a group most members spend time practicing on their own, and many take voice lessons. The director, Professor Bruce Hirsch, also devotes much time and energy to making the choir an excellent performing group and sets high standards for himself and the members. Everyone in choir would tell you that this makes them feel like what they are doing is worthwhile and makes them proud to belong to the organization.

So if you have not heard the choir in a while, or thought much about it, come to their next performance and judge for yourself. On Dec. 13th they'll be doing the Christmas selections from Handel's Messiah with the Nittany Symphony Orchestra in Oller Hall.

Fund Established To Honor Paul Yoder

Family members and friends of the late Paul R. Yoder — a distinguished educator and Church of the Brethren minister who died May 11 — are establishing a Juniata College Memorial Fund in his honor.

In announcing creation of the fund, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder said that the Paul R. Yoder Memorial Scholarship Fund will be used to provide financial assistance for needy and worthy Juniata students.

"It is most appropriate that the Rev. Yoder's family and friends have decided to honor him in this fashion, for throughout his long and distinguished career, his primary interest was always in his students," Dr. Binder remarked.

Professor emeritus of physics at Juniata, the Rev. Yoder came to the college as chairman of its physics department in 1926, serving as its chairman — and only faculty member — for some 30 years.

Before retiring in 1965, however, he had established the basis for the college's current physics program, which is fully-staffed, well-developed and housed in the Brumbaugh Science Center, considered one of the nation's finest facilities of its kind for a medium-sized college.

Prior to coming to Juniata, the Rev. Yoder served as a professor mathematics and physics at Blue Ridge (Md.) College (1922-26). A native of Kansas, he held a bachelor's degree from McPherson College (1921) and a master's degree from the University of Kansas (1922). He completed additional graduate study at The Johns Hopkins University, the University of Pittsburgh, Ohio State University, The Pennsylvania State University and the University of Wyoming.

In addition to his distinguished teaching career at Juniata, Professor Yoder served the college as its director of summer sessions (1938-43). Also active in educational circles off campus, he was a founding member in 1953 of the Central Pennsylvania Section of the American Association of Physics Teachers.

In addition, he was an effective proponent of establishing chapters of the Society of Physics Students and Sigma Pi Sigma (national physics honor society) at smaller colleges and universities across the nation.

Ordained as a minister in the Church of the Brethren in 1918, the Rev. Yoder was a member of Huntingdon's Stone Church of the Brethren, where he served for a time as interim pastor. He also served as pastor of the following Churches of the Brethren: Stonerstown, Clover Creek and Diehl's Crossing, Williamsburg and Spring Mount.

Equally active in civic affairs, the energetic Rev. Yoder had been a member of the Kiwanis Club of Huntingdon since 1940. He served the club as president in 1952, and for many years he was the club's secretary. He also served as governor of Division II, and on Jan. 7 of this year, he was awarded the status of life member from Kiwanis International.

Germans Sing For Juniata

by Ruth Batik

Performing before a large crowd in Oller Hall last Tuesday, the Conti Corbach Choir gave a versatile, interesting performance. The all-male choir is composed of 41 voices (61 at home) and the men are all current or retired employees at a tire factory in Corbach, a small central German town. Included in their program were traditional and folk numbers from Germany, plus various selections from around the world.

While they performed with the customary European sense of dignity and ceremony, the mood was also warm and friendly. For most of the men, it was their first visit to the USA and some had brought their wives along. They were enjoying the trip especially getting to know Americans and observing cultural differences. One of the wives noted with surprise that "American women really can cook!" This cultural exchange made the evening a pleasant one for both audience and performers.

by Randall Anderson

The J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor is Evangelical Christianity for the 1980-81 academic year is Dr. Richard J. Mouw from Calvin College in Calvin, Michigan.

Dr. Mouw received his bachelor's degree from Houghton College in New York State, his master's from the University of Alberta in Canada, and his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago.

Before teaching at Calvin College, where he is a full Professor of philosophy, Dr. Mouw previously taught at Elmhurst College in Illinois, the University of Chicago and the University of Alberta. He has had numerous other educational and professional experiences, such as being a National Endowment for the Humanities Fellow in Sociology at Princeton University and a Chairperson of the Michigan Academy of Arts.

He has written three books: Political Evangelism, Politics and the Biblical Drama and Called the Holy Worldliness. He has also edited several other books and has published articles in journals such as Christian Century, Theology Today and Worldview.

Dr. Mouw is a native of New Jersey. He and his wife, Phyllis, have one son, Dirk.

The J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professorship of Evangelical Christianity has been established at Juniata with a grant from the late J. Omar Good, an 1896 graduate, who wished to see Christianity and its beliefs perpetuated at the college. The professorial chair was set up by Lestor Rosenberger, Trustee of the Good Estate.

Expanding Band Shows Skills at Concert

by Kelly Hussey

The Juniata College Band, under the direction of Ibrook Tower, has grown in leaps and bounds. As of now, the band has a total of sixty-three members, more than twice last year's total. This year's freshman class constitutes well over one third of the band memberships.

The band has been present at the home football games, assisting the cheerleaders and fans in routing the Juniata Indians on to victory.

Parents' weekend was October 3-5. There were band concerts Friday and Saturday nights. The theme song for the concerts was "Strike Up the Band," and they did just that. Mr. Tower and the members had been practicing since the opening of school not more than four weeks preceding their performances.

The band played various types of music, opening with "The Star-Spangled Banner." They then played "The Gershwin Medley," "Irish Tune from Country Derry," ballet music from "Faust," a medley of songs from "The Music Man," "The Sincopated Clock," and "Thunder and Blazes." The last medley was one called "Broadway Show Stopper." The concert was brought to a close with the playing of "That's Entertainment."

Both concerts were a success enjoyed by parents and students alike. In the short time allotted before the performance Ibrook Tower did a great job planning and conducting the band to success.

Laughing Bush Offers Music and Equipment

by Peg Whalen

Laughing Bush, what's that? A major oil conglomerate? International soft drink company? American Indian lobby in Washington, D.C. not quite.

Laughing Bush Enterprises is the campus outing service. It is a business organization that promotes outdoor activities for the college population. Current directors are Jeff Taylor and Cindy Goldstein. They and twenty-one other people conduct their organization in the efficient delivery of service. Membership in Laughing Bush is selective. They run a "business" and need people they can rely on, according to Kathy Holmes.

Two major services offered by Laughing Bush are rental of outdoor equipment and coffeehouses. The Service rents anything from skiis to canoes, including tents, tarps, stoves, life jackets, packs and racks.

Every year laughing Bush presents Coffeehouses. Essentially they are mini-concerts staged in an intimate atmosphere at the Catharsis lounge in Sherwood Hall. The entertainment is local or campus talent. The Jive Bombers and Third Stream are among the groups that have played at the Coffeehouses of past years. Earlier this year in September, Laughing Bush along with Center Board, hosted a Coffeehouse. Campus artists Jill Windwer and Terry Beard sang and played.

The material is diverse but always entertaining. For example Jill did some of Jonie Mitchell's work and had a soothingly mellow tone. Terry, on the other, played his guitar and interspersed comedy into his retinue of songs. Jazz, bluegrass, country and western, and rock are some of the music styles that have emanated from the stage of the Coffeehouse in the past.

Small square tables with room for two or four people characterize the coffeehouse. They are arranged with a candle and some munchies. A bar is set up to serve beer and punch for those attending. The atmosphere is easy and highly conducive to friendly conversation. Coffeehouses have always been a great success and Laughing Bush plans to continue with them this year.

The revenue generated by rentals and coffeehouses is used to purchase more equipment. None of the members receive payment for their time and effort so the services available to the campus are enlarged by the income.

Laughing bush has also accumulated vast amounts of information about trails, bike routes, camp grounds, parks and other outdoor activities in the local area or as far away as Canada.

Their office is located in the basement of Ellis Hall right next door to the Book Store. The hours are posted. So stop by and find out about your favorite outdoor fund.

thrown to whatever thickness the customer preferred, was prepared fresh daily, and contained no preservatives. With natural food preparation again in mind only "raw" sugar was served, and the pizza, stromboli, and calzone were all available with whole wheat dough.

The service was a bit slow over the dinner hour but the waitresses were nice and very accommodating. The only drawback to the "trotal pizza eating experience" was that the expected red and while checked table cloths were missing replaced instead by green and white ones.

College Station "Beefs-Up" Programs

by Dave Heisterkamp

Have you listened to Juniata's college radio station, WKVR lately? If you haven't try tuning your dial to 91.7 FM. WKVR is going through a lot of changes with new programs, new people, and new format.

Among the bigger changes is the lengthening of radio shows from two to three hours. During the show, DJs have to follow a scheduled pattern of the type of music played. Monday through Friday, the same basic format begins at noon with the Album For Lunch. After that LP is played, Album Oriented Rock takes over until 6 p.m. that evening. After 6 on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays you can expect to hear a progressive program. On Tuesday, Mark Coakley plays Blues on Friday night from 6 to 9, the Freshman All-Request show airs. The 9 to Midnight shows vary from Progressive to Jazz, and from Blue Grass to Party Music, depending on which night you're listening. If you'd like a WKVR Fall term schedule, including DJ's names and show times, you can send requests to Lynn Stellander c/o WKVR, Box 1005.

In order to meet education requirements of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) WKVR has been beefing up its educational programming. Recently elected to the position of Program Director, John Blasko is gearing up the station for a lot of new and exciting programs for all tastes. He hopes to start a Rock History program, a New Album Review show, a "Live at J.C." show where nothing but live album cuts are played, an Editorial show and many other types of programs. He plans to get an Art Gallery review show, Interviews with a campus guest and a National News program which would cover national news and sports.

Some uncoming programs of interest are the Lynyrd Skynyrd airing October 20th at 8:00 by John Williams. Kim Swanson is also doing a program on Child Abuse starting October 21st.

The new WKVR slogan, "The Place Where You Can Expect The UnExpected" fits well with its unique symbol being the Home of the Unicorn. The station is planning a "Name the Unicorn" contest in the near future.

Another new name at WKVR is that of Craig Johnson. Craig is WKVR's new music director in charge of all the albums that are played over the air. Mark Cassel, former Program Director, is now Operations Manager. Cassel, during his term with Program Directing is responsible for the Newsblimp played over the airwaves of the radio. The Newsblimp combines current news issues with music and comedy.

Brian Check, WKVR's Chief Engineer, requests that all Juniata Students interested in any phase of the radio station to contact him through the college mail system at Box 1005.

Registration Expected To Go Well

by Chris Corry

"I don't expect any major problems with registration," says registrar Thomas Nolan. Registration for winter term classes will occur on Wednesday, Oct. 22 in the Ellis College Center Ballroom.

Nolan doesn't anticipate that many students will get closed out of courses. "Upper level courses almost never close out." When a class does close out it is usually a matter of seating space. "If we had more room we wouldn't have to close out," Nolan revealed. There are only three rooms that seat 100 students: Alumni hall and the two pie-shaped rooms. Three other rooms will fit 65 students.

The method of registration currently employed works well, according to Nolan. "It seems to be very efficient. . . .I've gotten very few complaints." Each student must, at scheduled times for each class with Seniors first and Freshmen last, wait in line and collect a computer card for each class he wishes to take. "The students are usually extremely cooperative." We've never had an inordinately long wait," stated Nolan.

Freshmen who wish to take chemistry will have some delays, predicted the registrar. "I know of no way we can solve that because we don't know in advance how many will want to take it." The discussion groups for Logic and Language will be hand-scheduled by the registrar to save time.

"We try to keep class size down," said the registrar. Most introductory courses are necessarily large because so many people wish to take them but classes, as a rule, become smaller as one gets into upper level courses. Many courses with large lectures will also involve a small discussion group, help discussion, or lab. HEH discussion groups are limited to 15 students.

Nolan estimated that "class-size has increased no more than two or three people over the past ten years." The faculty has been expanded to meet the growing number of students. There are the equivalent of about four additional full time professors this year to match the largest student body ever at Juniata. The student faculty ratio for fall term is approximately 1:18, about the same as last year but shows an increase over four years ago (1979-80) when it was 1:15.7.

should be proud of our school for caring so much about our image. It's not a "deceptive ploy" to want to smile when one looks in the mirror. Don't knock a good thing when you see it.

EDITORIAL REPLY

Mr. Funk and Mr. Schall have missed the point of the editorial. No doubt that it is nice to look nice. But a business would not be in business long if it put on its "best spread" only on Wednesday and looked terrible the other four days. Or how long would one last in a job if one smiled and looked his best at the interview but came in looking like a slob on the first day of work and everyday thereafter. Isn't that a "deceptive ploy"? Impressing people is one thing — false impressions is another.

Senators Chosen

by Denise Cutillo

Recently the Juniata College Student Government added three new members to their staff, the Freshmen senators. Voted for by their fellow class members, the three new senators are: Karyn Cable, Rory Anne McAvay and Eric Prutsman. The three began their term of office immediately after being elected, and will serve until April 30.

The Freshmen senators have all the privileges of the upperclassmen senators. They have a vote in senate and are eligible to be a member of any Senate Committee formed throughout the year. The new senators main duty, however, will be to represent the freshmen class. They will be the ones to voice the opinions of the freshmen to the senate and to carry any news from the senate back to their class members. So if freshmen have any opinions or thoughts they want the student government to know about the three new Freshmen senators are the ones to see.

Input Needed to Change Weekend Vans

by Heather MacCrindle

Changes have been made this year in the Center Board sponsored trips to Penn State and Raystown on the weekends. Students wishing to go to Penn State are given only 2½ hours in which to get all their shopping or studying done, while those going to Raystown are able to spend 6 hours on Saturday and 3 hours on Sunday.

Hours have been reduced at Penn State this year because the addition of the Raystown run has caused some inconvenience. According to Wayne Justham, Director of Programming and advisor to Center Board, "the hours will remain the same until at least the end of October unless enough student concern is voiced. With upcoming GRE's, Christmas shopping and the weather getting too cold for Raystown, Justham sees the possibility of Center/Board changing the van schedule if students are interested as that was the reason it was change to begin with.

"Running completely as a service to the students," says Justham, "we were not even breaking even last year" when the mini bus was used for these trips. Because the cost of this 35 passenger bus ran approximately $100 per day, the decision was made by Center Board this year that the Juniata van be used instead, seating only 12. Calculating the reduced cost of the van, however, Justham realizes that Center Board will still be losing money even if the van is filled.

Since only 12 seats are available in the van "reserve tickets" can be bought at the information desk prior to the weekend run assuring the student a seat. Those students holding reserve tickets will be accommodated first over those buying tickets at the door of the van on Saturday morning.

Realizing that "it would be difficult to continue both runs without working one around the other" (as is done now, the hours determined by the travel time between both places), Justham sees as an alternative dropping the runs to Raystown Lake in order to make three trips to Penn State, at noon, at about 4-5:00, and one late at night. A restriction would have to be made that students going up on the noon van would have to come back on the early van so more students could then go up on this van and still have a ride back at night.

Wayne Justham is anxious to hear students' comments and suggestions concerning the van situation. If, in fact, a longer period of time and more vans to State College is what the students want, he encourages them to write letters to Center Board in care of him.

Future Trends in WKVR

What can you expect from WKVR in the future? Aside from the new educational programming and various other specials, WKVR is anticipating a frequency change during the summer of 1981.

The reasons for this change are a result of a ruling by the Federal Communications Commission which affects all 10-watt college stations. To avoid interference from more powerful non-commercial stations, all small 10-watt college stations have been required to change frequency if their present frequency falls between 88.1 and 91.9.

The WKVR management board has consulted the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System's president, Jeff Tellis Terry Stone and several first-class engineers all feel that the frequency change is the most advantageous move that WKVR can make at this time.

The change involves a frequency search and a restructuring of the broadcasting antenna. The cost of these changes will be a maximum of $2,000 which will be provided by Student Government.

Tribe Wins Tourney

by Steve Thomas

Rob Ash's Indians cruised on the gridiron this past Saturday, beating Susquehanna 27-10 at Selingsgrove. The win put JC's record at 2-0 in the MAC Northern Division and 2-2 overall.

The effectiveness of the Tribe's offense was again the key to their victory. "We moved the ball pretty much at will," reflected Coach Ash. He went on to credit his offense line with excellence. RB Tom Bell and QB Jeff Miles would not argue that point. Bell led all rushers with 105 yards on 14 carriers and picked up his first TD of the season. Miles gained 99 yards on only eight attempts. In the air Miles was 3 of 5 for 61 yards and one touchdown. Miles had a fifty yard TD toss called back, because his receiver was deemed ineligible having stepped out of bounds before catching the ball downfield. Mike Nett's ankle is showing gradual improvement, and he saw limited action Saturday throwing 2 of 4 passes for 14 yards.

Juniata's defense statistics could not be more misleading. Susquehanna moved the ball everywhere except into the endzone. The Tribe gave up a club-record 27 first downs, 381 total yards, and only ran half as many plays as the Crusaders. LB Mike Ford dropped 17 Crusaders and Matt Blauch, Terry Heffner, and Dan Jendrzejewski combined for 39 tackles. Tom McVay and Bob Edwards each came up with an interception as the Crusaders completed 9 passes on 25 tries.

The Indians scored on their initial possession as junior RB Pat Davis ran in from the 15. Hench's kick put JC up 7-0. Five minutes later Tom O'Neil threw an 11-yarder to Steve Kindler. The kick tied the score at seven all.

The second quarter saw Jeff Miles nail his third touchdown pass since assuming quarterbacking duty. Eric Biddle caught the fifteen yard toss to cap a 30 yard drive. The catch was Biddle's third in the endzone this season. Hench's kick failed and the Tribe led 13-7. The Crusaders got their final points of the game on a 32-yard field goal by Frank Riggitano. The score followed an 18-play 88-yard drive that finished the half.

Juniata scored twice more in the final two periods. In the third quarter it was Davis again topping off an 80 yard march with a three yard blast for the six. Hench's kick missed with the score 19-10. Early in the fourth period the Indians took over on their own one yard line. Six plays later Tom Bell went 26 yards for his first TD this season. Miles ran for the two-point conversion, and the Tribe brought home a 27-10 victory.

The Indians' last two scoring drives covered 179 yards on only 11 plays. Their offensive ability is undeniable. In relation to the defense Coach Ash said, "we still have to toughen up and gain more consistancy."

Next week the Indians play the powerful Lycoming Warriors on College Field. The Warriors were ranked seventh in the nation (Division III) until they lost to Delaware Valley, 9-0, last Saturday. Ash believes, "the key to stopping Lycoming is stopping QB Rick Burd. He is the best quarterback we'll see all year." A decisive victory this Saturday will put the Indians in excellent position to take the MAC Northern Division. Happy Burd hunting Indians.

Hockey Team M.A.C. Champs

by Doug Wallace

After 7 games this year, the Juniata College women's field hockey team is 4-2-1, and they have clinched a tie for the southwest section title of the M.A.C.

The Indians battled the Gettysburg Bullets to a 0-0 tie last Wednesday at Langdon field to clinch the tie for the section title. Goalie Nanci Young set a school record in stopping 17 shots as she recorded her 3rd shut out of the season.

In their next game the stickers traveled to Susquehanna where they last a tough one to the Crusaders 1-0, but they came right back in their next match versus Lycoming as they beat the Warrior 2-0 in Williamsport. Scoring for the Indians were Heidi Loomis and Bonnie Sisler, and goalie Nancy Young notched her 4th shu out of the year.

The next game for the Indians will be against Messiah at home. Good luck girls!

Gridmen Bounce Back

With impressive wins over Shephard College, Dickinson, Hood College and the host Washington College spikers, the Juniata Indian volleyball team won the Washington College Volleyball Tournament and upped their record to 12-2.

The Tribe defeated Shepherd in their opening round 15-3, 15-3. In round two the J.C. girls beat Dickinson 15-7 and 15-0. In the semi-finals Juniata blew out Hood College by scores of 15-0 and 15-0. In the finale, Coach Larry Bock saw his Lady Indians defeat the host team Washington College, 15-1 and 15-5 to bring the title to college hill.

Back on Thursday, Oct. 9 the Tribe hosted the Bullets of Gettysburg College and won the best of five games series, three games to one. J.C. won the first two games 15-3 and 17-15, coming from a 10-3 deficit in game one and never taking the lead in game two till 16-15. Game three saw the Tribe loose control momentarily, loosing 15-8. They came back in a tension filled game four, winning 16-14 and sending the Bullets home in defeat.

The girls will travel to St. Francis on Oct. 14 and are scheduled to go to Penn St. at Altoona on Oct. 16. The Indians will make their next home appearance in an important tri-match with York and West Chester State on Saturday, Oct. 18 at 6 pm in Memorial Gymnasium

Juniatian's BIG 15 Football Picks

RULES:

1. Pick the winner of each game by circling your choice.
2. Predict the total points scored in the Monday Night game in addition to picking the winner.
3. In case of a tie, the total points will be used as a tie-breaker. The one closest to the right total without going over it is the winner.
4. To play, cut out this ad and pick the games. Drop your entry into the BIG 15 box in the lobby of Ellis Hall.
5. To win, a contestant must pick the highest number of winning teams and this prediction must also surpass the sports editors total predictions correct. If a contestant does this the weekly prize is $10.00
6. The editors picks are underlined below along with their total points.

C.C. Goes Straight

by Bill Shuler

The Susquehanna Hooters were stymied on their own course as our own Indian harriers once again displayed the amazing depth which has boosted their season record to 4-1. After being heralded by a former S.U. coach as the "worst Juniata cross-country team ever seen" two years ago in the midst of a dismal 1-9 season, the same Juniata runners hosed the hapless Hooters 18-41.

Juniata captain Bill Shuler blazed over the short 5 mile course to take first place in 25:19, with teammate Tom Wise following just 4 seconds behind. Susquehanna's sole finisher in the top six runners, Tim Harris, struggled to grab third place.

Finally ridding himself of the "jet lag" which had plagued him for the last few meets "Dinky" Kidd sizzled to a fourth place tie with Indian freshman Tim Swartz. Senior Roy Castor once again proved that a year in England hadn't slow him down, was right on their heels, with Tom Hoffman, George "Sloth" Peterson, Mike Murray, Tony Calderelli, Bill Marshall, and Dave Lehman rounding out the Indian traveling squad.

Shep Speaks

Mark Infanti

This time it was Howard Cosell, not the Phillies who choked. After watching them for eighteen of my twenty-one years, I will finally get to see the Phils play in the World Series.

They coughed, sputtered, spit and wheezed, but they didn't CHOKE. There are those who would argue that baseball is a boring game to watch on television, and up until this playoff series between the Astros and the Phils I probably would have agreed with them.

Any sports fan, ardent, or otherwise has to agree that this was one of the classic playoffs of all time. The sheer pleasure I got from watching these two teams go all out for five straight games is enough to renew my faith in professional athletics.

For once I can honestly believe that there is more to pro-sports than the glitter and the money. When you saw the tears in the eyes of the Astros you somehow felt reassured that it is more than just a complicated facade.

It was a time when the Bull was a goat, when Ceasar had to rule from the bench, and the MVP was nothing more than a fan playing third base. The spectators have come to expect great performances from the Nolan Ryans and Steve Carltons, but who would have anticipated Terry Puhl cracking four hits or Manny Trillo being named the Series MVP.

I think the story of the Phils victory is in their bench. Del Unser has bounced all over baseball, last year he was an amazing pinch hitter, this year was dismal. When the pressure was on he responded. Or what about the Kid from York, Greg Gross, who had two key hits in the final game.

Dallas Green was on a Philly team, one he would probably like to forget; the 1964 Phils, maybe the most infamous team in baseball. With 13 games left all they needed was to win one but they never did.

Ever since that team there has been a stigma attached to Philadelphia teams and up until now it seemed to apply. But after being down and continuing to fight back, no one, not even Howard Cosel can call them chokers. It's a shame that Houston couldn't be in the series, too, because they were part of what will surely be the most memorable playoff for a long time.

Saturday the woman's cross-country team toppled Shippensburg 26-30 with Carolyn Andre taking top honors. The rest of the team finished in this order: Mickey Pitale, Jean McLaughlin, Dana Taylor, Lisa Rizzo, Nancy Roach, Mary Yankaskas.

If you haven't noticed by now, I suppose you have heard rumours that quite a few members of the mens cross-country team have gotten their left ear pierced. So what you may say, well I'll tell you what — it's a goal for team unity. It may sound like a lot of bull but it's working. Another goal is to finish as high or higher than any J.C. cross-country team has at MAC's.

Mt. Day Setbacks

Classes Suffer From Surprise

by Bob Kemper

"If tomorrow is Mountain Day your test will be moved up to Friday and your papers won't be due until the following Monday; which means the field trip moved up from last Thursday will have to be moved up again until next Wednesday. But if Mountain Day happens to be the day after tomorrow. . ."

Such was the academic situation at Juniata for the last two weeks.

Although the spontaneous announcement of Mountain Day accomplished its objective of providing nice weather for the event, the fact that it was held the same week as mid-terms, pre-registration and the America concert made it somewhat of an inconvenience for faculty and members and students alike.

For professors the secrecy of Mountain Day meant confused test schedules and backed-up pre-registration meetings with students. Although an extra day was added to pre-registration for students who were forced to miss their appointments on Mountain Day, most professors interviewed felt that it was still an inconvenience because it forced them to see as many as fifteen students on that extra day.

The only department prepared to deal with the spontaneity of the event seems to have been Food Service, who had the food prepared prior to the event so that it could be reheated at anytime. Labor for the department was no problem since the crew who normally handled lunch were just transfered to Greenwood Furnace to serve it there.

Most of the suggestions offered for improving the situation that existed this year centered around announcing the week that Mountain Day will be held. Such notice would enable professors and students to make concessions, if need be, in planned class work while maintaining the spontaneity of the event.

Juniata Rocks To The Sound Of America

by Ruth Batik

On Thursday night Memorial Gym came alive to the sounds of "America" in concert. Campus had been waiting for this for weeks and at last the night had arrived. The crowd was large and the concert 'mood' was in the air — that natural psyche factor that comes from anticipating something really good. And, after an excellent warm-up by the Chris de Burgh band, they finally got what they wanted: "America", live at J.C. and sounding better than ever.

The band is composed of five members, but the heart of "America" is the team of Gerry Beckley and Dewey Bunnell. They started playing together in the mid-60s (formed "America" in 1970) and their collaboration has taken "America" to the top of the business. This close and lengthy cooperation has provided the foundation for the group to build on, allowing it to expand the move in new directions while still preserving its character and individuality.

In an interview with THE JUNIATIAN, the two talked about how they've changed and how they feel about their success. They don't think that their music itself has changed drastically, but their latest album, Alibi, took shape in a different way. A new producer and different people to work with gave them a challenge they thought they needed. Both say that the pressures of success don't really influence what they write or how they express themselves but that the music changes with them, with the way they grow and feel.

Perhaps that's why they've lasted so long. Their music is honest and personal; it's easy to relate to, but the sound is distinct and original. Plus, the band members are excellent performers. It's obvious that they love making music and are at their best when they're playing. The mood onstage seemed to extend to every member of the audience and everybody had a good time.

Notice

Last weekend the biannual meetings of the Trustees Committees were held. Juniatian reporters were sent, however, due to circumstances beyond our control, we were not permitted to sit in and report on the meetings. We are currently in the process of attaining summation reports from all student representatives. This is a timely task so as a result, an article will appear in the next edition of the Juniatian.

Libraries Add 19,000 Volumes On Microfilm

There was a time when the addition of some 19,000 volumes to a library would have been something of a major project, with library personnel hustling to find more than 2,000 feet of shelf space to house the new books.

However, modern technology has enabled Juniata College to house an entire 19,000-volume collection in less than eight cubic feet of space. At the same time, the collection increases the college's holdings in its two libraries — L.A. Beeghly and Myers Science — by 10 percent.

Juniata was able to accomplish this rather astonishing feat by purchasing the "Microbook Library of American Civilization," a microform library of some 19,000 volumes covering all aspects of American life and literature from its beginning to the outbreak of World War I.

Dr. David E. Eyman, Juniata director of libraries, explains that each volume in the "Microbook Library" is contained on a single three-by-5-inch film card, or fiche (pronounced fish). He adds that up to 1,000 pages can be reproduced on each fiche, an achievement of high-reproduction photography that reduces individual pages 55 to 90 times with high optical resolution.

"Many of the volumes in this collection are rare, others out of print, and not all are available in even the finest libraries in the world." Dr. Eyman says. "This gives our students and faculty members access to resources usually available only in major centers of learning."

Microbook titles, he comments, are projected for reading on a desk reader or a small "lap" reader, with most of the material enlarged on the reader screen to greater-than-page-size, making it easier to read than the original.

"Fiche in the 'Microbook Library' can be stored, retrieved and circulated just like books," Dr. Eyman notes, adding that catalogs and indexing were supplied with the collection to provide instant access to its contents.

Dr. Eyman further observes that more than 200 college, university and public libraries own the collection, which was assembled with the guidance of 52 college and university faculty members pre-eminent in the field of American studies.

Acquired by Juniata at about five percent of its estimated cost in book form, the "Library of American Civilization" is published by Library Resources, Inc., of Chicago, an "Encyclopedia Britannica" subsidiary.

Regan Looking to Scrap Salt II

Presidential hopeful Ronald Reagan recently announced that if elected he will scrap all work on the SALT II treaty and begin work on a SALT III treaty. Secretary of Defense, Harold Brown, counterattacking, labeled the destruction of the SALT II treaty as a "major tradgedy" saying that SALT II, if abandoned, will cost the U.S. over $100 billion.

Parent's Magazine, in it's latest issue, forecasted that the cost of raising a child born this year to the age of 18 will be approximately $254,000.

The Speaker of the Iranian Parliament stated that the parliamentary commission discussing the fate of the U.S. hostages should have its work completed this week.

New Idea Needed for Mt. Day

Nice idea Mountain Day Committee — but it just does not work. Secrecy achieved spontaneity, true, and a few positive aspects were achieved. The question remains, do the pros outweigh the cons?

This was the first year in the recent history of Juniata that Mountain Day was kept a secret until the day arrived. Ensuring nice weather and minimizing pre-Mt. Day parties were the reasons sighted for the change. It has been said "that is the way it used to be", but obviously it has changed for a reason. The difficulties encountered by professors and students were important enough that the spontaneous Mt. Day idea should be considered before trying it again next year.

Confused test schedules during mid-terms were bad enough. Pre-registration mix up was not serious but enough to complain about. Because the perfect time for changing leaves (the traditional time of the term for Mt. Day) usually falls during mid-terms and pre-registration some thought should be put into taking these essentials into consideration. There is also something to be said about the spare ribs that sat around food service for a week or so waiting the oncome of Mt. Day.

When it comes down to the cancellation of an advanced planned field trip and an important presentation in the education department, then there is something seriously wrong with the system. One professor had to go as far as to cancel a whole week worth of labs due to the "surprise" of Mt. Day. These seemed to be great sacrifices made for ensuring a nice day and attempting to keep student pre-Mt. Day partying down to a minimum.

Mt. Day must be announced somehow sometime in advance. Perhaps simply announcing the week of Mt. Day would suffice and let everyone guess which day. This would probably ensure the nice weather aspect but, would students embark on week long parties in anticipation of the festivities? Perhaps letting everyone know twenty four hours in advance via posters, WKVR, and mail flyers would alleviate some of the problems. Or how about just letting professors and food service know? It is up to the next Mt. Day committee to look into the future prospects. A new idea is definitely needed, however.

All I want is to be alone
Sometimes
To put aside the black and white words and close the covers and open my mind
Like a book
When the ending wants to make me cry
And feel like a child for the first time.
And walk with the rain and the gentle thunder and know the sun will soon light the book again just for me.
Standing on the cliffs beside the moon
To feel the distant fingers
Hand me some thoughts to play with
As the book does as she stands in the yellow skirt watching the black and white horses surrounded by mist and emotion as I realize
As all I am is a student.

All I want for you

Typewriter Missing

The Alfarata Staff has started off the school year working hard toward a yearbook for 1981. Unfortunately, the job is being done without the use of their IBM Correcting Selectric II typewriter.

Where could this unique keyboard machine be? This question remains unanswered. No one who is any way involved with Alfarata seems to have any idea where it could be.

The editor of Alfarata, Janet Zuna, says that she is unaware of any information pertaining to its loss. Security knew nothing about the subject until very recently when it was brought up. Wayne Justham, director of programming, knew the typewriter was missing but has not heard anything else about it. There are just a few of the many people who were asked about "the case of the missing typewriter."

The typewriter could not have vanished into thin air. Maybe it was stolen or even borrowed. It could also be somewhere that no one has access to. If there is anyone who has any ideas or information leading to or concerning the whereabouts of the typewriter, please contact Security of anyone involved in Alfarata.

Go Abroad

by John George

On Tuesday, October 28, at 8:15 p.m. there will be a meeting in the Ellis Faculty Lounge for all students interested in learning more about studying abroad. The meeting is sponsored by the Foreign Studies Committee and will include short talks by several Juniata students who studied abroad last year as well as refreshments and plenty of opportunity for informal conversation and discussion.

Juniata sponsors several foreign study programs. The oldest is "Brethern Colleges Abroad" with opportunities in England, France, Germany and Spain. In addition, Juniata has exchange study opportunities in several university departments in France and Germany. These are basically one-for-one exchanges, through which 7 German and 4 French students (and one teacher, Dr. Gerard Lepoutre) have this year been able to come to Juniata. Details of these and other programs are the subject of Tuesday's meeting.

Even though studying abroad may seem to be an "off-beat" thing for many Juniata students to think about, Dr. Russey, chairman of the Committee, stressed the fact that it can be an important advantage when the time comes to enter the job market, as well as a chance to learn more about our place in the world and how others study subjects taught at Juniata. The cost of studying abroad is very reasonable and in most cases the courses taken fit right into a normal Juniata degree program. Any student even slightly interested in learning more about the opportunities is urged to attend. During the meeting, reasons to be abroad and what a student should do in preparation will be explored.

Reflections on the "America" concert:

Lucy Heggenstaller — I think they were great, all around, even the back-up band.

Bruce Beisel — Both groups performed very well. I hope Juniata can have more concerts in the future.

Rick Burgan — I thought the band performed exceptionally well and I really enjoyed it and hope there are more concerts planned for the future.

Roy Castor — I had a good time, but I would have had a better time if the ticket was cheaper.

Muddy Run

Wrapped in delight
A warm blanket some frosty night a flannel shirt and wool socks standing with the flagpole watching the lights go out
Or listen to Muddy Run whisper as soft as possible
Under the snow
Over the river
Through the woods
For the girl in the yellow skirt and the horses and for you enjoying the cold caressing your face to grandmother's house you go not caring how childish
You look ahead and see me reaching out
To hold my and
And let me join you
As we eat pumpkin pie together you listen to me telling how beautiful they buried her in the yellow skirt but she never really died as I can't feel sorry as she never really lived but you live right now
As all I want you to be is a student.

All I want for us is to be alone
To dream
Together the girl in the yellow skirt and the horses and the moon
Approach us shyly
And we all ride to the cliffs and feel their power etching us in lines of black and white as the book the paper the sun the ending the memory makes us want to read more and draws us
Together as we see
As all I want is for you to read me.

Hot Wax

Steve Forbert is one of the best singer-songwriters around right now. He is an artist, a poet, a troubador. Like Warren Zevon, Bruce Springsteen and Jackson Browne, he has created his own style and his own image from a mixture of musical and cultural influences. But Forbert has a quality which many musician-poets lack: diversity. Whereas a Springsteen song can be picked out fairly readily, only the fact that Forbert is singing (with his grinding, high-pitched moan) tells you it's a Forbert song. He can write country-honk just as well as he can write progressive pop; ballads as well as rockers. And he reels them off, one after another, refusing to be classified as "folk" or "new wave" or "country." He has absorbed all of his musical influences — rock, pop, blues and country-western — and he gives them back to his audience with his own special inflections and twists. He also uses a wide variety of studio musicians, making for a different sound on each style of song.

On Little Stevie Orbit, his third album, Forbert's diversity and talent continue to expand. The album has some outstanding power pop, Cellophane City, Laughter Lou and I'm An Automobile especially. His love songs include Song For Katrina and Lonely Girl. Schoolgirl and Rain have strong country influences. One More Glass of Beer and A Visitor display Forbert's adept mastery of poetic phrases, and Get Well Soon is this album's Romeo's Tune. The studio band ranges from a full-blown six-piece ensemble to simple piano and vocal accompaniment.

Steve Forbert's music, range and flair comprise a style which is impossible to classify. He could choose to concentrate his talents and become a star in one of many genres. On Little Stevie Orbit, he proves that with his diversity he is going to be around for a long time — after only two-and-a-half years and three albums, he is already a musical force to be reckoned with.

Charles Pollock, director of Public Relations at Juniata College takes the stage in "Sleuth", Chet's most recent production.

Out & About

by Dana Cope

This week Out and About took us to the Carriage House Experimental Theatre (CHET) to see the suspensful shocker, "Sleuth" by Anthony Shaffer and produced by Jarmillo Polte and directed by Jody Butte. The play is set in Wittshire England in the country home of Andrew Wyke (played by Charlie Pollock). Mr. Pollock's display of a sleuth author who's writings become reality through his own actions is superb. Andrew Wyke is taken into custody by Inspector Doppler (played by Paul Stevens) for the murder of Milo Tindle (played by Steve Poltep) though Andrew denies he had anything to do with the disappearance of Milo. "Sleuth" will be shown again this week, Wed. Oct. 22; Thurs. Oct. 23; Fri. Oct. 24; and Sat. Oct. 25; with showtime at 8:30. Student tickets are $3.00

Saints, Sovereigns, and Sinners Coming to Juniata

The Ensemble for Early Music presented a musical show consisting of 14th and 15th century pieces performed on authentic, period instruments at Juniata College on Oct. 21.

The Tuesday evening concert, set for 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium, was the second of seven programs composing the college's 1980-81 Artist Series.

The Ensemble's Juniata show, "Saints, Sovereigns & Sinners," was one of five shows included in the group's 1980-81 subscription series of New York City's Lincoln Center. In fact, the Ensemble performed the show at Lincoln Center on Saturday, Oct. 25, just four days after doing so at Juniata.

"Saints, Sovereigns & Sinners" is described as consisting of "haunting sounds of the 14th and 15th centuries to commemorate both Christopher Columbus and Halloween." As such, it contains "spirited" chansons from Fernando Columbus' own manuscript, pilgrim songs and a dance of death.

During its Juniata concert, the Ensemble — which specializes in using "old and odd" instruments — introduced its newest acquisition, a 15th century "clavicytherium."

It also utilized counter-tenors and a soprano described as "marvelous" in performing its wide unity of selections. included in the program were peasant songs, soldiers' drinking songs, court songs, carnival songs and songs of woe.

About the "Saints, Sinners & Sovereigns" concert, the New York "Times" observed: "A most worthy resurrection, simultaneously of intellectual and esthetic interest. Mr. Renz's taste and musicianship set the tone of the evening. . . .replete with integrity."

Since its inception, the Ensemble has been in residence at the world's largest goethic cathedral, The Cathedral of St. John the Devine in New York City. And, for the last three years, it also has been in residence at the Detroit Institute of Arts through a Paul Foundation grant.

In December, 1979, the Ensemble for Early Music's first album — "Christmas in Anglia: Early English Music for Christmastide" (recorded on Nonesuch) — was selected as the "Best of the Month" album by the prestigious "Stereo Review" magazine. In its review, the magazine described the vocal portions and "lovely instrumental miniatures" as "simply wonderful."

In addition, the Ensemble has produced four albums for the Musical Heritage Society. These albums are due for release in November.

Other programs in the 1980-81 Artist Series will be presented by Michael Houstoun, recipient of top honors in two major international piano competitions, on Nov. 16;

Mountain Day offers a day off for relaxation and fun for Juniata students, administrators and faculty.

Attendance Record Broken on Mt. Day

by Patty Rauschenberger

"It's Mountain Day today!", was the saying that greeted the Juniata College Community on Tuesday October 14, 1980.

This year Mountain Day was held at Greenwood Furnace. The day began later in the morning with the first bus leaving at 9 a.m. The early morning was chilly so many headed back to bed. A fire in the pavillion fireplace however, was a welcome sight to early arrivers.

Morning activities consisted of free play volleyball, hikes to the shale pit lead by Dr. Washburn and hikes to the furnace lead by Dr. Hieberling. The major event was the Cross Country Race, in which only seven contestants entered this year. This lack of participation was due mostly to the surprise element of Mountain Day. First place winner this year was Dan Gipe, Jean-Paul Wickart in second and Jeff Kuhn in third. Peggy Daugherty and Beth Carpenter tied for first in the women's division. Trophies and T-shirts will be presented to the winners.

Lunch was served at noon and not a moment too soon as everyone seemed to arrive at once. Barbecued chicken and spare ribs, noodle salads and rolls along with hot cider and coffee hit the spot.

After lunch everyone headed towards the beach for the traditional tug-of-war. There was plenty of class support as each one stepped up with hopes of winning. The big upsets were the Senior girls over the Senior guys and the Sophomore girls over the Freshman guys. Also winning were the Freshmen guys over the Sophomore, Junior, and Senior guys.

The next event was the egg toss. Two lines were needed because there were so many people. The sand helped a lot of people but finally the contest was narrowed down to the winning team of Bob Boren and Dwight Lancaster, both Seniors.

The rest of the afternoon was devoted to the Volleyball Tournament and the Senior vs. Faculty Football game.

The football game had a scoreless first half with both teams maintaining a good defense. In the second half the faculty came back determined to win, and proved themselves by scoring the first touchdown. Good attempts by the student team could not stop the faculty who went on to win it 14-0.

Despite all the complaints about the surprise Mountain Day, Tuesday was the best turn out in the past four years. There were about 500 served at lunch time. The views expressed by many of the students were that they enjoyed Mountain Day or thought it was their best ever.

The whole day went smoothly due to the cooperation of maintenance, the bus company and food service. It was nice to see so many faculty and their families come out for the day.

The weather was made to order. Wayne Justham, Director of Student Activities, felt the turnout made "surprise Mountain Day worth it. Everyone truly had a day off," which is what Mountain Day is all about.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

The offense fails to score, heads down, they shuffle to the bench, their game weary defensive teammates hustle out to their respective positions, to play another long inning. In the rapidly changing world of professional baseball what seems like a far-fetched figment of some insignificant sportswriters overactive imagination today may become reality tomorrow.

If they have a man to hit for the pitcher, why not for every defensive player? Wouldn't the game be more exciting if every man who came to bat was a great hitter?

Nine George Bretts on each team. Guys who could devote their full attention to hitting. Nine more Larry Bowas, who could field like machines. Wouldn't that make baseball more exciting for those who aren't satisfied with it now.

Who knows what levels players could reach. In time a 400 hitter might be considered mediocre, and a fielder might be released for making an error. Will baseball eventually become so specialized that each man has only one function? It may seem far-fetched but consider the direction baseball has taken in the past decade. Long relief pitchers, short relievers, baserunning specialist who are used strictly to pinch run, knuckleballers and the designated hitter.

"It just puts you to sleep, I hate it!" that's what Dallas Green, the manager of the Philadelphia Phillies had to say about the D.H. rule. Other critics might not be so polite. In a time when baseball managers are as expendable as 158 hitters that is a pretty gutsy statement about what seems to be a pretty popular rule change.

You can all me old fashioned and backwards but I happen to agree with Dallas Green, the D.H. is a cancer to baseball, it takes three-quarters of the strategy out of the game. After watching that amazing National League playoff series it would be difficult for anyone to argue that there is no strategy involved in managing a baseball team and in my opinion anything that interferes with that strategy is detrimental to the game.

Matmen Set

Coming off its most successful season over, the Juniata College wrestling team opened pre-season drills this week.

Coach Bill Berrier's squad recorded an 11-4-1 record last winter, the most wins ever by an Indian mat team, but the loss of three top performers tempers the optimism that seven returning starters would normally induce.

Gone are All-American Joe Paskill (70-15-3 career), Middle Atlantic Conference place-winner Todd Roadman (19-7 last year), and three-year veteran Bruce Amig.

"Those losses will not be easily overcome," says Berrier. "In addition, we have a tougher schedule this season. Our goal, then, will be to have a winning record. With the right breaks, we could even have an outstanding season."

Rob Funk, who was conference runner-up and qualified for the Division III Nationals last year at 142 pounds, leads the returning veterans. Funk was 19-7 last season, two losses coming in the NCAA tourney and another in the MAC finals.

Other top veterans are: senior 126-pounder Bob Gay 19-7 last year; sophomore 190-pounder Keith Sherbine, 6-5 after coming out in mid-season; and junior heavyweight Dan Jendrzejewski, fourth in the conference as a freshman and 11-9 last winter.

Top newcomers are freshmen Dave Sloan, Craig Stafford and Mark Murdock.

"We have a good nucleus returning, and several top-flight freshmen entering the program, so we should be tough," Berrier notes. If the freshmen don't lose confidence in the early going, we should be in good shape come tournament time."

Women Cagers Open Drills

With memories of last year's Cinderella story lingering in Memorial Gym, the 1980-81 Juniata College women's basketball team opened pre-season drills this week.

Fourth-year head coach Nancy Latimore welcomed seven letterwinners — four starters included — from last season's 24-4 squad among her 14 candidates. While last year's team advanced to the national Division III quarterfinals, Latimore is "guardedly" optimistic about the upcoming campaign.

"Our success will depend," she feels, "on how well we fill the one forward spot left open by All-American Nancy Zinkham. We do return our other starters, but we'll need more than four good players to contend for even the Middle Atlantic Conference title."

Heading the list of veterans is 5-10 senior center Julie George, the Tribe's career scoring leader. A first-team All-American last season, she was also a first-team MAC North selection. George has scored 1,041 points in three years and holds more than 30 other Indian single-game, seasonal and career marks.

Three sophomores are back after playing major roles in propelling the Indians into national prominence: 5-3 guard Aimee Brua, 5-4 guard Nancy Roach, and 5-5 forward Judy Pepoy. Pepoy averaged 11.3 points and 6.3 rebounds per game, Brua contributed 11.4 points each outing and Roach averaged eight points per contest.

Ellen Fasnacht, a 5-7 sophomore who averaged four points per game last year is the leading candidate for Zinkham's vacated position. She'll have to stave off challenges, however, from two top freshman prospects: 5-10 Marie Glendenning and 5-9 Margaret Stover.

Others who will push for playing time are 4-11 junior guard Terri Eckenrode and highly-touted 5-5 freshman guard Michele Wengryn.

"We have our work cut out for us," notes Latimore. "Scranton, the only team to beat us last year, and UPJ, who finished ahead of us in the Regionals, are both on the schedule. Elizabethtown, Shippensburg and Bucknell should also be strong. We'll have to be ready early, as some of our toughest games will come in the first few weeks of the season."

Latimore is worried about the effects of last year's success upon this season's team. "We enjoyed our success last season, but past victories do not get you into the playoffs. There's a new season ahead of us, and with it, a lot of new challenges."

The complete Indian schedule:

Dec. 3, at Frostburg; 6, at Shippensburg; 10, St. Francis; 12 & 13, at Bridgewater Tournament; 17, Susquehanna;

Jan. 13, at Gettysburg; 17, Scranton; 20, at Susquehanna; 22, Elizabethtown; 24, Frostburg; 27, at Pitt-Johnstown; 29, King's;

Feb. 3, Bucknell; 7, Messiah; 10, at York; 14, Lycoming; 16, at St. Francis; 19, at Dickinson; 21, Wilkes.

V-Ball Wins 17th

by Duane Wright

The JC Volleyball team raised their latest winning streak to 10 last week as they defeated St. Francis, Duquesne, Penn State-Altoona, West Chester and York. On the road, the girls played in a tri-match at St. Francis and beat St. Francis 15-3, 15-7 and Duquesne 15-2, 15-11. Then they traveled to the Penn State-Altoona Campus where they came out with a 15-3, 15-7, 15-12 victory. Finally, the girls played at home against West Chester and York. In the first match, outstanding plays highlighted an exciting win for JC over West Chester 10-15, 15-0, 15-7. The second match saw West Chester defeat York by scores of 10-15, 15-4, 16-14. The third match was JC against York with the Tribe coming up winners by scores of 15-6, 15-12. The girls are 17-2 and play Elizabethtown at Memorial Gym on Thursday and travel to Mansfield on Friday and Saturday for a tournament against some of the top volleyball teams in Pennsylvania and New York.

Soccer Trips

by Chris Kanaskie

The Juniata Soccer Team continued their quest for that all elusive first wi.. last week against two opponents, York College and Messiah College. Both games turned out bad for the booters as they dropped both matches, 4-0 and 6-0, respectively.

In last Wednesday's match, the Indians traveled to York with hopes of coming home with a victory. However, somewhere between the trip up and the trip back the hope faded.

After a well played first half, which saw the tribe trail only 1-0, the J.C. game just disappeared. A non-existent offense, and a few costly errors on the defense's behalf proved to be the deciding factor in the match game, as York tallied three times to put the game out of reach.

On Saturday the team traveled to Grantham, Pennsylvania to visit a tough opponent in Messiah.

Messiah came into the game with a record of 11-3, including a win over Elizabethtown College, a team which humbled Juniata 12-0.

The first half of the match was very evenly played with neither team having a decided advantage. Messiah scored the only goal of the half on a deflected shot. The half ended 1-0 in favor of Messiah.

As was the case in Wednesday's game, the second half of the Messiah game proved to be a killer for J.C. The team just seemed to fall asleep on defense as Messiah marched right in and scored 4 goals in a little over 10 minutes.

As the case has been all season, the offense lacked potency for much of the game. The only real scoring chance for Juniata occured when Dan Hutchinson hit the post of a header off a nice feed on a direct kick.

Messiah scored once more late in the game to make the final score 6-0.

The soccer team has been lacking in intensity for most of the season. The only game that they have put out for the entire game was against Kings on Parent's Weekend. If the team could revive that intensity it would stand a very good chance at winning the remainder of their games.

The Indians travel to Frostburg State on Wednesday, October 22 and return home on Saturday to face Albright College.

C.C. Kicks It In

by Dana Cope

With earing flashing in the sun of a perfect day for a x-country meet the Juniata harriers captured their 5th win in a row by defeating a relatively good York squad, 23-37. Expecting more competition from York than from past teams, the Indians went out in a quick 5:00 first mile determined to run the Yorksters into the ground over the 5.65 mile hilly home course. Again, Bill "Hero" Shuler crossed the finish first with a new school record of 31:17 beating his own mark by a mere second. York captured the next two places with their only scores in the top 12 runners. The rest of the Indians checked in as follows: Tom Wise, Tom Hoffman, George Peterson, Andy Pearson, Tim Swartz, LiRoy "Gordon" Castor, Mike Murray, Greg Kidd, and Tony "Cool and Trendy" Calderelli.

The Juniata Squaws soundly destroyed a whimpy York team 16-47 under the same perfect conditions over their 3.25 mile course. Consistant with past races, Juniata's own freshman, Carolyn Andre again received top laurels coming across in 22:44. York only managed to make one spot in the top 8, placing 5th. The rest of the Juniata squad raced to these results: Mickey Pitale, Jeanne McLaughlin, Dana Taylor, Lisa Rizzo, Robin Bardman, Nancy Roach, and Lenora Golamis.

The women then took a road trip to Franklin and Marshall Saturday for a triple dual meet with Johns Hopkins, Millersville, and F and M. The Indians upped their record to 4-3 by beating both Johns Hopkins, 25-30, and F and M, 27-28, though dropping a decision to Millersville by one point, 28-27. Carolyn Andre was the first Indian to finish and fifth overall. The first five Juniata women all came in within 70 seconds of each other putting 5 Indians in the top 15 with both Nancy Roach and Lisa Rizzo having superb performances coming in 5th and 4th for Juniata respectively. Carolyn Andre, Jeanne McLaughlin, Dana Taylor, Lisa Rizzo, and Nancy Roach were the first five J.C. finishers.

Both teams make a trip to Dickinson on Tuesday and both should have no trouble upping their records. As expressed by one Juniata runner; "we've never shut any team out in four years, and this could be the one, so we're going out to abuse and abuse badly!"

On November 8th both squads travel to the MAC championships to try and improve over last years placings. As the bet goes, if we win MAC's there will be a glitter in our coach's ear.

Football Drops

by Steve Thomas

The Lycoming Warriors put down the Indians in the gridiron battle on College Field last Saturday. The 28-7 victory placed Lycoming's conference count at 4-1 and dropped Rob Ash's Indian record to 2-1 in the MAC Northern Division.

The outcome of the contest was not indicative of the play. Ash felt his defense, the linebacking corps in particular, had probably their finest game of the season. Lycoming, statistically the best offensive team in the conference was held to only 271 total yards, mounting only one real scoring drive. Their other scores came by capitalizing on JC turnovers, all within the 30 yard line. All American candidate QB Rick Burd was held to only 127 yards in the air. Jeff Miles picked off a pass appearing in his first offensive role in three games. Down lineman Matt Blauch and Terry Heffner combined for 20 tackles and kept constant pressure on the passer, Burd.

Juniata's offense was not as undeniable as it has been in previous games. Aware of the Tribe's past success on the ground, Lycoming executed their stunts in anticipation of the run. As a result the Indians were stopped inside the 25 a disheartening five times. The generally uncontainable Jeff Miles was held to only 19 yards rushing. Tom Bell held all rushes with 73 yards on 13 carries. His 68 yard blast provided the Indians' only score.

Following the Miles' interception on the JC 32, Tom Bell took the ball on the first play of the possession for his excellent touchdown run. Hench's kick was good and JC led 7-0. Miles fumbled on Juniata's next possession to start the string of costly turnovers. Lycoming wasted no time and three minutes later the score was tied 7-7.

Lycoming scored twice in the second quarter, both due to the Tribe's turnover epidemic. The first came when DT Wade Ritter intercepted a Miles' toss on the JC 6 and ran in for the six. The good kick made the score 14-7. Less than a minute later the Warriors were in the endzone again on a 14 and scrambled by QB Burd. The score was set up by a Bell fumble on the JC 17. The half ended 21-7 in favor of Lycoming.

There was only one score in the second half. Although the Indians threatened constantly, it was the Warrior that crossed the goal line. The 83 yard march consumed 6:23 and was capped by 6 yard dash by Mike Santoleri. The final score was 28-7.

Next week the Indians face Upsala (2-2 MAC Northern Division) away. Coach Ash feels "(they are) as talented as any team we'll see all season." The Vikings have two fine quarterbacks and utilize their abilities with a lot of short passes and options. The Indians hope to mix up their offensive attack with more passing to keep defenses from keying specifically on Bell and Miles. Passing from formations that they have been running from would probably prove effective. Mike Nett should see a lot of play time. A win will put JC's record at 3-1 in the division and keep them in the running for the championship.

Tough One Eagles Fly

by Doug Wallace

In one of the hardest fought games of the year the Philadelphia Eagles defeated the Dallas Cowboys 17-10 before an all-Eagle crowd at the Vet. The Cowboys scored first as Jaworski was sacked and a Cowboy linebacker recovered the ball in the endzone. The Eagles came right back as they worked the ball down into Tony Franklin's field goal range, and he booted it cleanly through to cut the Cowboys lead to 7-3. The Eagles also came up with the next score as Jaworski hit all-pro receiver Harold Carmichael with a touchdown pass, which gave the Eagles a 10-7 lead. This lead did not hold up, however, as the Cowboys kicked a field goal to send the teams into half-time deadlocked 10-10.

Both teams came out fired up for the third quarter but neither could put any points on the board. This was some of the hardest hitting football all year as the teams battled up and down the field. Then on one of the biggest plays of the year Ron Jaworski hit Charlie "Home-Boy" Smith with a touchdown pass to give the Eagles a 17-10 lead with five minutes left. The Eagles held on for the win as the Cowboys missed a fourth down touchdown pass. The Eagles are now 6-1 and have sole possession of first place in the NFC east.

Trustees Hold Fall Meetings

Tuition Increases to $6795 — up 15%

by Heather MacCrindle

Trustee weekend, composed of a series of day-long seminars and a Saturday Board Meeting, was held October 17 and 18. These seminars were attended by the representative trustees of that committee, two faculty members, and two student representatives chosen by Student Government. Student Government has made the decisions of these Trustee Meetings available to the student body through its Public Relations department.

The committees of Trustee Weekend were concerned with the Budget, Buildings and Grounds, Executive Actions, Planning and Development, Academic Affairs, and Student Services.

The major decision of the Trustee Budget Committee has already been announced to the student body — that is the 15 percent increase in tuition, room, and board for the 81-82 school year. Tuition will go from this year's $4065 to $4740; room costs from $855 to $945; and board expenses from $990 to $1110.

Student representatives at this meeting expressed both their concern for the sudden large increase and the effect it will have on enrollment. Representatives also stated that students are unaware of how their money is being spent, and might not be so upset about the increase if they could be shown what their money is being spent on.

A trustee on this committee had done research into the costs of private institutions and brought these results to the meeting, showing that J.C. is much lower in tuition than other competitive schools. He used Bucknell as his example as a comparative school, claiming that Juniata is $1400 less however Bucknell is the highest priced college of our competitors. The proposed increase in tuition is also a smaller percentage than the increases made in other schools, he said.

$900,000 Raised for Century II Campaign

Over $900,000 of the $4 million goal needed for Juniata College's sports complex and Century II campaign has been received, as reported at the Planning and Development Committee meeting held October 17 during Trustees Weekend at Juniata College.

The committee discussed the two major objectives for 1980-1981, one of which is the Century II campaign involving the new sports complex. The other major objective is the Annual Support Fund which has set its goal for this year at $240,000 and 45% alumni participation.

In review of the 1979-1980 Development Act, Foster Ulrich reported that $380,000 was received in cash and commitments toward the total of $385,000 needed for progress on Founders Hall renovations. The major events of the past year discussed were church-college relations, new alumni and public relation offices, and the launching of the Century II campaign, he reported.

Kevin McCullen, Director of Planning and Institional research outlined this year's long range college goals. These goals are in the areas of: enrollment, curriculum, student services, student outcomes, budget and finance, building and grounds, and development of alumni and public relations.

A presentation by an investment banker on financing funds for the new gym was given, and three different financial devices were suggested for the college.

The meeting was chaired by Vincent Sarni. Student representatives from the college were Mark Ickes and Janice Haub. Student representatives reported to Student Government and the College Governance committee within student government on the meeting.

Trustee meetings are held each year in the spring and fall.

S.G. Adopts Additional Voting Procedures

by Dennis Cutillo

During the last meeting of the student government, the addition of two new by-laws to the constitution was discussed. The two new by-laws which both deal with voting procedures were voted on and accepted by the student government.

One of the by-laws, by-law VI, introduces the option of a closed vote in the voting process. A closed vote may be called for by any Executive Committee member or Senator, and insures that the vote will be a fair one. The closed vote eliminates peer pressure and the influences put on government members by their friends to vote a specific way.

The second of the by-laws offers the student government members a chance to discuss all issues completely before voting. This enables all members to have a knowledgable background on which to base their decision and avoids a call for a vote when some members are still unsure. This by-law also includes two conditions. One is that if an issue is still unresolved after the first meeting it can only be postponed until the next meeting when a decision must be made. The other condition allows the Executive Committee members the right to call for an immediate vote if an important issue must be decided on quickly.

These two by-laws are an improvement to the constitution insuring a fairer voting procedure.

Off-Campus Parking No Longer Violation

by Kathy Novak

Several complaints were recently voiced by students who were receiving traffic citations from Campus Security for not having their vehicles registered, even though they were parked off campus on Eighteenth Street at the time. Security felt justified in their actions in spite of the fact that Eighteenth Street is under city jurisdiction and should normally be open for public parking. This posed a problem for nonresident students who were forced to use public parking in commuting to the campus.

Harry Crawford, Director of Security, stressed that one of the main reasons for issuing the citations was to encourage students to register their vehicles. As stated in the Pathfinder, "All students who bring motor vehicles to the College area, whether to the campus itself or not, must register their cards with the Director of Security." This is to ensure proper and quick identification of an automobile for security reasons. The Pathfinder also states that nonresident students must register their cards and use public street parking.

The discrepancy arose when the complaints were directed to the Huntingdon Police Department, who claimed that there should be no limitation on parking if there are no signs posted. However, the College takes the stand that it is not bound by political jurisdiction in this case, but is instead governed by an administrative regulation. This makes it mandatory for all students, staff and faculty to have their vehicles registered and to have both compliance and display of the registration stickers.

Failure to abide by this regulation could result in several warnings, and possibly a fine and/or disciplinary action. Mr. Crawford stated that if anyone comes in to register their vehicle within five days of receiving the citation, the fine will be withdrawn.

In response to student protests, the practice of citing off-campus automobiles for lack of registration will no longer be in

We Need Free Press

What is freedom of the press? According to President Carter, "A free and unmanaged press is one of the proudest symbols of our democratic government and one of its boldest champions. And conversely, an open government is one of the staunchest protectors of the free press and of the people whose trust it holds." Freedom of the press is a basic right guaranteed under the first amendment of the constitution. It is a keystone to democracy. Jean Otto, National President of the Society of Professional Journalists states, in an article entitled A Free Press is Your Right, "impingements on the press, from whatever quarter, do not just injure the press, they hurt every individual American citizen." There are laws established by the government to protect the right of the press to report, known as the "Sunshine Laws" and the "Freedom of Information Act" to site a few.

The press, too, has certain obligations to report honestly and objectively. In exchange for the right of free press the media is ethically obliged to report, fairly, the facts to the readers who expect to hear nothing but the facts unless otherwise stated (i.e. editorials or reviews). The press also has a certain obligation to its sources to respect confidentiality and what is known as "off the record" comments which may, if reported, unnecessarily damage the source or something the source is trying to protect. Wherever one looks in society, rights are guaranteed in exchange for certain responsibilities on the part of those granted the rights.

Juniata College, being a private institution is exempt from certain laws, even laws as basic as freedom of the press. It is not legally bound to cooperate with the press in allowing it to report what the "citizens" of the Juniata community ought to be informed of, it is not obligated to allow the press access to primary sources which guarantee the obtainment of the objective and uncensured information within the bounds of professional journalism. The Juniatian is bound ethically to the principles of professional journalism, i.e. to report honestly and objectively information regarding the citizens of the community, which necessitates the use of primary sources.

The question is — shouldn't the administrative bodies of the Juniata community be bound ethically, if not legally, to ensure access to primary source information, guaranteed to the public press by law under free press laws, in order that the Juniatian can do the job it is attempting to set out to do, report honestly and objectively the facts?

Planners Upset

The Mountain Day Committee feels it is our responsibility to reply to the articles and lay-out concerning Mountain Day in last week's paper.

The first page of a newspaper is not for an editorial which is exactly what Bob Kemper's article was. It was filled with his opinion and lacked the facts which are desired in a news worthy article. On page two is the editorial which is also a negative voice on Mountain Day. Both articles remark about Food Service and the food that was sitting around waiting for Mountain Day. Food Service knew in advance when Mountain Day was and had time to prepare fresh food for the day. The reporters should be sure of their "facts" before printing.

The spontaneity of Mountain Day was not for the sole purpose of keeping the partying to a minimum; it was to give the campus a day off which is the whole reason for having Mountain Day. The fellowship shared among students and faculty cannot happen if they use the day for work or as a reading day. If the weeks were made public we might as well go back to announcing the day.

When we finally get to the article about Mountain Day, the activities, attendance and such on page four, the negative effect is already there and people just were not interested in another Mountain Day article.

In spite of all the complaints and discrepancies the secret caused, we had the most successful Mountain Day in the history of Juniata. Over 900 students, faculty and staff were there to enjoy the day. We know we cannot please everyone but we are working on developing a better system for next year.

Sincerely yours,
The Mountain Day Committee:

America a Hit

I would like to commend all those students on concert committee that helped make the AMERICA concert a success. I also want to thank the monitors for doing a superb job. Special thanks go to the co-sponsor, WKVR — FM.

Working on a major concert takes a lot of hard work. Initial work began last May when contacts were made with the various bands under consideration. The

"It's that time of year again," said Linus as they sat down. "The Great Pumpkin will rise out of the pumpkin patch and teach a valuable lesson to all the good boys and girls."

"Can that Great Pumpkin stuff, Linus!" demanded Lucy with an upraised fist. "I paid good money to eat at this place and if you spoil my dinner I'll bop you one!"

Linus, Lucy, Charlie Brown, and Snoopy had saved all their money for weeks (of course, they only worked for Peanuts) so they could eat at the Juniata College cafeteria. They were all considering entering college and wanted to see what a college meal was really like, so they were attending the famous Halloween dinner.

"Just look at the people," said Charlie Brown. "There's some guy dressed as Superman, a girl dressed as a witch, and a bunch of people dressed like the fruit from fruit-of-the-loom underwear. What a nuthouse!"

"There's a squirrel!" shouted Linus, supporting Charlie Brown's nuthouse label.

"It's a costume party, doo-doos!" said Lucy.

By this time, many people were staring at their table and Charlie Brown nervously asked Lucy to keep quiet. But Snoopy was the one on trial; everyone was looking at him because he was lapping at his food like a dog.

"What a cute costume," said the witch to Snoopy as she walked by.

"You bet your pointy head, sweetie," thought Snoopy.

They finished their meal in silence, then watched the

Students Speak

by Nancy Gonlin

Q: What is your opinion on the plus-minus grading system?

Ben Kellum — It gives a better idea to students and employers how well they are doing. But unfortunately the minuses sound bad on any grade.

Sharon Cooney — I don't agree with it at all. You should be given the straight grade, it shouldn't matter if you are a little above or below. It's especially unfair to upperclassmen, who have already had between 1 to 3 years of the regular grading system.

Eric Fuhrmann — I feel that the new plus-minus system is defeating the purpose for which it was created. It was purposed to help students on border line grades, but it has gone too far in dividing grades. Now, professors who used to raise 78's and 79's to B's are content to stay with the 2.67 without looking for a reason to raise the grade. How about a compromise with 3 — 3.5 B, 3.5 — B+, etc.?

Nancy Roach — I'm not particularly in favor of it. The only good point I can see in it would be the extra QPA points regarding the +'s. However the minuses could be more injurious to many people who may just make their grades.

costumes parading around to be judged.

"Hey, Fido," Superman yelled at Snoopy, "come on up here and join the contest, your costume's great!"

Snoopy growled menacingly at this threat to his identity, but Superman rudely yanked him from his chair and held him above his head for everyone to see. Snoopy was awarded first prize for the best costume.

"But Snoopy isn't even wearing a costume." a troubled Charlie Brown whispered to Linus.

"Perhaps this isn't really even a costume party." said Linus philosophically. "Perhaps the costumes are simply extensions of personalities."

For no apparent reason objects were suddenly thrown from the other side of the cafeteria, seemingly aimed at Linus for his sight. Apples, glasses, bowls full of peanut butter, and of course, pumpkins crashed around the table.

"It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown!" Linus screamed joyfully as a great pumpkin sailed through the air and splatted on poor Charlie Brown's head.

"It's a great mess, Linus." whimpered Charlie Brown as he tried to clear the orange slop from his eyes.

Another pumpkin whisked by Charlie Brown's head and smacked into Linus's face, abruptly rocking him out of his chair and splashing his Great Pumpkin dreams forever.

"And what valuable lesson did your Great Pumpkin teach you?" Lucy sneered sarcastically, just before her hair was drenched with French dressing.

"This campus is living in a comic-strip world!" shrieked Linus. "Let's make a break for it!"

Snoopy fiercely bit his way through the food-fighting crowd as the three companions followed. Even when the four were outside they felt stripped of their humiliation.

Out & About

by David Heisterkamp

Tired of the Sloppy Joes you ate this afternoon? Tired of the Veal Somethingini you ate last night? If you answered yes, you're not alone. Although the food service people probably do the best job they can in feeding all of us hungry Juniata students, we do tend to miss the "good" food we ate back home. Oh, to be waiting in line for a meal that Mom cooked. But don't be too disappointed. All is not lost. Within minutes in all directions, Juniata students have food choices between pizza and Big Macs, chicken and steak. But even those places get boring after awhile. Sure, you can be in and out in 45 minutes but what good is that if you want to have a special night out with that special guy or girl? Are you going to walk in all dressed up, order a pizza with the works, and munch? No Way! What all students could use now and then is a nice night out at a nice restaurant. Try the Vista Vu.

East on 22, about 15 minutes from the college, there is a fine restaurant called the Vista Vu. This is the place you want to go for that special night out. I took a date to dinner last week and although the Vista Vu does have its problems, we had a very nice time.

We arrived at the Vista Vu, which by-the-way, is also a motel, at 4:30 only to discover that the kitchen didn't open till 5:00. The owner/bartender offered us a seat at the bar until dinner could be served and we accepted. After a nice conversation with the bartender and cook, we took our seats in the dining room and looked at the menus.

Probably the worst aspect about the Vista Vu is that the average price on the menu is about nine dollars. So, to have a nice dinner including drinks, for two people, you better bring at least twenty-five bucks. (I told you this was for special occasions.)

The menu contained three basic categories: Italian delights, dinners From The Land and, dinners From The Sea. You had you're choice between lobster, steaks, chicken, squid, and other assorted dinners commonly found in large restaurants. The waiter returned with our drinks we had ordered earlier, and after a nice "chat," we placed our orders. Tenderloin Tips and Lobster . . . Why not? As the menu requests, we had to be patient for our food because "good food takes time to prepare." This gave us a chance to look around the Vista Vu.

The dining room is elegant. The lighting and set up of the tables is appropriate, although some factors of the Vista Vu's setup are conflicting. The Vista Vu has extremely nice wallpaper, yet they use paper napkins and plastic table cloths. They stress their classy atmosphere through the menu and overall looks yet showed a lack of careful preparation with a few spotted utensils.

The food finally came and we started to eat. The tips? Delicious! They were served with mushrooms and sauce. Along with the tips were mashed potatoes; I'm still debating whether they were instant or real, peas, which were good, and bread. The lobster was very good also, served with a baked potato and lemon and orange slices.

We didn't have dessert because the Vista Vu doesn't serve desserts. (There has to be some reason since we weren't asked.) Coffee wrapped up the evening.

Overall, the Vista Vu is a nice restaurant for that special night out. If anything its an alternative! The most impressive aspect of the Vista Vu are the people running the place. We were asked several times by the waiter and bartender if everything was all right. Both the waiter and bartender were very personable. They were interested in who we are and about Juniata. There was a lot of good ol' Huntingdon hospitality. Both my date and myself enjoyed the night.

To conclude this review, I must be quite honest to say that I've heard conflicting reports on the quality of Vista Vu's service. We had a nice time, maybe you could too! So, if you are sick of the Sloppy Joes, and you don't want to eat another Veal Somethingini, head out Route 22, east for about 15 minutes until you come to the Vista Vu. Tell 'em Dave sent you.

The Doors — Greatest Hits

The Doors Greatest Hits is a new phase anthology album. Ten of the band's best songs have been completely remastered and remixed on 1980 equipment. Recording studios of the 60's, when the Doors recorded most of their music, were not as sophisticated as are those of today. As a result, many older albums are not up to par with modern stereophonic equipment. Paul A. Rothchild, longtime Doors associate and producer, has done a superb job of remixing the original old master tapes. The result is a cleaner, more precise sound and a more effective rendition of classic Doors material. It's as if Jim Morrison was still around, and he and the band went back into the studio and redid some of their best tunes on modern equipment.

The Doors are becoming popular again, not only because they were one of the 60's biggest bands, but because their originality is still apparent and thriving. Also, a new biography of Jim Morrison's bizzare and tragic life, No One Here Gets Out Alive, has stirred up a storm of interest in the group.

Greatest Hits contains ten of the Doors' finest: Light My Fire and Break On Through from The Doors; People Are Strange and Love Me Two Times from Strange Days; Hello I Love You and Not To Touch the Earth from Waiting For the Sun; Touch Me from The Soft Parade; Roadhouse Blues from Morrison Hotel; and Riders on the Storm and the title track from L.A. Woman.

This new method of remastering and remixing old albums opens a whole new field in recorded music. Now, many classics of the 50's and 60's can be brought technically up to date. Albums by Elvis Presley, the Beatles, Jimi Hendrix, Cream, and by scores of other timeless performers can now be made to sound cleaner, clearer, and better.

Club Corner

by Nancy Gonlin

A relatively new club on campus is Campus Women's Organization (CWO). CWO offers a chance for the women of Juniata to get together and plan activities they would like to see on campus. Those interested are urged to attend the meetings and contribute their ideas. For November, a fund-raising coffeehouse is planned. Various other fund-raising activities are under consideration. Throughout the year, CWO will sponsor speakers on various subjects. A panel discussion on Family & Career is coming up. Winter activities are to be discussed at future meetings. Those with suggestions are welcome. Lyne Goodale and Patti Cook serve as co-directors for the group. Nancy Gonlin is secretary and Linda Buckels the treasurer. Advisors for CWO are Sue Twombly and Janet Lewis.

The Society of Physics Students allows students interested in or majoring in physics to get more involved in the physics department and its activities. Anyone interested may join at any time. Activities include field trips to other universities and physics conventions, guest speakers in physics related areas, movies, special projects, help sessions for physics courses and an induction dinner every spring. If interested in joining, one may contact David Headly, president; A. Albertin, vice-president; Don Rice, treasurer; or David Miller, secretary. Dr. Pfrogner is the advisor for the Society of Physics Students.

Juniata's Barristers Club provides information and opportunities for discussion for students who think they may be interested in attending law school. Meetings are held once a month. To be a member, one must be a full-time Juniata student and attend meetings. Speakers are scheduled from law schools and trips to law schools are planned. A member from the Admissions Committee of Dickinson spoke to the group on October 13th. Dan Shealer is president of the Barristers Club; Kathy Welch, vice-president; Sara Williams, secretary; Milan Tweardy, treasurer; and George Hand is the Executive Committeeman. Dr. Lasko sponsors the group.

search continued during the summer with the final decision depending on cost, the group's touring schedule, the availability of the gym and various other factors. AMERICA was chosen due to all these plus the fact that, as a "middle-of-the-road" band, they would have wider appeal.

Most of the real grind occurred after this with a month of concentrated publicity and work on such things as security (monitors, campus security, fire police), tickets (printing, distribution, selling) and hospitality (dressing rooms, food, drinks). On top of all this, we had to deal with contract negotiations, conflicts with sports, setting up the stage, and other minute details that always seemed to set us back. The ultimate job of coordinating the entire day turned out to be a real task with people in the gym from 9:30 a.m. Thursday until 1:30 a.m. on Friday morning.

The most spectacular aspect of the AMERICA concert was the total expenditure. The total budget was approximately $15,000 and was broken down as follows: $7500 (AMERICA), $4100 (sound and lights), $500 (Chris de Burgh), $3000 (expenses such as copyrights, publicity, hospitality, security, stage set-up, ticket printing, two follow spots and an operator). This doesn't include all the personal time devoted to the project by committee members and myself.

The students have complained for years about never getting good concerts. Yet, when it occurred, few (24) volunteered to help out and only about 60% (a record number!!) attended the function. The ones that didn't go complained about the group (who can please everyone?) or about ticket price. With a 2000 seat capacity and a $15,000 budget, charging under $7.00 would be unrealistic. If another concert happens this year, I hope that students will stop and think again before they start complaining!!!

Thank you,
Denise Steele

Washed Up?

Dear Editor:

I'd like to comment upon a situation that affects everybody living on campus: "the great washer and dryer problem." Since the beginning of the school year every dorm has been afflicted with this problem on a semi-regular basis and not much has been done about it. I think it's time we voiced our opinions on the subject.

My own breaking point came one afternoon last week. I didn't have any clean clothes, and did have tons of work to do, but I figured I could pop the clothes in the washer and do some reading in the process. Sounds simple, doesn't it? Unfortunately it doesn't work that way in real life. I found three of the four washers in South jammed; the fourth was being used by a girl from Lesher because all of theirs were out of commission. Because I had to, I spent the whole afternoon staking my claim to one washer to do two loads of laundry. Because I wanted to, I also tried to talk to someone "in authority" about the "problem."

This is what I found out: everyone seems to realize that things haven't been running "smoothly," but very few students have aired their complaints in the right places. So if you have some constructive criticism and/or suggestions, tell Mr. Quinlan in the physical plant. Hopefully, we can get some changes made because I'm sure we all have better things to do with our time than to camp out in laundry rooms for the remainder of the year.

Sincerely,
Ruth Batik

Tuition Rise

the Trustees that recent expenditures have gone to increased instructor's salaries, renovation of residence halls, increased fuel costs, better library facilities, and replacement of old, broken steam lines.

These broken steam lines were the topic of discussion of the Buildings and Grounds Committee. Mr. Quinlin, director of the physical plant, presented a report on conditions of the steam plant. The present boilers have a capacity to produce 40,000pph pressure but normal winter use only requires 17,000pph. This problem of over-production is seen in the high energy costs that are then passed along to the students. Another problem, presently being combatted, is the gradual build up of oxidized particles inside the pipes.

Major renovations made over the summer included new locks and shower floors in South and replacement of a steam pipe running in front of Oller Hall. A student representative brought up the need for additional campus lighting, improved laundry service and increased water pressure.

The college's architect presented a progress report of the Sports and Recreation Center, showing mock-ups for the field house, stadium, and gym. It is the job of the Century II Campaign to raise funds for the construction of this facility, which is now projected at $4 million for the Recreational Center alone.

The function of the Executive Committee of the Trustees is to formally pass proposals brought up at all prior meetings. The 15 percent increase in tuition was passed, although Doug Klepfer the President of Student Government, expressed concern that the middle class student not eligible for financial aid will be "hit hardest" by this increase, and that the school could lose potentially fine students as a result of this decision.

The motion was passed to allocate $100,000 to the architectural firm to draw up blueprints for the sports complex, enabling Juniata to present these drawings for construction bidding as early as January of 81. Since the "kick off" of the Century II Campaign during Homecoming Weekend $900,000 has been committed so far for the Sports and Recreational Center. The whole project however, including improvements throughout the campus over a period of years is expected to reach $13 million.

The Century II Campaign progress in raising funds was the agenda for the Planning and Development Committee. Student representatives reported that the Trustees were excited about the campaign and would like to see it completed as soon as possible. Due to the technical nature of the material presented, student participation at the meeting was the form of observation alone.

Topics discussed by the Academic Affairs Committee were related to admissions, the Freshman Conference Program and the new improvements in the library. It was brought up that the applications for admission have been received this year to date compared to last year. It was also reported that trustees seem genuinely concerned with student welfare, especially concerning choices of advisors through Freshmen Conference Program and the total advising system. Both students and trustees felt it was important to publicize to alumni and prospective students the advancements made in the library.

Student representation on the Students Services Committee is almost non-existent, since many issues brought up concerning Freshmen Conference, Summer Orientation, Transfer students and residence halls were not appropriate to the students on the committee, since both students are upperclassmen living in the Houses. Administration and Financial Aid Departments presented informative and positive aspects of their departments.

Draft Warning

The Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors, the nation's largest draft counseling agency, warned this month that the start of draft registration has added to the increased likelihood of an actual draft.

CCCO has sued Selective Service for their draft plans and learned that they plan to allow registrants to claim hardship, medical, and conscientious objector status only at the last possible moment after induction orders are issued.

"Unless students begin to think about, and collect evidence for conscientious objection claim and other options, they are certain to be caught unprepared," says Spears.

Basketball Outlook Improving

Despite the fact that only three lettermen were on hand when Juniata College opened basketball drills Wednesday, Oct. 15, fourth-year head coach Pat Frazier is quardedly optimistic about the 1980-81 season.

An outstanding group of freshmen and a solid core of upperclassmen have Frazier believing the Indians can better last winter's 6-16 record. The freshmen Frazier feels, will be the key to the Indians' success this season.

"Since only three candidates have accumulated much playing time, the possibility is good that several freshmen will win starting berths," Frazier notes. "How quickly the freshmen adapt to college-level play will go far in determining our success."

Heading the list of returnees is 6-5 junior forward Joe Chuba. A two-year starter, Chuba is the senior-less squad's most experienced player and has been named team captain. Chuba led the Tribe in rebounding last season (6.3 per game) and was second in scoring (7.9).

The other returning lettermen are a pair of junior guards: 6-2 Scott Johnson and 6-1 Scott Lehigh. Johnson (6.4 ppg) is a "zone-buster," while Lehigh's hustling style of play can "inspire others."

The duo are part of an excellent crop of guards, according to Frazier. "We are loaded at guard, there is no question about it."

Sophomore Lee Hudzicki, a 6-2 "jumping-jack," and 5-11 sophomore Chet Sowal, who averaged 23.8 points per game in jayvee play, will push for starting berths, along with a pair of highly-touted freshmen: 6-3 Dan Feruck and 6-0 Paul Kardish. Both yearlings were heavily-recruited prep players.

Juniata Soccer team continues its losing streak.

Joining Chuba up front will be 6-5 junior Bob Bruzga and 6-3 sophomore Andy Witmer, who are powerful forwards. Among newcomers, Frazier speaks highly of another trio of freshmen. John Voller, a 6-4 forward, 6-3 Jeff Ostrowski and 6-3 Tim Nagle will push for playing time and may start.

"We hope to compensate for our lack of height and experience by a combination of hustling, team play and a strong desire to win," says Frazier. "Our fast-break offense, shooting and ball-handling should be much better than last year."

The Indians open a 22-game schedule Monday, Dec. 1, hosting Middle Atlantic Conference NorthWest Section foe Lycoming. In all, the Tribe will play 13 games in the MAC North, two each against their four West Section opponents, and one apiece with the five East Section entries.

The Indian schedule includes:

Dec. 1, Lycoming; 4, Elizabeth; 6, at FDU-Madison; 11, Gettysburg; 13, Alvernia; 16, at Susquehanna.

Jan. 10, at Albright; 12, at Lebanon Valley; 14, Susquehanna; 17, Scranton; 21, Frostburg; 24, Delaware Valley; 26, Dickinson; 28, at Lycoming; 31, Albright.

Student Reps. Report

by Eric Prutsman

On Tuesday, Oct. 21, the representatives from the Trustee Committees presented their reports to Student Government. The Budget Committee reported that tuition would be raised 15% to $6795.00. Compared to the tuition at institutions of equal quality, such as Bucknell and Franklin & Marshall, Juniata's total cost is much lower.

Student Concerns Committee announced the idea of having an Alcohol fair in December. An Alcohol fair would contain booths from different organizations such as Al-Anon. The fair's purpose would be to promote responsible drinking, not discourage it. Academic affairs reported that admissions from high school students were down but visits from students were up.

Residential Life reported that Tussey-Terrace lounge will be getting $4000 for renovation. It was brought up that Sherwood and East Houses are in need of improvements to their lounges. Apparently Tussey-Terrace has been at the top of the priority list for repairs because of the number of complaints from residents and R.A.s in the dorm. The carpeted lounge in Tussey-Terrace has been closed to all parties to prevent further damages.

The next Student Government meeting will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 5 at 8:00 p.m. in the faculty lounge. Again, all students are invited to attend the meetings so they can see what the senators they elected are getting accomplished.

Juniatian Regrets

The "Attendance Record Broken on Mountain Day" article in the October 23, 1980 Juniatian was in error. The attendance was over 900 students, faculty and staff. This was the biggest turnout in Juniata's history, not just the past four years. The Juniatian regrets this error.

Practical Jokes Plague South

by Lisa Fusco

On Saturday, October 18th, at approximately 2:00 a.m., the electricity on the third floor of South Dorm was shut off. One person woke up at about 4:50 a.m. and realized that something was wrong. When she found out what had happened, she switched the elctricity back on. The lock to the circuit box on long hall was broken, and apparently, someone decided to fool around with the electrical circuits. Whoever was responsible probably thought it was really funny, but the girls on 3rd South weren't laughing at all.

This practical joker caused a lot of chaos and commotion. A few seniors could have missed their GRE's if one of them didn't wake up to discover what had happened. Furthermore, one girl missed a cross country meet. A number of the other girls had made arrangements to meet their parents and other scheduled events to attend. These affairs were very important to those involved, and because of the lack of consideration, many people were hurt.

Some of the girls claimed that this wasn't the first time something like this has happened. The electricity has been turned off a few times earlier in the year, but in these incidents, it happened earlier in the evening for only a few minutes. No one expected it to happen again, especially for such a long period of time.

Most of the girls expressed that something like this should not happen in a mature college atmosphere. Everyone likes a good joke but when there are a lot of people affected by the outcome, it is no longer a joke. There were a lot of uptight students and they expressed themselves by hanging signs in South and in Ellis College Center. The feelings expressed in these little messages were not very pleasant. The girls definitely got their points across.

This is just one of the crazy incidents that have taken place in South Dorm. Another took place a few weeks ago when someone turned the water pressure off. This incident also started a lot of confusion when no one could take showers. A lot of residents feel that the two pranks are related and they might have been set by the same prankster. These incidents, along with others, have caused many students in South to become upset and suspicious. There is definitely someone on the prowl at South.

Indians Swamp Upsula

by Steve Thomas

The Juniata football team defeated Upsala 17-14 in heavy rain and winds last Saturday in East Orange, New Jersey. The win made the Tribe a .500 ball club with a 3-3 overall record. In the M.A.C. Northern Division, Rob Ash's Indians now hold a 3-1 second place position.

The game was won in the last two minutes of the fourth quarter on a 31 yard field goal by freshman Jack Hench. The clutch play was vindicative of the flavor of the contest. As often happens in sloppy weather big plays made the day.

Ash was happy with the defensive play of the Indians. Sporting an international grin he said, "they turned in a super performance, by far their best of the year." The Indian defenders allowed the Vikings only 109 total yards on the day. Steve Lach picked off his first interception of the season as Upsala completed only three passes in 12 attempts.

Offensively the Indians ran up 254 total yards. Tom Bell led all rushers again with 82 yards on 22 carries. Jeff Miles gained 81 yards in 13 attempts. Eric Biddle was "nothing short of spectacular" in the words of Rob Ash. Biddle scored on a 43 yard pass from Mike Nett and again on a dazzling 61 yard punt return. Mike Nett started the game for the first time in four outings but reinjured his ankle on the Biddle touchdown pass.

Biddle's TD was the only score of the first half and came on the Indian's second possession. Marty Mathews quarterbacked the rest of the half and Juniata took a 7-0 lead into the lockerroom.

In the third quarter Upsala capitalized on two offensive errors by Juniata. Midway through the period a bad snap to punter Rich Eberly gave the Vikings the ball on the Juniata two yard line. Dave D'Andrea took it in on the next play making the score 7-6. The conversion attempt failed. Following the Lach interception on Upsala's next possession, a Jeff Miles toss was picked off by defensive end Kevin Hawkins who returned it 85 yards for a score. D'Andrea took in the two point conversion and Upsala led 14-7.

Characteristic of the ball club, the Indians pulled it out in the fourth quarter. Around the ten minute mark Eric Biddle took a punt on his own 39 and went in the whole way. Hench's kick tied the score at 14. With about three minutes left in the game Jeff Miles went from his own 39 to the Viking 19. Four plays later the Hench field goal made the score 17-14 with 1:58 left in the game. Juniata stopped Upsala and came home the victors.

C.C. Keeps Pace

by Bill Shuler

The mens cross-country team arrived in Carlisle with notions of shutting out the Red Devils on their home course; 5.1 miles of roller coaster hills on a cool and blustery Fall afternoon. Although they didn't shut out Dickinson, the team soundly defeated them 21-36. Determined to crush Dickinson, Tom Wise and Bill Shuler set a brisk pace through the first mile, crossing in 4:50. On their heels was Chris Smith, an old high school teammate of Shuler's, who also had notions of winning the race.

As the race turned out, Shuler, whose parents were attending the race cheering on the Indian runners, took first in 28:24; freshmen Tim Swartz placed second and sophomore Tom Wise was third. Smith was forth followed by two of his teammates. Soon afterwards came the remainder of the Juniata team led by senior LaRoy N. Caster III, who was followed by Tom Hoffman, Mikey Murray, Sloth Peterson, Dinky Kidd, Andy Pearson, Tony Caldorellie and freshmen Bruce Kissel.

The womens team didn't fare as well against Dickinson, losing by one point 27-28.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

I remember an eleven year old wrapped in a warm goose down comforter; he slept with one eye open so he wouldn't miss "first light." I remember english muffins, with jelly, and a sip of coffee to chase the December chill. I remember red and black Woolrich jackets, and the cut down blaze orange vest. But most of all, I remember the smell and taste of the air the first morning that I ever spent in a deer stand.

I didn't get a deer, (I didn't even carry a gun) but I'll never forget all the things that day gave me.

I have hunted every chance I've had since that first day my dad took me with him. More days than not I came home empty handed, many times I never even fired a shot, yet I've never lost the feeling of that first day.

This may be the first year since that day that I will not get to hunt. With tuition rising unchecked, I simply can't afford the price of a non-resident license.

Despite the fact that I spend nine months, and over six thousand dollars a year in Pennsylvania, there is no way I can be declared a resident. I can understand the need to control the influx of hunters in a productive state, and I realize that the money supposedly goes to outdoor programs, but I still cannot understand why an exception has not been made for college students.

If for no other reason, it would encourage out-of-state student hunters to buy licenses, rather than take their chances without them. Because I am from out of state it does not mean I should not be able to take advantage of Pennsylvania's outstanding natural resources. This was one of the major reasons I came to Juniata in the first place.

Soccer Muddles Through

by Chris Kanaskie

The Juniata College Soccer team continued their losing ways last week as they dropped two more matches. On Wednesday they were soundly thumped by Frostburg State 8-0, and Saturday Albright beat the Indians 6-1.

Both opponents were very beatable, but the J.C. game lacked the intensity and desire to win either of the games.

Wednesday's game at Frostburg was the team's worst outing of the season. They seemed to be sleeping on the field as Frostburg rolled past them time and time again. It was a total team letdown. Little or no offense to speak of and sloppy defense caused the Juniata downfall.

Frostburg seemed to be coming at the J.C. goal in waves as they scored 8 goals against the Indians. It was a game to forget.

The team returned home on Saturday to face Albright College, a team which Juniata took to the wire last season.

This year was quite different as Albright tallied six times in the game which ended up much differently than it began.

Right from the opening tap, the Indians stormed all over the Albright goal. They totally dominated the opening minutes of the match. However, Albright scored the first goal on a quick counterattack which caught the J.C. Team up.

The middle of the game belonged to Albright as they used hustle and aggressive tactics to out do J.C. At halftime the score was 2-0 in favor of Albright.

Albright came out in the second half and continued to dominate the game. They scored 2 more goals to make the score 4-0. Juniata finally woke up at this point and started to muster some offense. They had many golden opportunities to score but simply failed to put the ball in the net.

A controversial goal by Albright made the score 5-0. Juniata then scored their third goal of the year on a penalty-kick by co-captain Jake Sherk. It was too little, too late. Albright scored once more with a minute to go in the match for the final score of 6-1.

Sophomore fullback Ed Trowbridge reflected on the events of the past week, "We have the nucleus for a good team here at Juniata. Our biggest problem is that we lack cohesiveness as a unit. Too many people doing too many different things at once. No one wants to work together. On offense we seem to do fine until it comes time to shoot the ball. We seem to freeze or something.

Oh well, we have two games remaining this year. We will just try to do our best and see what happens. If we could just put together 90 minutes of intensity and desire we would do well."

The team travels to Dickinson on November 1 and winds up the season at home on November 4 against a tough Shippensburg Team.

The J.C. booters were glad to see that the usual die-hards were at the game against Albright despite the inclement weather.

The JC Volleyball team upped its record to 24-3 with a home victory over Elizabethtown and by winning 6 of 7 on route to a second-place finish in the prestigious Mansfield Invitational Volleyball Tournament. The girls defeated E-town 15-6, 15-7, 15-9 prior to going to Mansfield for the Friday-Saturday tournament. On Friday, the girls won the first two matches including one against the host team Mansfield. Then on Saturday, they defeated New York Tech 17-15, 15-6, Trenton State 15-11, 15-6 and Connecticut College 15-6, 4-15, 15-7 to get into the semi-finals where they beat Grove City 15-4, 15-5 to go to the finals. In the finals, the girls faced Friday opponent Mansfield where the wear and tear of the tournament caught up to them as they lost 9-15, 4-15 and placed second. This week the Tribe plays Messiah at Memorial Gym on Tuesday before going to F & M for the MAC Tournament on Friday and Saturday.

Sports Complex Not The Cause

by Linda Sevick

President Fred Binder dispeled the "myth" of the tuition being raised because of the new $4 million sports complex Monday November 3 in a forum sponsored by R.H.A.

"All money for the sports complex is coming from the outside," Dr. Binder said, "not through rising tuition." The money is being raised through the Century II campaign, which expects to raise $13 million in ten years from outside contributions.

Attending the forum besides Dr. Binder were Ken Grugel, Director of Financial Aid, Donald Hartman, Dean of Academic Affairs, Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, William Alexander, Business Manager, Kevin McCullen, Planning and Institutional Research, and Foster Ulrich, Vice President for Development.

Alexander explained that the reason for increased tuition is to compensate for the fact that the college does not have the capacity for more students. "Juniata cannot increase quantity, so the price must be raised," he said.

In further discussion, McCullen compared other schools to Juniata and said it is "not out of line in current price." He used a study comparing 19 other similar institutions in Pennsylvania over the past five years with Juniata and made numerous observations.

For instance, Juniata was the 10th most expensive out of 19 schools, now the 13th, and price increases in terms of tuition ranked 19th. "We were actually falling in rate," McCullen said.

McCullen also discussed preparation of each year's budget. In recommending changes to the budget, four kinds of information must be dealt with. These are inflation, what other institutions are doing, what costs are doing per student, and the availability of student aid. "Juniata College has been underpricing its education and could jeopardize education," he said. Juniata's budget for this

Financial Aid Increase Uncertain

by Linda Sevick

Although Juniata's tuition is increasing 15 percent next year, no mention has been made yet of financial aid from the college itself. With sources such as the new Basic Education Opportunity Grant from the federal government, Director of Financial Aid Ken Grugel said that "it is hopeful that in most cases these sources will help the students in proportion to the tuition increase."

At present, Juniata is in the discussion stage of several models on what the increase will mean but no final decisions have been made. The tuition increase will be reviewed through January 1981.

Last year Juniata's financial aid was raised 5 percent according to Grugel. He said minimum wage for students working for the college will be raised in January of this year from $2.64 to $2.87. Next year the minimum wage for students will be raised again to $3.35. Fifty-five percent of the student body is employed by the college, half of which are on financial aid.

Grugel said a 22 percent increase on students' financial aid (not direct from the college) could be realized with the combination of the basic grant and dollars earned working.

Grugel is hopeful that the new Higher Education amendment of 1980 passed October 3, 1980 also will make a difference for some students, especially the new "Parent Loan." This states that parents can borrow up to $3000 for each dependent child attending college, with an interest rate of 9 percent.

"The advantage of the Parent Loan is that for parents who must pay cash, i.e. tuition, room and board, they can now borrow instead of depleting savings and deduct the interest from their income tax if they complete the long form, 1040," Grugel said.

A review of the Higher Education amendment was distributed to all students on October 24.

Editorial Staff Meets With S.G.

by Randall Anderson

A meeting was held between the editors of the Juniatian, the College Governence and Executive Committees of Student Government, Dean of Students Arnold J. Tilden, and Mr. Wayne Justham, concerning the eviction of Juniatian reporters from a Trustees meeting and possible future policies of the college concerning the issue of reporters at such meetings. The meeting was an attempt by Juniatian Editor Tricia Abbott to make Student Government and Administration aware of the problem.

In not being allowed into the meetings, said Abbott, "We are not able to do our jobs as journalists. Our concern is that we are being kept from primary sources of information. We should be allowed into the meetings in order to objectively report their content." She noted that there are no written laws barring admission from Trustees meetings or specifying who can attend them. Admission seems to be based on tradition and the President's and the Board's Authority.

"We have a responsibility to the college community. We represent it as a whole, and we need to continue to be a worthwhile and respected organization on campus," she said. Second-hand information, which is the only means by which the Juniatian can report on Executive meetings, via student representative reports, "no matter how detailed, cannot be verified," said Abbott. She explained that the newspaper has the support of the Communications Advisory Board and its advisor, Mrs. Cherry. Student Government and Administration support is also needed, she urged.

Saul Seymor, Vice-President of Student Government, suggested that more detailed reports by student representatives and closer contact with them by Juniatian reporters could be one viable solution. Both Dean Tilden and Mr. Justham felt that interviews with the student reps directly after meetings would constitute a primary course of information for the newspaper.

"The problem is the right of a private institution to hold closed board meetings, not getting students into the meetings," said Tilden. He explained that students are invited and do attend the meetings. "It affects a meeting's conduct," he continued, "when people know that reporters are present and that stories will be published." The final issue, according to Dean Tilden, is that a private meeting vs. reporters being present, whose sense of ethics tells them to report all they know.

The problem must be reviewed ultimately by the Board of Optimism High For Release of Hostages

It has been over one year that the 52 American hostages have been held by the Iranian militants, but on that anniversary the militants relinquished control and responsibility of their captives to the Iranian government. Optimism for the release of the hostages is high after the vote by the Iranian parliament to release the hostages if the U.S. meets their four demands.

In other news. . . .

The Chrysler Corporation, after almost declaring bankruptcy only a year ago, has recently announced the lowest losses for the third quarter of all major American automobile firms, and, for the month of October has the only firm that increased production over the same month last year; this is basically due to the success of the newly introduced K cars.

Editorial:

Where Is All The Money Going?

"College is like a family . . . a part of your life . . . a part of you." The preceding message was brought to you by President Fred Binder at the tuition increase forum held last Monday evening. "Oh, by the way, dad, can I have an advance on my allowance so I can buy food — being that we're family and all."

Let's get serious for a moment, shall we? According to the November-December 1980 issue of "Today's Education" total cost of a private four-year college in 1980 rose an average of 10.3 percent. Juniata college students paid an increase of 12.3. Although the magazine was unable to present accurate estimates for the 1981 school year, you can be certain that once again Juniata College will take its place high above the national average. After all Juniata College is not an average school, there is no reason it should have an average tuition increase, right?

But let's be fair. Although there are some nasty rumors that the tuition increase is a direct result of the planned sports complex, this is simply not true. The complex is being funded from sources outside the college. Where is our money going then? Good question. No one seems willing to say exactly where the extra money will be going. Some suffice it to say that it is going to improvements around the campus. What improvements? Didn't you see the guy painting the fence enclosing the tennis courts in front of Tussey-Terrace? Well that could be one of the improvements.

If you are wondering where you will be able to get the extra money to pay for the additional costs next year, join the crowd. Financial aid students will have to wait until January to find out if Juniata is willing to give them more money to come here. As for students who are paying their own way in full, well what can be said. If you want to get your money's worth, take up tennis, you can play on the courts you helped to renovate.

"You've got a great sense of humor, Egore." said Dr. Frankenstein.

"Sank you, Masssters," snickered Egore as he dragged another pigeon through the attic tower of Founders Hall. The pigeon's wings were glued together and his beak was glued shut. Egore was glueing the pigeon's brain to the Founders Bell. A stack of dead pigeons lay at his feet. As soon as a pigeon died Egore took it from the bell and replaced it with a live one — he drew no pleasure from watching them unless they suffered.

Egore dropped the empty bottle of Elmer's Glue and wrung his hands together greedily, eagerly anticipating the approach of noon. The vibrations from the twenty-eight bells would probably finish the pigeon off.

"Good old Elmersss." Egore chuckled.

"You've got a great sense of humor, Egore." Dr. Frankenstein said again.

Dr. Frankenstein and Egore were both professors of psychology, and Egore claimed that the pigeon torture was an experiment in endurance. Egore had plenty of data to draw from, but he still hadn't reached a conclusion. Dr. Frankenstein was practicing the same type of experiment on students in the classroom (who unfortunately were too large to glue to the bell.)

"An' how is your projec' coming, Masssters?", Egore hissed.

"Just fine, Egore." said Dr. Frankenstein. "When the noon bells chime my project will be complete. The vibrations from the bell will bring my specimen to life. At last I will have created the perfect student!"

Egore and Dr. Frankenstein did a wild dance together, both laughing hideously. Egore was a wildly-bearded pigeon-toed hunchback with a runny nose and steel-toed boots. Dr. Frankenstein was a burly bigot with tattered clothes and a mouth that rarely smiled. A good pschologist would have had something revealing to say about their appearance and behavior, but unfortunately there was not a good psychologist present.

Suddenly the bells began and Egore watched the struggling pigeon with hungry eyes, while Dr. Frankenstein flashed a rare smile and watched his straw-and-blue specimen being shocked to life.

Poet Reads Tonight

Dr. Deborah Austin, an accomplished poet and professor of English at The Pennsylvania State University, will read her works at Juniata College on Thursday evening, Nov. 6.

The public is cordially invited to attend Dr. Austin's reading, which begins at 8:15 p.m. in Shoemaker Galleries, Carnegie Hall (17th and Moore streets). Admission is free of charge.

A prolific writer, Dr. Austin has published one book of poems — "The Paradise of the World" — and has had poems and articles published in such prestigious journals and magazines as the "Yale Review," "The New Republic," "Atlantic" and "The Massachusetts Review."

In addition to reading her poetry, which will include selections from both her published and yet-to-be published work, Dr. Austin will comment about the process and techniques of writing poetry. A reception with refreshments will follow her presentation.

As a Penn State professor, Dr. Austin is a highly regarded specialist in Romantic poetry and the Victorian novel, with a particular interest in Percy Bysshe Shelley and William Blake.

In fact, she has an article about Blake — "Threefold Blake's Divine Vision, Intention, and Myth" — included in a volume of essays recently published by the Bucknell University Press.

A member of the Penn State faculty for some 20 years, Dr. Austin holds her B.A. degree from Smith College and her Ph.D. from Q — Do you think a 15% increase in tuition is justifiable?

Jeff Eisenberg — '82 — No and yes; no in the sense that even though some colleges are more expensive, an education should be available for all high school students; and yes because I am sure the administration will find a way to justify it.

Cindy Steele — '83 — Considering the fact that the cost of most everything is rising, JC must have increased funds in order to continue to offer its students the best education possible. 15%? It seems a little steep.

Greg Pyles — '83 — No! Almost $1500 dollars in increases in the last two years and an increase by about 200 in enrollment doesn't make sense to me. Where's all the money going? Since when did we become Ivy League!

Margaret Stover — '84 — I feel an increase in tuition is needed to match with the increase in inflation, but the last two years' increase has been close to $1500 which is a large amount of money.

Mock Candidates Sum up issues

by Chris Corry

A mock Presidential debate was staged in Alumni Hall on Thursday, October 30. About 200 people, primarily SVS students, at whom the debate was aimed, attended. Anderson was represented by Prof. Heberling, Carter by Prof. Crosby, and Reagan by Mr. Mundis.

The debate began at 8:15 with 6 minutes of opening remarks from each candidate. The candidates had 2 minutes to answer questions from selected students, and each of the candidates, at whom that particular question was not addressed, had 1 minute to comment. The affair ended at 10:00 after questions from the audience and closing remarks.

Crosby gave a balanced summation of Carters term in office. "Of course the record is not spotless," he admitted, "cronyism, Bert Lance, and Billy-boy" are among his failures. History will be easier on Carter than his contemporaries, Crosby believes, and will remember his triumphs: the Panama Canal, Camp David, the reserve lands set aside in Alaska, the numerous blacks and women he appointed.

Mundis, representing Reagan, accused Carter of overspending and displaying weakness. "The American position in the world has been severely diminished by Carter's irresoluteness."

Anderson's Platform included a tax incentive program to stimulate business, a nuclear moratorium, and a 50% tax on each gallon of gasoline.

Part of Anderson's program, if he were elected, would be to initiate a dual party government in which the best people of both parties would be appointed. Both Crosby and Mundis refute the practicality of such a notion. "It doesn't fit the model of american government" said Crosby.

On the question of ERA both Carter and Anderson are in favor of the proposed amendment, and

As the bells ended the pigeon dropped to the floor with a stiff thud, and Dr. Frankenstein's specimen snapped open his eyes.

"Eureka!" shouted Dr. Frankenstein. "I have done it!" I have created the perfect student!"

"Well done, Masssters!" shrieked Egore, slapping his hands together.

Eureka docilely stepped down from the platform and awaited his instructions. His hands were permanently glued together behind his back and his mouth was glued shut. Steel pens were fastened to each side of his neck. His body was shaped in a taut sitting-at-attention position. His eyes were held open by straight pins. Indeed he was the perfect student.

"I haf' a class to go to Masssters, may I take him wif' me?" Egore asked.

"Certainly, Egore." said the kind Dr. Frankenstein. "Just bring him to my office when you're through."

"Come wif' me, Eureka." said Egore, leading the perfect student away. "I will ssit you in front of my classs an' tell 'dem you are 'de ressult of over a hunnred yearss of experimentsss."

The B-52's — Wild Planet

The B-52's are a bizzare, kinky new wave dance band from Georgia. Fred, Cindy, Kate, Ricky and Keith play in a pounding, frenzied, energetic style that's guaranteed to knock your socks off. They dress in a fashion that is a mixture between Murphy's Mart and Spencer Gifts (gargantuan earrings, silver wigs and penny loafers?!) Their subject matter covers everything from beach parties and transvestite poddles to immortal headless beauties and the trajectory of space probes. They are definitely a singular group of guys and gals.

Wild Planet further expands the musical style which they set forth on their debut album. Fred and Cindy cover the vocal chores, Fred with a nasal, almost-speaking voice, Cindy in a seductive, throaty warble. Kate does back-up vocals, plays the Dave-Clark-Five-organ and the pedal bass. Ricky and Keith carry most of the melody and the rhythm, Ricky with his metallic, bitingly sparse guitar and Keith with his excellent, unrelenting drumming.

Party Out of Bounds opens the album with a disco song that "Shadow Box" reveals student talent

I'm most impressed with the expertise and talent these students are bringing to this production of an extremely difficult drama. Their acting ability and technical know-how is indeed a testament to the high caliber of theatre I was told existed at this college."

So remarks Dr. Richard F. Iacovoni, first-year instructor in English at Juniata College and director of the college's upcoming production of Michael Cristofer's "The Shadow Box."

In discussing the drama — which will be staged at 8:15 p.m. Friday and Saturday Nov. 7 and 8 in Oller Auditorium — Dr. Iacovoni observes that "as might be expected of a piece which won both the Tony Award and the Pulitzer Prize in the same year (1977), certain of its acting requirements and technical aspects are quite demanding."

He notes, for example, that the all-student cast is portraying — and "most convincingly" — four different levels of maturity, ranging from an adolescent boy to an 80-year-old woman.

And, he says, that's not all.

" 'Shadow Box' is an emotional, explosive and powerful drama about three terminally ill patients and their families confronting imminent death," Dr. Iacovoni says, adding that "the acting is about as demanding as that of any play I can think of, including 'Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolfe?'

"It is really to these students' credit that they are able to perform this drama in such convincing fashion," he continues. "The dialogue is quick-paced and the action at times frantic, but they perform throughout with an incredible amount of poise and skill."

Adding to the technical — as well as to the acting — challenges were the drama's particular difficulties of blocking and timing, quick-changing scenes and special sound effects.

"The students have mastered, in excellent fashion, all of the show's technical challenges," Dr. Iacovoni comments, mentioning that "because the acting and technical aspects of this play are so very closely linked, we are pleased that all the elements of staging this play have come together so well."

Elaborating on the plot of "Shadow Box," Dr. Iacovoni says that "the three dying patients — a middle-aged blue collar worker, an octogenerian and an intellectual — are housed one each in cabins, where they have been joined by their families for their confrontations with death.

"As the play develops," he continues, "increasing tension is created as the dying persons and their loved ones face death, with a series of emotional explosions that both relieve the pressure and set the drama's quick pace."

He further notes that despite its focus upon death, the underlying theme of "Shadow Box" is one of hope, with the characters coming to realize their common humanity through hope, love and concern.

However, the Juniata director notes that because of its very nature, the drama does contain "a considerable amount of what some persons may consider objectional language."

Explaining, he says that the play's language "expresses a certain vulgarity about death," adding that while it could be considered "objectionable," it is "necessary and effective in the context of the play, which, it must be remembered, won two of the

Halloween Hits Arch

by David Heisterkamp

The icy cold wind blew in gusts, sending chills up and down your spine Friday night. The moon, peeking through the black clouds, casted those indistinguishable shadows around all dark corners and through most gloomy hallways. Although you weren't sure, you know you heard someone . . . something call your name "It's just the wind," you said to yourself as you looked behind to see who was following you for the third time. As you got closer and closer, you knew what it was. That place. Even on normal nights that place was known for harboring the worst of all demons and goblins, but Halloween?! Yes, yes, you were sure now; The Cloister. The Cloister was creating the disturbance. You repelled yet were attracted all at the same time. You remember a friend telling once that no one ventures into Cloister alone without fear of misfortune. But you were drawn. It was the Arch. The Arch, with the only securing light for what seemed like miles. And you were there. . . .

Alone and bored, you try to explore through the cracks of the black door of which no light shined out. Abruptly, the door opened and you are greeted by an ugly, but quite charming hunched-back ghoul. This was a Archite? You wondered what the rest of the place looked like and luck enough the ghoul managed to mumble, "Will yeh follow me?" And you followed it up the stairs. . . .

All of a sudden, Dracula jumps out at you! You turn away and head down the hazy hallway. You pass a moaning woman trapped behind part of the hall. You want to help her, but the hunch-back pushed you onward. You pass a green woman who has hung herself, quite possibly foreshadowing your future. As you pace down the hall, right turn, left turn, you witness the murder of a beautiful blond by her, no doubt, estranged boyfriend. . . . You are constantly pushed forward. A two-headed monster comes at you

Mouw to Lecture on "Born Again Politics"

"Born Again Politics" — a timely topic in this election year — will be the focus of attention during a public lecture at Juniata College on Wednesday evening, Nov. 12.

Dr. Richard J. Mouw, Juniata's 1980-81 J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity, will present the lecture, which begins at 8:15 p.m. in the Shoemaker Galleries, Carnegie Hall (17th and Moore streets). The public is cordially invited to attend. Admission is free of charge.

The public also is invited to attend a pre-lecture dinner with Dr. Mouw in the Faculty Lounge, Ellis College Center, beginning at 6:30 p.m. Reservations for the dinner, which will feature Atlantic sole and cost $6, must be made before Nov. 7 by telephoning Juniata's Alumni Office at 643-4310, Ext. 440.

During his lecture, Dr. Mouw — professor of philosophy at Calvin (Mich.) College — will focus upon the recent emergence of vocal, evangelical-political groups, such as Moral Majority and Christian Voice.

Dr. Mouw will provide a historical perspective about the rise of this phenomenon and offer an evaluation of its strengths and weaknesses as an American political movement.

Well-versed on his topic, Dr. Mouw recently spoke about "Born Again Politics" to a group of Christians involved in the Washington, D.C., political scene. His lecture, presented in the Russell Senate Office Building, was attended by Congressional staff and employees from the State Department, the F.B.I. and other federal agencies. Also attending were students from a number of colleges and universities.

An accomplished author, Dr. Mouw has published two books — "Political Evangelism" and "Politics and the Biblical Drama" — and has made significant contributions to three others.

The J. Omar Good Chair was established in 1975 with a bequest from the late J. Omar Good, a Juniata student in the mid-1890s who left the college one million dollars.

A member of the Calvin faculty since 1968, Dr. Mouw had previous teaching experience at the University of Alberta, the University of Illinois and Elmhurst (Ill.) College. More recently, he was the Visiting Lecturer in Ethics at Calvin Theological Seminary and a member of the graduate faculty at Aquinas Institute of Religious Studies.

Dr. Mouw received his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago, his M.A. degree from the University of Alberta and his B.A. degree from Houghton (N.Y.) College.

Show of China to be presented

Harold Brumbaugh, Vice President Emeritus of Juniata College will be presenting a "special and highly diversified" travelogue of China. This vivid show of color slides from his recent trip "Classical China" which lasted twenty-three days from departure in San Francisco will take place Saturday, November 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Alumni Hall. According to Mr. Brumbaugh, who took the trip with friends and alumni of the college "the trip was marvelous."

Mr. Brumbaugh encourages anyone interested or curious of the Chineses culture and landscape to attend Saturday evening.

Cowboys Abound at Western Party

Juniata Executives' Club held its first party of the year on November 1st. The theme was Western. Tussey-Terrace lounge put on a Western atmosphere by the straw spread on the floor and the Western music sounding from the stereo. Quite a number of cowboys and cowgirls attended. Four contests were held. Brad Selman won the Spit-N-Chew contest with a length of over sixteen feet. The best dressed contest was won by Paul Miller. Kirby Wilcher was the Urban Cowboy's look-a-like, and Mia Lovik most resembled Dolly Parton. All winners received prizes. Overall, everyone had a good time.

The ghoul leads you back into the Arch tunnel, safe in the securing light. As your heart beat returns to normal rate, you let a witch tatoo your hand. With the green marking, you may enter the forbidden dungeon of the Cloister; the Ranch. Once in the Ranch, others greet you, but they're not so strange. They look even normal. Other survivors perhaps? Well, it doesn't matter because you are handed a mug full of witches brew and everything is alright. More survivors come, and more. All tell of there unique experience and drink more witches brew. As you hadn't planned, your Halloween came out warm and dry, although in most cases, still a little hazy.

Following the presentations students were able to meet with individual faculty members to discuss career opportunities in fields which interested them. Then, after a lunch in the dining hall, students were able to attend a variety of demonstrations in the laboratories.

Also available to the students was the chance to see two movies about science, and a chemical "magic show" was also presented.

Coffeehouses Financed

by Patty Rauschenberger

On October 28, 1980 the issue of coffeehouse financing was raised at the Center Board meeting. The discussion lasted over an hour with the major question being, "Will Center Board subsidize profit making ventures?" By unanimous decision the Committee decided against this proposal but approved the following policy: "Center Board will provide financial assistance for campus programming with the stipulation that they are repaid back before any profits are taken in. Should a club not be able to make full repayment, Center Board would then decide how much help should be given.

Under the new policy the Committee approved Laughing Bush's request to sponsor a coffeehouse featuring a band, The Clocks.

Reverend Murray read a memo he prepared for all the faculty which urged them to interact with students by sponsoring dinners in their homes and/or field trips at no cost to them because of reimbursements available to them. Also any meals missed by students on a field trip will be reimbursed. Reverend Murray plans to send a followup memo asking for any ideas concerning creative programming,. Center Board welcomes ideas.

Businessmen Honored

Donovan R. Beachley, Sr., of Hagerstown was honored for distinguished service to Juniata College during its annual Founders Club dinner.

Juniata President Frederick M. Binder, in recognizing Beachley for "many years of dedicated and energetic service — in a multitude of capacities — to Juniata College," presented the Hagerstown man with a painting of Founders Hall.

The Founders Club — membership in which is reserved for the college's most loyal and generous alumni and friends — began the tradition of presenting outstanding Juniatians with paintings of Founders Hall in 1976, when Juniata was 100 years old. Founders, the first building constructed on the present campus (completed in 1879), is dear to Juniata, and recently underwent a $385,000 renovation project.

A prominent Hagerstown business executive, Beachley is chairman of the board of the Beachley Furniture Co., Inc. He is a 1921 Juniata graduate and has served on the college's board of trustees since 1945.

Included in his many years of service to the college has been the endowing — along with son Donovan R., Jr., also of Hagerstown — of the Beachley Distinguished professor Award, Juniata's most distinguished teaching award presented annually at commencement.

He also served as chairman of special projects for Phase II of the $10-million Margin of Difference Campaign, and in 1968, he was awarded the honorary doctor of laws degree by Juniata.

In addition to his many years of service to Juniata, Beachley has been vice president of the board of trustees of the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial Home for the Aged, serving on that board since 1934.

He further has served many years on the boards of the Washington County United Fund, the Hagerstown Manufacturers Association, the Hagerstown Chamber of Commerce and the Hagerstown YMCA. In addition, he served a pair of three-year terms on the board of directors of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Active in the Church of the Brethren, Beachley has served the Hagerstown church for more than 30 years as treasurer and Sunday School teacher, and as chairman of its trustee and pastoral boards. He also has served in various district offices.

Reagan against it. "Womens rights are not directly related to ERA," said Mundis. Reagan advocates "a thorough review of the laws on the books and removal of harmful legislation." Crosby, representing Carter, stated that a national policy is needed because the states will not accomplish such a task "short of 20 or 30 years at best."

Carter's handling of the inflation problem was criticized by Mundis. "Inflation is created by printing worthless money" which Carter does to support his vast government spending. "Inflation starts with federal spending. "Spending must cease." Crosby pointed out that Reagan himself requested and received federal grants to help fund his campaign. Also, we're among the better of industrialized nations struggling with inflation."

Anderson, according to Heberling, emphasizes retraining, helping youth into the job market, and strengthening the base of small farms and businesses as steps towards lowering unemployment. Reagan advocates leaving it primarily up to private interprise.

Student feedback on the debate was generally positive. "It was very good in that it cleared up, in a lot of cases, what was going on. The mock candidates were much more frank about the issues." "In a way it was better than the real debate." "The professors knew what they were talking about and they tried very hard to speak for the candidate." One student was sorry that more kids didn't turn out. "It should have been publicized more."

High School Students Visit 7th Science Day

by Denise Cutillo

On Wednesday October 29, the seventh annual Conference on Current Problems in Science was held. This day, known as Science Day, offered an opportunity for high school students to come to Juniata and participate in a day devoted to learning more about what is happening in science today.

Science Day began officially with an orientation meeting starting at 9:30. The students had the opportunity to attend different lectures given by faculty members dealing with such topics as energy, cell biology, etc. However the faculty members were not the only ones involved. Science Day also offered Juniata students the chance to present their research papers in Chemistry and Biology the dorm to find a quiet atmosphere to study." Mike Mankel thinks that a typing room would be a "welcome change that's desperately needed." Mark Hood and Bill Haddad voiced similar opinions. Residents also commented on how the lounge did not offer the proper surroundings for studying. The furniture there, besides being quite ugly and uncomfortable, smells strange.

Brian Thomas, president of Sherwood, and Todd Gipe, dorm senator, got together and sent a petition around to try to change the situation. They were especially motivated because they had heard that Tussey received a sum of money to fix their lounge. Not surprisingly, many people signed it and plans are just underway to see if it is possible to convert the storage rooms into some kind of study area.

Binder to Chair Evaluation of Stockton

Dr. Frederick M. Binder, president of Juniata College and a native of Atlantic City and Pleasantville, will chair a team of 11 college and university educators on a Nov. 9-12 evaluation visit to Stockton State College.

Dr. Binder and his team will evaluate all aspects of Stockton, reporting their findings to the Commission of Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools.

Included on Dr. Binder's evaluation team will be Dr. Nelson P. Guild, president of Frostburg (Md.) State College; Dr. Joseph A. Boisse, director of libraries at Temple University; and Dr. Lorraine Williams, vice president for academic affairs at Howard University.

A frequent chairman of evaluation teams for the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools, Dr. Binder became Juniata's eighth president in 1975. Prior to assuming his Juniata post, he had served for five years as president of Whittier (Calif.) College and for 10 years as president of Hartwick (N.Y.) College. In 1979-80, he was associate commissioner for higher education in the New York State Education Department.

Dr. Binder is a 1942 graduate of Ursinus College and a recipient of both the master's degree and Ph.D. in American history from the University of Pennsylvania. He also holds honorary doctoral degrees from Ursinus, Wagner College, Rider College and Susquehanna University.

After service in the Navy during World War II, he began his teaching career at Temple University. From 1955-59, he was Dean of Academic Affairs at Thiel (Pa.) College.

While on leave from Hartwick in 1967-68, Dr. Binder was the first Fulbright lecturer in American History assigned to Yugoslavia. He has published two books — "Coal Age Empire" and a novel, "The Serbian Assignment" — and numerous educational and historical articles and reviews.

A member of many civic and professional organizations, Dr. Binder has been chairman of the Independent College Funds of America, serves as a consultant to the Ford Foundation, and is a member of the executive committee of the Foundation for Independent Colleges, Inc., of Pennsylvania.

He further chairs the Region 7 Council (Pennsylvania) on Postsecondary Education and the advisory committee to the Pennsylvania Enrollment Planning Project, a prototype for nationwide efforts to cope with declining college enrollments.

The Juniata president is married to the former Grace I. Brandt of Philadelphia and the younger of the couple's two daughters, Robin, is a freshman at the University of Pennsylvania. Their older daughter, Janet Binder Houts, is a graduate of Vassar College and the Boston University Law School and is practicing law in San Diego, Calif.

Around Juniata

by Kelly Husser

The Campus Ministry Board sponsored a coffee house on Tuesday night, October 28. The coffee house was held in Sherwood's lounge, beginning at 9:00 p.m. The event was extremely well planned and attended; this was evident from the quantity of chocolate chip cookies devoured by the audience — a total of 1000. Delicious snacks and beverages were accompanied by a variety of entertainment.

The entertainment commenced with eight different pieces by Andy Murray, the campus minister, and his wife Terrie. Andy played guitar and his wife accompanied him on the autoharp and piano. The audience's applause indicated three favorites: "Vocational Trauma Blues," "Brave Man From Ohio," and "Body-Trot Bus-Truck Race." The audience laughed and cried with the moods of the songs.

Next on the program was Mike Ford who gave a personal testimony of his life and the effect that his relationship with God has had upon him. He also announced the various Bible studies held weekly on campus and open to all. One is held on Tuesdays at 6:30 p.m. in 311 Lesher. Two others on Wednesdays in 308 South, and on Fridays at 1411 Moore Street, both of which begin at 9:00 p.m.

Anita Mock was the next on the agenda playing piano. She also made her singing debut. She informed the audience that she was extremely nervous, singing for the first time in public before breezing through four vocals and four instrumentals. Anita ended with "Joy," by Bach. She did a great job and said, "I'm just pretending I'm in my living room."

The humor of the show was provided by the JC Four or the Juniata Barbershop Quartet. The group consists of Jay Hinish (bass), Craig Greusel (baritone), Mike Ford (tenor), and Dave Miller (lead). They kept the audience in stitches with at least seven different pieces, the last being "When the Saints Come Marking In."

Duane Dilling did his impression of President Carter and Penny Cameron told the Braziest Kedtime Story ever. Eric Ober and Monique Perry played a few beautiful pieces on their flutes.

Jeff Kuhn played quitar and sang numerous songs, a few of which were "All the Lonely People," "Celebrate," and a song he learned during his stay in Germany last year. He ended by doing a duet with Jinine Garman in German.

The show was ended with Craig Greusel playing guitar and singing. He ended with "Come, Go With Me," inviting the audience to sing along. The coffee house was a great success, continuing until 12:30 p.m. Andy introducing the show, said they'd planned "to provide good fellowship, food and opportunity to get to know God a little better." The Campus Ministry Board certainly accomplished their goal.

Alexander spoke briefly on costs of housing. Approximately $47,000 of this year's budget was spent on fixing various parts of Cloister, Sherwood, and South dorms, for example. Money was also spent on furniture such as desks and bunks. Gas and oil depleted $468,000 from the budget.

Student/alumni participation is the primary force in raising money for the Century II campaign rather than rising student costs, Ulrich reported. The class of 1980 for instance contributed $10,000. "College is like a family," Binder said, "it is a part of your life and a part of you."

The Juniata College field hockey team ended the regular season with a record of 4-4-2, this was the 5th year in a row that the Indians have had a .500 record.

Juniata and Gettysburg finished the regular season in a tie in the M.A.C. Northwest Section. The teams then met at Gettysburg in a playoff game to determine the champion. Gettysburg defeated the Indians 3-0 to become the M.A.C. Northwest Section Champions.

In the girls last game of the year they faced the Shippensburg Red Raiders, the defending Division 3 National Champions, and were beaten 3-1, as Nancy Fieldman tallied Juniata's only goal.

Juniata then participated in the Susquehanna Field Hockey Association Tournament. In their first game of the tourney they played Lycoming to a 0-0 tie. Then they came up against Bloomsburg and that game ended in a 1-1 tie. Next they faced Wyoming Valley and this game also ended in a scoreless tie, and finally they played Susquehanna and the game ended in a 0-0 tie. Juniata and Susquehanna then had to participate in a penalty playoff, but neither team could score a goal, so they had to go to a second sudden death playoff and this time Susquehanna came out on top 1-0.

There were six Indians who made the regional team for the tourney: Barb Pearson, Bonnie Cieslar, Clair Warmerdam, Heidi Loomis, Nanci Young, and Laura Babiash. Pearson, Cieslar and Warmerdam will play in the Eastern Regionals at Chambersburg.

In the regular season the Indians were paced in scoring by two freshman, Liz Abel and Patty Price. Abel led the Indians with 9 points, 4 goals and 5 assists, while Price had 4 goals and 2 assists for 6 points. Goalie Nanci Young also had an outstanding year as she was among the top goalies in the M.A.C.

Football Suffers Tough Loss

by Steve Thomas

On the football field Saturday afternoon the Tribe suffered a disheartening loss to the overpowering Delaware Valley Aggies. The Aggies left no questions unanswered in the 17-3 victory that moved their record to 6-0 in the MAC Northern division. The Indians mark fell to 3-2 in the division and 3-4 overall.

Although the Tribe threatened a number of times, the Aggies were in control throughout the game. Delaware Valley racked up 298 total yards while holding Rob Ash's Indians to 180 total yards. Juniata's quarterbacks completed 4 of 23 passes with 2 intercepted. The Aggies hit 4-8 with one intercepted by Tom Devine. Bob Waszak and Matt Blauch combined for 26 tackles as the Aggies punched out a short yardage running game. The Aggies top rushers, Eric Reynolds and Tom Houpt, each had over 70 yards. Juniata's unrealistic game plan had Jeff Miles throwing the ball and Tom Bell, one of the league's top rushers, standing around. Bell carried the ball only five times the entire game. Miles rushed for 57 yards on 20 carries and completed three of 16 passes.

The Aggies opened the scoring on a 32 yard field goal that was the extent of the points marked in the first half.

The Indians tied the score late in the third quarter on a 25 yard Jack Hench field goal. The kick followed an impressive 16 play 94 yard drive that took close to seven minutes. The Indians picked up five of their eight first downs in this drive.

The Aggies scored twice in the fourth quarter. The first was a 42 yard pass completion on the initial play of their second possession. The good kick put the Aggies up 10-3 with most of the period remaining. Delaware Valley took the ball into the end zone again on their next possession. Cosmo Losko ran it in on a fourth and goal situation to cap a 38 yard drive. The game ended 17-3 in favor of Delaware Valley.

Next week the Tribe travels to Wilkes College for a game they should win. A victory should secure a second place finish in the M.A.C. Northern Division.

Juniatian's BIG 15 Football Picks

RULES:

1. Pick the winner of each game by circling your choice.
2. Predict the total points scored in the Monday Night game in addition to picking the winner.
3. In case of a tie, the total points will be used as a tie-breaker. The one closest to the right total is the winner.
4. To play, cut out this ad and pick the games. Drop your entry into the BIG 15 box in the lobby of Ellis Hall.
5. To win, a contestant must pick the highest number of winning teams and this prediction must also surpass the sports editors total predictions correct. If a contestant does this the weekly prize is $10.00
6. The editors picks are underlined below along with their total points.

The JC Volleyball team prepared for the coming MAC Tournament by defeating Messiah at Memorial Gym by scores of 15-8, 8-15, 15-6 and 15-13. The girls are now 25-3 and will play in the MAC Tourney on Friday and Saturday. Plans are being made to bus interested JC students to the tournament at F & M for the semi-finals and finals to be played on Saturday so come and support your Volleyball team, this looks like the year for them to win the MAC Championship.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

There was a guy who sold rugs down in Texas. He had this ugly bright green remenant that he could never get rid of. One day he met a sucker who finally took it off his hands, said he wanted to build a baseball field, or something. The salesman just laughed, and had it delivered to the big round domed building in Houston. Now the salesman can't even keep it in stock. The American public sure has some strange taste.

The invention of Astro, Tartan, and other artificial turfs has radically changed American sports in the last twenty years. It has also had a radical effect on the number of injuries that occur. A bad effect.

In many cases the field underneath the turf is cement or blacktop for drainage purposes. The force of the impact from running on such a hard surface has a destructive effect on the knees, shins, ankles and hips. The knees and elbows are especially vulnerable when you fall.

A quick examination of the injured reserve list of almost any team that plays on turf will reveal an unusual number of joint related injuries.

Maybe they get to play a few more games during the baseball season, and the ball does take a truer hop, but it seems that the cost of losing a star player far exceeds the gain.

What about the football player who has to dive, and cut on the slick plastic surface. Now they have to worry as much about hitting the ground, as being hit. Just how long can an Earl Campbell, Billy Simms, or Wilbert Montgomery take that kind of physical punishment?

Perhaps the worst sport to play on artificial turf is soccer. Because they wear shorts, most players have no skin left on their thighs. Making a slide tackle on the turf is like falling on glass. No goalie in his right mind allows any part of their body to be exposed. Many players refuse to even play on the stuff. One of the major reasons that the Cosmos lost Franz Beckenbuer was because of the turf at the meadowlands.

I wonder why sports promoters don't get smart and do a cost benefit analysis of the value of turf vs. the disadvantages; I'm sure the results would be enlightening.

Damage Decreased From Last Year

More Recreational Needs Met

by Kathy Novak

Vandalism, which can be a significant problem in many areas, has actually been decreasing on campus this year as compared to last year. This could be a direct result of an increased effort of the administration to attend to the recreational needs of the college community. Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, stated that there has been "no damage reported whatsoever" this year.

Tilden feels that people are more prone to engage in irresponsible behavior when they are bored. In view of this, the college has been trying to make the campus and residential climate as stimulating as possible, using programming as a major element to accomplish this.

Since resident students are dependent on the campus for their recreational needs, there has been a conscious decision to improve both the quality and quantity of programming through such projects as concerts, coffeehouses, dances, and the film program. Funding has increased approximately five times over a four year period in order to accomplish this.

Residence Hall Associations, which are a relatively recent development, have been informed to enhance programming in residence halls. Members of the faculty and staff work with the residence halls to organize activities to enrich the social quality of life on the campus. There have also been staffing additions of Residence directors in the dorms, who "serve the function of providing on-site support for the resident assistants," according to Tilden.

Still more approaches have been set forth in the attempt to decrease the amount of vandalism, including an ongoing program of alcohol education. The most comprehensive approach to this has been Freshmen Conference which has made an effort to "clarify values and attitudes" and encourage informed decisions to promote responsibility. In addition, an Alcohol Education Fair will be held sometime during the year.

Instilling a sense of ownership and pride in students has been attempted in order to convert the "institutionalized environment" into a more personal one, which students would be less inclined to damage or misuse. Activities such as the room decorating contest and corridor decorating projects have been planned. Strides in maintenance have also put the buildings in good shape, hopefully encouraging care of the facilities.

A Damage Policy was developed in November of 1977, which students helped to initiate and support. A fine anywhere from $100 to $250 can be imposed for a first act of willfull damage, and a second act would result in expulsion. There has been no need to institute this fine so far this year, as compared to 7 instances which were enforced last year.

Tilden also emphasized that "we've got a responsible group of students who care about the college and the college community." This serves as the single most important feature in helping to build the programs and policies here at Juniata.

Freshmen For Sale

On Monday, November 3, the long-awaited night finally arrived. At 8:30PM, the freshman slaves were lined up outside the door of Ellis Ballroom waiting for their big moment. Most of them were a little nervous, not knowing what was to be expected of them. "I just hope that someone merciful buys me," said Alyson Pfister as she stood patiently in line.

Meanwhile, the excited crowd of upperclassmen waited inside. Some knew that this was the big chance to buy someone who could attend to chores and other projects that have been put off.

C.O. Workshop Held on Campus

by Dave Heisterkamp

A draft counseling workshop was conducted by Bill Galvin, counselor from the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors (CCCO), in Tussey-Terrace lounge last Wednesday, November 5. Galvin was introduced to the audience by Lucy Breslin, Resident Director of Tussey-Terrace dorm and Freshman Composition teacher.

Galvin first told the group, consisting of about 16 individuals, about his backround. He is a graduate of Princeton Theological Seminary and applied as a C.O. during the Vietnam conflict. Although his C.O. claim was denied, Galvin never had to uphold his beliefs against the United States Selective Service because he was never drafted.

Galvin then had each member of the audience introduce him or herself and explain why they, personally, were interested in draft counseling. As it turned out, the majority of the group were more interested about being Conscientious Objectors. Galvin, flexible in his presentation, spoke to the matter of what being a C.O. is all about.

"To be classified as a C.O.", according to the last special form for C.O.'s from the Selective Service, "you must be opposed to war in any form. Your objection must be based on moral or ethical beliefs, or beliefs which are commonly accepted as religious..."

Galvin also addressed subjects concerning registrating for the draft and registering to be a C.O. He explained to the group about developing a C.O. file. "You can't do enough to prove that you're a C.O.," Galvin said.

One important step in declaring your C.O. status, according to Galvin, is to print on your

by Randall Anderson

In considering the problem of Juniatian reporters being evicted from a Trustees meeting, and possible future policies of the college regarding the matter, Student Government voted to accept a written statement at the Senate Meeting November 5th, to be presented to the Board of Trustees, requesting that they review and consider the Juniatian's argument. The editorial staff of the Juniatian feels that reporters should be allowed into Executive meetings in order to objectively report their content from a primary source of information.

The Student Government statement is a kind of "neutral support" for the Juniatian. "The Juniatian is a concern of the Student Government, and we are concerned," said S.G. President Doug Klepfer. He emphasized that the Student Government has not taken a stance for or against the Juniatian, but he does feel that the college newspaper should be given a chance to present its case. "The question itself is not our decision," he said.

The written statement also says that, since there is no official written policy at present, a clearly-defined written policy should be formed, stipulating who could be allowed into Executive meetings. The document requests that a written rationale of the Board's decision be submitted to Student Government.

Newsbriefs

Auto Manufacturers Request Aid

The U.S. International Trade Commission began deciding early this week whether it should recommend that American automakers be protected from foreign competition. Petitions are currently being considered from the Ford Motor Company and United Autoworkers for federal relief in the form of import quotas and tariffs against those automobiles and light trucks manufactured abroad.

In Other News...

The conservative Heritage foundation will present a report this week to Ronald Reagan's transition team calling for an annual increase of $35 billion in defense specing over the next five years.

The foundation warned that the U.S. is "moving toward a state of military inferiority." It said that a hide in military pay should receive top priority to keep good people in the service.

Editorial

Although following other school's models in tuition increases, Juniata is setting its own highly commendable trend in another area — lack of vandalism on campus. It appears that the administration has heard student pleas this year for SOMETHING to do on campus and thought up a whole batch of new ideas to keep almost everyone occupied, allowing not even a spare moment for the thought of vandalism to enter anyone's head.

The administration should first be commended on their decision to increase the funding to Centerboard that enables them to accomplish this year's variety of activities. Centerboard realized that Huntingdon is not exactly "hopping" on the weekends and that not everyone owns a car for a jaunt to Penn State. They have, therefore, decided to use this extra money wisely, offering even better programming this year to fend off the ever encroaching boredom of continuous studying.

Centerboard has sponsored entirely or at least has helped fund most of the successful activities on campus this year. Of course, it was up to students to attend and show interest, but this was apparent in the attendance and enthusiasm exhibited at the "America" and "Appalachia" concerts for instance. Numerous coffeehouses, dances, and the more recent films this year show an overwhelming improvement from last year.

Fall term is the longest and often most tension packed term of the year with no breaks or chances for many students to go home. The amount of activities held this term offered the much needed relief. The term long build-up of frustrations which was vented in the past on windows, lounge furniture, and ceiling tiles was instead released at these college sponsored dances and concerts.

Student Services, under the direction of Arnie Tilden, has also done a good job this year in making dorms feel more like "home." With the addition of Resident Directors to help the R.A.'s come up with ideas, more activities have been held in dorms. This is increasing dorm pride as points are added to each dorm when they sponsor activities, all culminating in the Dorm of the Year Contest.

Maintanance has accomplished a lot this summer, too, in the way of improvements on campus, giving students yet another reason not to vandalize these much needed renovations. Individual rooms have not escaped these administrative techniques as Jack Linetty himself has composed a booklet describing how to get paint, how to build lofts, and even how to design your own graphics for the wall in hopes that everyone will enter the room competition.

With all the enthusiasm for increased activities shown by the administration, it seems that they are working hard and in the right direction to combat vandalism at J.C. "No damage reported whatsoever" this year indicates that it is working and is a quote every student should try to uphold in the remaining two terms.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Joe Schall

When Captain John Smith sailed the Mayflower along Muddy Run, he was impressed with the electricity that seemed to fill the air around him.

"Dock here," the captain ordered as they came near a bridge. "This is the new country, I can feel it is the air."

The ship's bottom scraped against land with a noise as final as the closing of a book, but for John Smith the noise was a foreword for his book of knowledge. He filled his lungs with the crisp morning air, feeling suddenly refreshed from his long journey. For a dozen years he and his crew had been searching for a land which would offer some learning challenges. In the old country they had wanted the freedom to learn many things, but the king had ordered that all of his "students" and subjects be treated equally, so the "most capable" had to slow down for the others. John Smith and his mates were sailing for a new land where they could escape such ignorance.

"There's a native," said Smith as he stepped onto the bridge. He pointed to a dark skinned Buddha-like man sitting in the lotus position and meditating. The man was wearing blue shorts and a yellow headband with a single white feather pointing to the sky.

Smith drew another lungful of air and said to the native: "We have sailed for a dozen years to find this land of knowledge."

"How," said the native, opening his eyes and raising one hand.

"In this ship," Smith answered pointing to the Mayflower.

"We are here to learn——to be challenged; to escape ignorance," piped up the first mate.

"How," the native repeated.

"Why, in the traditional way, I suppose," stammered the confused first mate.

"We're searching for the truth," cut in the helmsman, "could you steer us in the right direction?"

"How," repeated the persistent native.

"Simply point it out to us," said the helmsman matter-of-factly.

The native pointed to a young man walking down the path with a determined look on his face. He was armed with a blue book and pen.

"Out of my way, I'm wired," said the boy as he passed them.

The pilgrims backed away carefully, fearing that he might blow up, but he passed by harmlessly. The native again closed his eyes and began meditating. The pilgrims sat down beside him and followed his example, hoping that they might learn some secret from it.

Three hours later the young man walked by again, happily flipping his pen in the air.

"Are..ah..are you still wired?" John Smith asked carefully.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

A front page article in last week's paper made it sound as if tuition is rising because Juniata doesn't have enough room for more students. False. The reason for rising tuition is rising costs. More housing would mean even more costs.

Quote from last week's editorial: "No one seems willing to say exactly where the extra money will be going." False again. Two days after the forum on the tuition incease, Mr. McCullen spent over an hour with me in his office explaining where each tuition dollar will be going. He'll do the same for anyone else who cares.

Another quote from last week's editorial: "Juniata College is not an average school." True.

Sincerely,
Joe Schall

Free Advice is Part of "Visitor's Day"

Free advice and information about college experience — as well as counseling about selecting the proper college — are in store for high school seniors and their parents who take advantage of Juniata College's "Visitor's Day" on Saturday, Nov. 15.

Sponsored by the admissions office of the liberal arts college, the day is designed to acquaint high school seniors and their parents with aspects of the college experience and to inform them about how to choose the right college.

Visitor's Day will begin at 9:30 A.M. in the main lobby of the Ellis College Center with refreshments and a tour of the building.

Q: Reflections on Ronald Reagan winning the election:

Duane Dilling — America will be GREAT again. The economy will finally be solvent (it can't get worse!).

Bill Titman — I just hope his Secretary of State can keep him out of trouble abroad.

Heather Rehbery — We've got a leader in office now...but as to exactly where he'll lead us...?

Bryan Winship — I'm a little worried about his "loose" comments on state affairs; however, anything is better than four years of ineffective, inefficiency.

Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Bank — The River

The E Street Bank is the best urban group in America; Bruce Springsteen is the poet laureate of the streets. Their long-awaited album (it's been four years) is a testimony of urban exuberance.

The band has a rich, textured sound — the six-pence ensemble can belt out Springsteen's manic rockers and gently deliver his lilting ballads. Max Wienberg's solid drumming lays the foundation while Danny Federici's organ and Clarence Clemons' sweet-as-sugar sax weave leads back and forth. This group has a sound that come only with dedication and years of playing together — mature, tight, synchronized.

Bruce Springsteen further defines his role as the prophet of the Eastern Seaboard on this album. He sings in his emotional, constantly-changing voice about the lifestyles, the loves, the families of New York, Boston, Jersey City and Philadelphia. The songs range from all-out boogies

Local Band with their original tunes and classic hits packed in J.C. students last weekend in Sherwood lounge.

Clocks New Wave Rocks Catharsis

by Maureen Morrissey

On November 7th "The Clocks", a local rock band, jammed their way into Catharsis lounge in Sherwood. Every second, every minute, and yes, every hour that they played provided all with super entertainment that just seemed to make time fly.

"The Clocks" are: Roger Williams - keyboards; Rick Groove - guitar/lead vocals; Barry Grubb - bass; Mike Groove - drums; Ly Anderson - lead guitar. They've been together for two years.

It was very crowded in the lounge with Juniata students as well as people from town. Before time was up, everyone was bopping about to many popular punk and new-wave rock and roll tunes as well as the band's original material. According to Roger Williams, "We tape our own tunes - which we write - we came out of electric tastes - but have now narrowed our focus." He also said that their repertoire included many originals which are "new-wave but with more euphony."

At this point in time, "The Clocks" are playing about once a week in colleges and in small clubs. Williams expressed a concern for where they played. His priorities lie in the type of place that the band plays in rather than in how often they play. They are content with playing only once a week as long as the gig is at a decent place. He also stated that they enjoyed Juniata.

There are future plans for "The Clocks" to get together with an independent record producer. But the general opinion of the crowd at Catharsus Friday night is: The time is now for "The Clocks".

Death In Oller Hall

by Ruth Batik

On November 7th and 8th "The Shadow Box", a play by Michael Cristofer, was presented in Oller Hall. Attendance was excellent and by all accounts the production was a tremendous success.

"The Shadow Box" is a drama which centers on the lives of three terminally ill patients and their families and the way in which they deal with impending death. Although it is an intense psychological drama, it expresses a multitude of human emotions; hope, doubt, laughter, pain, love and fear mingle to create a realistic picture of life and death. Combined with the acting and production talents represented this play formed a strong emotional bond between cast and audience, thereby achieving the aim of any artistic endeavor: touching people's lives in a real way, and creating a lasting impression in their minds.

The play marked the Juniata acting debut of Tim Dibble, Todd Keith and Diane Weaver, and added to the credits of the other cast members. While experience varied greatly, the end product did not suffer; on the contrary, Juniata once more exhibited its wealth of dedicated and talented actresses and actors. In addition, new faculty member and director Richard Iacovoni proved that his creative energies will make an important contribution to the J.C. community in the future.

This being the first production of the 1980-81 year, we can expect more excellent presentations in the future. If you missed "The Shadow Box", don't make a similar mistake when another J.C. theater production comes to Oller!

Out & About

by Kathy Novak

Did you ever dream of a luscious steak dinner, complete with potatoes, vegetables, and salad, plus bread and butter, a small drink and dessert for about $5? Well, you don't have to dream anymore. Just head out to Miller's Diner, about 15 minutes East on Route 22.

The most impressive aspect of the diner was its downright reasonable prices. They almost seemed too good to be true. The menu consisted of breakfast items, beverages, dinners, sandwiches, side orders, and of course, desserts.

The most expensive item on the entire menu was the Seafood Platter, totaling $4.95, which my companion ordered. The 8-oz. steak caught my eye, so I thought I'd try that. All of the dinners included the choice of two types of potatoes, vegetables, and several different kinds of salad, including tossed, mixed fruit, applesauce, and cole slaw. A unique but nice feature was that if you passed on the vegetable, you could order two salads instead. There was also a good choice of dressings, with homemade among the options. A basket of bread accompanied the dinner.

While waiting for the main course, we were able to dig into our salads and look around. Miller's is a rather small place, but seemingly popular judging from the number of cars parked out front and the constant flow of people in and out. The initial impression was one of an ordinary, rather simple-looking diner. The drawn-back pink curtains on all of the windows were a nice touch.

There were booths, tables, and a counter for seating. There was no impressive person to show you to a table, but there were no impressive prices on the menu, either. The atmosphere was refreshingly casual.

Our main courses arrived after about 15 minutes. The Seafood Platter consisted of a crab cake, haddock, shrimp, oysters, and clams, all breaded. The steak was thicker than most, and was very good. This view was shared about the seafood.

I was pleasantly surprised to find out that the bread was homemade, as were their pies. Cherry and apple pie constituted our dessert. The homemade pie seemed an old-fashioned touch, as was the coffee, for the seemingly out-dated price of 15 cents a cup. The total price of our two meals came to $11.35, including drinks and desserts.

One thing I did notice about the menue was the absence of alcoholic beverages. There were various other drinks, however, in-like Jackson Cage, Crush On You and Ramrod to soft-pop tunes like Hungry Heart and Independence Day, which is about a young man leaving home. The title tune is a mournful ballad of true love turning sour. Springsteen's cutting harmonica adds a tragic touch.

The River is a sophisticated, poignant album that also rocks on a gut-level; it's been well worth the long wait. It will be followed by a worldwide tour; Springsteen's albums, it has been reported, are no match for his frenetic live performances. Either way, the Boss is finally back.

Bill Cosby tells why Red Cross needs your type of blood.

A Public Service of This Newspaper & The Advertising Council

"Every day of the week, there's somebody who needs your type of blood.

"But the thing about blood is: it doesn't keep very long. Which means we've got to keep the supply coming constantly. Donors are needed every day.

"Sorry to say, there are never enough donors.

"In fact, five people out of every 100 are doing the whole job. That's right, five percent of the people give 100 percent of the blood that's donated.

"If you're between 17 and 66, and generally healthy, you can help change all that. And your one blood donation can help up to five people to live.

"Call your Red Cross Blood Center and make a donor appointment soon. It's one way you can help keep Red Cross ready... to help others."

Keep Red Cross ready.

The service was good and the waitress was very friendly and accommodating. About the only disagreeable thing about the dinner was the fact that the railroad tracks ran almost directly behind it, so the noise of the trains that passed could be heard rather distinctly.

All in all, Miller's Diner was a nice change of pace, with good service and food, and great prices. The diner is open from 6 a.m. through 9 p.m. from April to December, and 6 a.m. to 8 p.m. from January to March.

Cancer is often curable.

The fear of cancer is often fatal.

If you're afraid of cancer... you're not alone. But some people are so afraid that they won't go to the doctor when they suspect something's wrong.

They're afraid the doctor might "find something". This kind of fear can prevent them from discovering cancer in the early stages when it is most often curable.

These people run the risk of letting cancer scare them to death.

Video Contest

US JVC Corp., a leading manufacturer of electronics equipment, is sponsoring a nationwide video competition for students in colleges, graduate schools and art schools.

Entrants are invited to submit taped programs in any or all of the contest categories: documentary, creative and news short. Each program should be no more than 20 minutes long, and should be accompanied by an entry form. All entries must be submitted by December 1, 1980.

A distinguished panel of judges will review all entries. The three prize winners in each category will be announced at a special screening and awards ceremony in December.

Complete contest rules and regulations and entry forms may be obtained by writing to JVC Student Video Festival C/O Burson-Marsteller, 866 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022, or by calling Rick Sacks or Don Heymann at (212) 752-8610.

Auction

Others just felt that buying a slave would be a good way to meet new people and have fun.

The noise of the crowd subsided as the auction began. Dan Hutchinson and John Hyman served as auctioneers, and the crowd seemed to really enjoy their style. When the Freshmen came in, they proceeded to the front in groups of five. Most of them were auctioned off individually, but there were also five package deals consisting of, at the most, three people.

The bidding started at $1. At first, the crowd was a little reluctant, but as time went by, the exhilaration started and the bidder got higher and higher. The average bid was $5.75. Some of the students were really surprised at the high prices. "Wow, I should've brought my checkbook," said Eileen Suber. The highest priced girl, Cindy Lehman, was auctioned off for $25, and the highest priced guy, Mike Dimatteo, was auctioned off for $16. In total, the class of 1984 acquired $525 through the auction. It turned out to a great success.

Dr. Ernest Post Named to Prestigious Faculty Chair

Dr. Ernest H. Post, Jr., professor of history at Juniata College, has been named the college's second W. Newton and Hazel A. Long Professor of History.

Dr. Post will succeed Dr. Kenneth W. Crosby in the post. Dr. Crosby retired last spring, after teaching at Juniata for some 30 years.

Established in 1976 by the W. Newton Long Foundation of Baltimore, the Long Professorship honors the late Dr. Long and his widow, Hazel A. Long, of Boonesboro, Md. He had served on Juniata's board of trustees from 1923 to 1971 and as a trustee emeritus from 1971, a total of 52 years.

"It is most fitting for the board of trustees to have recognized Dr. Post for his many years of outstanding service to Juniata with the Long Professorship," President Binder said.

A Juniata faculty member since 1959, Dr. Post received his Ph.D. from Michigan State University in 1966. He also holds the A.B. degree from Hope College and the M.A. degree from Michigan State.

Prior to coming to Juniata, Dr. Post — who is a retired commander in the Naval Reserve — taught at several western Michigan high schools and had supervised recreation at Lansing's Boys Vocational School.

At Juniata, Dr. Post served as head coach of the men's varsity tennis team for 20 years, stepping down from that position last summer. He also served six years as assistant football coach and three seasons as jayvee basketball coach.

Public Forgets Watergate and Faults Dems

by John George

In a presidential election that pollsters said was "too close to call", California governor Ronald Reagan took 44 states and the resultant 489 electoral votes, plus 51% of the popular vote. Reagan's landslide victory over the incumbent President Jimmy Carter came about even despite the Democrats' distinct advantage in registration and Carter's hold over the black and union vote.

Reagan and the Republican Party were both winners on November 4. For the first time in a quarter century, the GOP gained partial control of the United States Congress by amassing a total of 53 out of 100 Senate seats. However, the House of Representatives still held a Democratic majority.

Ronald Reagan has now won the biggest first-term electoral vote victory in history. With Jimmy Carter taking only 49 votes (6 states and Washington, D.C.) and independent challenger John Anderson getting a respectable 7% of the popular vote (thereby dispelling his "spoiler" image), Reagan enjoyed an early victory that prompted about 450,000 Californians not to vote because they viewed Carter's concession and the projections of Reagan's victory on the television.

With 99% of the precincts reporting and a very poor 52.3% voter turn-out, here are the presidential results:

Reagan 43,209,016 (51%)
Carter 34,921,696 (41%)
Anderson 5,581,710 (7%)
Clark 881,732 (1%)
Commoner 221, 102 (less than 1%)

In the state of Pennsylvania, Republican R. Bud Dwyer ousted Democrat Robert E. Casey for the position of State Treasurer.

Replacing retiring incumbent Republican Richard Schweiker, Republican Arlen Specter defeated Democrat Pete Flaherty despite a Democratic registration edge. The Republicans now hold power in both chambers of the Pennsylvania General Assembly.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

I saw an old friend the other day, we hadn't seen each other in years. We always seem to meet in the most unusual places. This time it was no different. I was out taking photographs on a cool, wet day when I heard his rather distinctive whistle.

I gazed over and saw his big, soft brown eyes peering over a rather large, pointed nose. He was up to his knees in mud, and looked as happy as ever. I hadn't seen a woodcock since the fall of 1977, and his unexpected appearence delighted me.

There are several animals and birds that we never seem to see much of. Most of them are rather shy and reclusive. Even if you were to go out looking for them, you would probably never even catch a glimpse of one.

Some, like the Eastern Diamond Back, the Bobcat, the Cougar and even the once abundant Bobwhite Quail, are disappearing, maybe forever. Every time we build a new house, or sell a farm to industry, we put another nail in the coffin.

Contrary to popular belief, it is not hunting that is depleating our wildlife populations, it is loss of habitat. Most large animals, especially predators, require a spacious, uninterupted territory. When man invades this domain, the wildlife is forced out.

Several years ago I got the chance to visit what is probably the largest unbroken tract of wilderness left in this hemisphere. The vast forests and tundra of Alaska are the last refuge for many species of North American wildlife.

Now that he is no longer President it will be interesting to observe Jimmy Carters' stand on the Alaskan frontier. If nothing else, Americans should remember Carter as the first President since Teddy Roosevelt who took a serious stand on the preservation of the American wilderness. Perhaps now that Mr. Carter is relieved of the considerable pressures of the White House, he may have more time to devote to this noble cause. There are a lot of us who would welcome this type of support from someone as influential as the former President.

Girls Cross Country team running their way to an M.A.C. championship.

C.C. Picks Up the Pace

by Bill Shuler

This past Saturday down at Chester Park both the men and women cross-country teams took part at the annual Middle Atlantic Conference Cross-Country Championships. This meet determines the champions of the conference regardless of previous duel meet results.

The women's team which has posted a season record of 4-4 came out of the championship meet tied with Delaware Valley, with 86 points, to share the crown as MAC champions. Carolyn Andre led the womens attack over Widener's rugged course placing ninth out of seventy runners. Carolyn also won a medal for placing in the top ten.

Jeanne McLaughlin was the second Indian to cross the finish, placing 13th. Following Jeanne and closing fast was Dana Taylor, who used all the energy she could muster to pass several runners in the final moments of the race, before collapsing at the finish in 16th place. In 18th place and showing the strain of a hard run came Mickey Pitale. Rounding out the top five scorers was Lisa Rizzo who, like Dana, passed a group of runners before the finish, including Del. Val.'s fifth girl, to secure the tie. Mary Yankaskas and Robin Bardman placed 44th and 45th respectively to finish off the championship squad.

The men's team led by sophomore Tom Hoffman's 25th place finish, placed ninth out of nineteen teams. When competing at the MAC's the men's team always seems to be under a hex, and this year's meet held some unfortunate surprises. Fifth man Roy Castor lost his spiked shoe a mile into the race and ended up hobbling in to finish 72nd (ask him for all the details). Behind Hoffman came Bill Shuler in 39th, followed by Tim Swartz in 47th who was ailing due to a blood blister, and Tom Wise in 54th who was slowed by cramps. After Castor came Andy Pearson in 75th and George Peterson in 93rd.

Overall the MAC's proved to be quite successful as the women came home co-champions and the men finishing in the top ten, one of Coach Mitchell's wishes. This race ended the women's season while the men have one more chance at the Div. III qualifying meet at Fort Indiantown Gap on the 15th. Hopefully they will have left their "hex" at Widner.

Volleyball 3rd

by Duane Wright

The JC Volleyball team went to F & M for the MAC tournament and, like last year, came back in third place finish. On Friday, the girls defeated Scranton and Ursinus but were defeated by Gettysburg, a team they beat during the regular season, and met again in the semi-finals on Saturday. In the morning, the Tribe faced their nemasis, Western Maryland, whom they had beaten at the Mansfield earlier. However, the girls were defeated by the eventual champs 2-15, 15-12, 10-15 as they missed crucial serves. Coach Boch said he felt sorry for the seniors because it was their last chance to win the title game. In the consolation game, the Tribe beat Albright 15-11, 15-8 to finish third. The team record to date is 28-5 with the girls going to Dickinson College to participate in the EAIAW Division III Tournament November 20-22.

Football Falls

Juniata College's football team dropped it's second consecutive game on Saturday to Wilkes College. The Indians record fell to (3-3) in the MAC southern division, and (3-5) overall. Wilkes upped their record to 2-4, in the MAC's, and 2-6 overall.

A combination of mental errors by Juniata, and an overpowering defense by the Colonels gave Wilkes the game. "We killed ourselves with mistakes of a wide variety," commented a disheartened Rob Ash. The defense of Wilkes held Juniata to 233 total yards. That's not a poor amount of yardage, but only six of them came on the ground.

Mike Nett started and quarterbacked the entire game. He racked up 227 yards on 18 completions of 31 attempts. Although his arm looked good, he was dropped many times in his backfield for a net total of -48 yards. This was the story of the Tribe's rushing attack. Tom Bell and Jeff Miles had only 40 yards between them. Eric Biddle's eight receptions was the third best in J.C. history. Both Rob Ash and Tom Rogish were impressed with Juniata's defensive play. Miles blocked a field goal attempt in the first half and intercepted his second pass of the season. Mike Ford had an excellent day knocking down 18 colonels and Matt Blaugh contributed 16 total tackles to the Tribe's cause.

The Tribe made the first score with 1:19 remaining in the first half. Tight End Mike Valdiserri caught a Mike Nett toss on a fourth and seven situation and carried it in. Jack Hench booted the extra point and J.C. took a 7-0 lead into the locker room.

Juniata maintained their lead until the fourth quarter when an offensive mistake gave the Colonels the ball on the Indian 34 yard line. The game ended 8-7 in favor of Wilkes College.

Sportstown U.S.A.

by Doug Wallace

Do you know what city in the United States has all of its sports teams (football, basketball, hockey) in the first place in their respective sports? It's not New York, It's not Los Angeles. It's not Pittsburg. It's the city of Brotherly Love, that's right, Philadelphia.

As of right now the Philadelphia Eagles have the best record in the National Football League. The 9-1 Eagles are 2 games better than anyone else in the N.F.C., and rate as strong favorites to represent the N.F.C. in the Superbowl.

The Philadelphia 76ers have jumped out to a lead in the Atlantic division of the NBA, and they own the best record in the league, 12-2.

The Flyers are currently on top in the NHL standings, 1 point ahead of Los Angeles. Once again the Flyers should make it to the Stanley Cup Finals hoping to bring another Championship to Philadelphia.

No city in the United States can compare with Philadelphia in sports as of right now. Pittsburgh has a world champion (Steelers), but the rest of their teams are mediocre. Even New York with all of its sports teams can't compare, they have one World Champion (Islanders), and one play-off contender (Yankees), but the rest of their teams are sub-par. The only city that comes close to Philadelphia is Los Angeles. L.A. has the World Champion Lakers, and the Kings are giving the Flyers a run for their money, but only Philadelphia has a World Champion (Phillies), and the rest of it's teams in first place.

Plus/minus Grading Causes Controversy

SG Answers Student Questions

by Tricia Abbott

The first-time use of the eleven point plus/minus grading system has sparked concern and controversy, according to students present at the last meeting of the Student Government. Mike Dennehy, representative of the Curriculum Committee, was asked to attend the meeting to clarify the use of the system and the faculty committee position, as well as to answer questions.

According to Dennehy, the system was instituted "in order to provide more information on transcripts" so that professional schools did not have to call and clarify, for example, whether a student is a high B student or a low B student.

The original recommendation of the Curriculum Committee, according to Dennehy was to have professors grade on the eleven point scale but not to average the plus/minus differential into the student's grade point average. When presented to the faculty, however, it was decided that it should be printed on the transcript as well as averaged into the student's Cumulative Grade Point Average (CGPA). According to Dennehy, the faculty's sentiment was "What's the use of showing it on the transcript if it's not averaged into the student's CGPA?"

One student present brought up the problem of arbitrary use of the system. The first concern was why all professors did not have to use it, and secondly, why there was no set scale to unify the grading system. Speaking to the first concern, Dennehy stated that it was written down in the faculty manual that "Juniata uses an eleven point plus/minus system." It is not up to professors to use it or not. They are expected to use it. He also stated that students concerned that a professor is not using the system have the right to report that professor to Academic Dean Terry Hartman, "who has the power to enforce the policy."

Speaking to the second concern, Dennehy said that professors maintain what he termed "academic freedom," which allows them the discretion of where to draw the line between say an A or a B, or a B and a B-. A student brought up a case where a fellow student received a 72 percent and received a D+ for a grade. Dennehy clarified that the traditional 90-80-70 cut-off lines were not set standards but were simply traditions and that there is no standard for grading cut-off lines. He mentioned that the arbitrary use was particularly evident in the natural science department. It was suggested that in order to help the problem, professors should clarify at the beginning of the term the scale to be used for grading.

Another question brought up was why an A- was used but that there was no such grade as an A+. Dennehy explained that neither A+ or F- was used because they are too extreme to realistically be achieved. He also noted that "no other school using the eleven point scale used the A+ or F-."

A concern also brought up was that the sudden institution of the plus/minus system could have hindered persons getting off academic probation. In order to get off academic probation a person must maintain a C (or 2.0) average. The concern was that now students who in the past would have received a C and gotten off academic probation could receive a C- which would not

by Bob Kemper

A fire broke out in the garbage room of Sherwood Dorm at about 4:15 last Sunday morning; no one was injured.

The fire was first discovered by Resident Director Bob Smith. Smith said he first smelled the smoke while he was on the third floor and proceeded to the basement where he found the fire burning in three cardboard drums in the middle of the garbage room floor.

After locating the fire, Smith went back to third floor to get the Resident Assistant on duty, Duane Silvestri, and then sounded the alarm to evacuate the building.

Silvestri then contacted the physical plant who, according to standard procedure, were to contact security and the local fire department, while Smith and several students attempted to contain the fire with fire extinguishers. Although no one is sure why there was a delay in the arrival of the fire trucks, students were able to extinguish the blaze before firefighters arrived.

The garbage chute leading to the room was closed and locked and the only door to the room, according to Smith, is usually closed but he does not know if it is supposed to be locked. The nature of the fire is still unknown, but has been termed as being of a "suspicious nature" by Smith.

Further investigation into the matter by campus security and local officials is continuing according to Dean Tilden and Sue Twombly, both of whom commended the students involved for their handling of the situation.

USSR intervention "unacceptable"

The State Department let the Soviet Union know Monday that any intervention in Poland, including any response to the Poles "invitation" will be considered "unacceptable" to the United States.

The West European Defense Minister said that the Soviet bloc over Poland is political and not military. A NATO task force scheduled to be launched in response, will not leave port.

Ronald Reagan announced that Alexander Haig's involvement in the Watergate scandal will not influence his possibly becoming the next secretary of state. He also said that his first cabinet appointments will be named this week.

Coffins containing dried foods and survival packages arrived at Kennedy Airport Monday. The coffins are en route to the areas of Italy devastated by earthquakes.

Tuition Survey Indicates Discontent

by Tricia Abbott

According to a recent survey taken by the Public Relations Committee of the Student Government there may be sufficient dissatisfaction with the tuition increase to keep a number of students from returning to Juniata next year.

According to Dave Thorton of the Public Relations Committee, surveys were sent to all underclassmen via the college mail. Approximately 272 were returned. The questionaire simply asked "In light of the tuition increase do you think you will be returning to Juniata College next year?" Comments were also requested.

The numerical results are as follows: 41% (112 replies) said they would return, 32% (88 replies) said no they would not, and 27% (72 replies) were undecided. According to the comments, there was almost unanimous dissatisfaction with the proposed 15% increase.

Many of those who said they were coming back had comments similar to these: ". . . Since I have only one more year I will be returning to Juniata next year, but if I was a Freshman or Sophmore I would definitely transfer;" "With only one more year to go, it would hardly seem beneficial (or smart) to transfer to another college. My parents have too much invested in this place to quit now." There were positive remarks also (six all together) such as, "I object to the over-emphasis which the Student Government is placing on the tuition increase. In a time of double digit inflation . . . it is only to be expected that tuition should increase.

Those who say they are not returning have several reasons and complaints. Some comments include: "I feel Juniata is pricing themselves right out of the market with this increase. Comparing themselves to Bucknell and Swathmore I think is very biased;" "The average student coming from a middle class family who receives no financial aid and no scholarships just cannot afford such an increase;" and "Is the quality going to increase at the same proportion as price?"

Editorial:

Grading System Under Scrutiny

In lieu of the recent discussion that took place with Mike Dennehy at the Student Government meeting it is the JUNIATIAN'S position that the Curriculum Committee review the eleven point plus/minus grading system. This time, however, they should allow substantial student input. Grading is probably the most important issue to students. Any system which currently seems to have the problems that apparently are stemming from the institutiion of the new system must be reviewed and reconsidered.

Probably the most significant problem students are finding is with the arbitrary implementation and scaling being used. If professors are supposed to use the system, why are some unwilling to comply? If faculty believe that it is so important that the grade point differential between a B-, a B, or a B+ should be averaged into the student's grade point average (GPA), then is it not imperative that all use the plus/minus scale so that students have a fair change of averaging out their GPA? Suppose Professor A gives +'s and -'s but Professor B does not. Suppose also that Professor A has a tendency to give more -'s that +'s or just that Student X happens to have gotten a - in Professor A's class. Student X could have gotten a + grade in Professor B's class to compensate for the - received in Professor A's class but Professor B does not feel so inclined tc give the + or -. Student X therefore, received a cumulative lower GPA than he would have if Professor B had given him the +. Responsibility to be fair to students should go along with the professor's "academic freedom."

Once it is established that professors must use the plus/minus system, should they not have some loosly defined standard by which to establish cut-off lines? Why should one student who has a 72% receive a C or C- in one class and a D+ in another? It is not the percentage which carries the points that get averaged into the GPA, it is the grade assigned to that percentage. The professors in the natural science department, (where much of the arbitrary assignment of grades occurs, according to Dennehy), may have to find some other means to grade than the "bell" system or whatever arbitrary assignment they seem to be using. Some uniformity is necessary or the purpose of the system, to provide more clarified information, is defeated. A D+ student would in reality be no different than a C or C- student if the actual percentage grade was 72% for both grades.

The system is not a bad one. The objective of providing more information on the transcript is clearly a reasonable one for implementing the system. But the problems, which seem to be considered major ones, need to be ironed out as soon as possible in order for the system to be fair and attain the objective it set out to achieve. Perhaps it would be best to go along with the Curriculum Committee's original recommendation of using the grades but not averaging them into the student's GPA.

Have you heard about the Santa Clause? You haven't? Well, the Santa Clause is a clause recently added to the Hidden Ulterior Motives Behind Urban Guerrillas document (H.U.M.B.U.G.) in Santa Virginia. Yes, Virginia. The guerrillas have been actively opposing the mayor of Santa for almost a year now, and the battle seems about to climax.

H.U.M.B.U.G. was begun by the leader of the Santa Guerrillas, Mr. Eb Eazy. Mr Eazy insists that all the guerrillas follow the H.U.M.B.U.G. religiously. He says that the Santa Clause is the final punch needed to overthrow the spirit of the mayor. Mr. Eazy told reporters that with the H.U.M.B.U.G. now solidified, he is confident of a victory by the end of the year.

The strange thing about H.U.M.B.U.G. is that it's not a written document, but a mental one. To quote Mr. Eazy: "H.U.M.B.U.G. is an unwritten but unmistakeable mental agreement between guerrilla members to attack the Sam Trisch spirit and everything that Sam Trisch represents."

Sam Trisch is the mayor of Santa. He is a giant jolly man whose spirit has seemed nearly untouched by the guerrilla movement. However, when questioned about the Santa Clause he seemed grave. In a rare interview, Mr. Trisch reports that "the Santa Clause is harmful and cruel because it focuses on the children of the city. Each year I give gifts anonymously to everyone in Santa, and the new clause insists that because of my anonymity I don't even exist. By feeding the children such lies, Mr. Eazy is hoping that the next generation will not even allow the gifts to exist. Why, I'm as real as the warmth in a child's heart. It's a cold day in Virginia when such a man as Mr. Eazy can warm his hands in the Santa fireplaces." Sam Trisch looked troubled after the interview, but left us with a wink and a smile.

Sam Trisch's words prove that the H.U.M.B.U.G. and the Santa Clause are both powerful and real, despite being mere mental agreements. According to Mr. Eazy, "if H.U.M.B.U.G. was a written code it could be easily broken, but men's minds can be easily molded."

Yes, in Virginia there is a Santa Clause. Let's hope there's not one here.

Best Room Rewarded

During the week before Thanksgiving break, the judging for the room decorating contest took place. The winners for the entire campus were Jody McAlister and Debbie Hadden of 228 South, and Henry Gibbel and Steve Smith of 213 Cloister. Dorm winners were Lisa Ellek and Linda Geiss of 105 Lesher, Dorinda Lytle and Lynn Stellander of 322 Northwest, Jacqueline Eck and Amy Garthwaite of 100 Terrace, David Shenberger and Terry Heffner of 221 Tussey, Brian Thomas and Todd Gipe of 223 Sherwood, and Catherine Creswell, Masumi Mizusawa, Sarah Williams, and Diane Hamilton of Apartment 1 at Mission House. There were no entries from East Houses or Hess Apartments. Each set of dorm winners received $15 as their prize, and each set of winners for the campus received $50 as their prizes.

This year the contest was put on by the Student Services Department. "Next year," said Susan Twombly, "we hope to have the Residential Life Committee take charge of the whole affair." Because the contest was so successful, it is possible for it to now become an annual event.

Susan also pointed out, "We are really encouraging decoration in the corridors as well as the rooms. In the past years, students were able to paint the solid colors of their choice on the walls, but they were not allowed to paint murals. We think that when students see the decorations in the dorms, they will respect the living conditions and each other's privacy.

Such decorations in our dorms have contributed to the environments in which we live. The residents can enjoy working on such projects, and later enjoy living with them.

Q: What is your opinion of the radio station WKVR?

Teresa Squires — Very good.

Mike Lane — I think they do a good job, except they are due for some new records. The ones they play have a lot of static and scratches. Otherwise, I have no complaints.

Jean Moulder — Good variety of music.

Sandy Schultz — I think it's OK. I really like the night shows with the variety in blues, jazz, etc. I think some of the Public Service Announcements are kind of dumb though and not very realistic.

Oscar Chumsky, famed Violinist Performs

Oscar Shumsky, regarded in the highest artistic circles as a "violinist's violinist," performed in concert at Juniata College Friday evening, Dec. 5.

Philadelphis-born, Shumsky made his major debut at the age of eight, performing Mozart's A Major Violin Concerto with Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. He has since earned widespread international recognition, including a Ford Foundation Grant awarded to outstanding American violinists.

The late Soviet violinist David Oistrakh called him "one of America's greatest," and critics have been equally glowing.

Shumsky received his musical education at Philadelphia's Curtis Institute, studying under Leopold Auer and Efrem Zimbalist. He subsequently joined the faculty of that prestigious conservatory, and has since taught at the Juilliard School and Yale University School of Music.

Known for his versatility, he combines wide experience in chamber music and orchestral conducting and is busily engaged in both fields. A frequent guest artist with Lincoln Center's Chamber Music Society, he also was featured as violin soloist and conductor in the Center's 1978 "Mostly Mozart" series.

Earlier, he earned widespread renown in Canada as both performer and musical director of that country's prestigious Stratford Festival.

In 1977, Raymond Ericson noted in the New York Times, "Mr. Shumsky's performance (of Beethoven's Violin Concerto) made one regret that he is not heard in New York more often." Robert Kimball added in the New York Post, "Mr. Shumsky should be heard here in concert much more often."

Last season, however, Shumsky appeared twice in New York: with the newly-formed Soloists of Wolf Trap (at Carnegie Hall) and with the Yale Philharmonia, performing Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto at Lincoln Center.

At present, Shumsky is recording Fritz Kreisler's complete violin repertoire, a collection of some 150 short works with piano accompaniment. Within the last two years, he also has released the entire cycle of Mozart's Violin and Piano Sonatas and a similar album of Bach's Solo Sonatas and Partitas, both on the Musical Heritage Society label.

Of the former, Derrick Henry flatly stated in "Record Review" Magazine: "These are among the great recordings. Such miracles belong in every chamber music collection." The latter was termed a "Recording of Special Merit" by George Jellinek in "Stereo Review."

Concert critics have been equally impressed, among them writers for the San Francisco Chronicle, Philadelphia Inquirer, and the major Cleveland and New York newspapers. They cite Shumsky for "tonal colorings of infinite variety," for his "warmth and vibrancy," and for his "big, showy style."

They have called his performances "flawless," "sure, commanding and true," and "worthy of the greatest."

Extra Flicks on Tuesdays

Recently, Center Board designated the extra money in their budget to the Film Committee. As a result of this transaction, the Alternative Film series came about. Featured on Tuesday nights in Oller Hall for a charge of 50 cents, the films presented provide for a wide variety of interests, ranging from love stories such as "Dr. Zhivago," to horror films such as "Psycho." There are also cartoons for the carton lovers and old movies, such as "Pillow Talk," for those who enjoy the "oldies." Coming up on Tuesday December 16 is the Three Stooges showing their antics in such favorites as "Ants in the Pantry." Movie Maniacs," and "Outlaws is Coming"

H.S. Seniors Visit JC

How to select the right college — a burning question for many high school seniors these days — will be among the topics covered at a Juniata College "Visitors' Day" Saturday, Dec. 13.

Sponsored by the college admissions office, the program also is designed to deal with such aspects of college life — of life at any college — as application procedures, financial aid, career planning and athletics.

High school seniors and their parents are invited to attend.

Gayle W. Kreider, Juniata admissions director, notes that "By December, we hope that most students preparing for college have narrowed down their choices. But many still have major questions: details about applying, what student life is like, or particular academic programs.

"What we hope to do, then, is to answer those critical, remaining questions — not only as pertaining to Juniata, but to 'college' as a whole."

The Visitors' Day will begin with registration at 9:30 a.m. in the main lobby of Ellis College Center. At 10 a.m., Dr. Donald T. Hartman, academic dean, will welcome the visitors in the College Center Ballroom.

For the next 40 minutes, upperclass Juniata students will participate in a panel discussion dealing with their expectations of

Rohrbaugh's Exhibit Vibrant with Color

by Heather MacCrindle

The exhibit of Doris Rohrbaugh's work in Shoemaker Gallery through December 31 highlights her talent in the decisive and striking use of colors. Her medium is acrylic paint on canvas and her color choice is in variance with many other painters of similar natural scenes. Her strokes are strong and wide and express certainly in what she is creating.

Perfect examples of her creativeness with brilliant colors include "Sun on Blue," "Towards the Barn," and "Cabin Woods in Autumn." This last painting strikes the eye with aquamarine tree trunks, a pink forest floor, and purple trees in the distance, but these seemingly concocted colors appear totally natural and fitting in her work.

Studying nature in many forms, Ms. Rohrbaugh goes from a delicate "Grapevine Study," through the dark strokes depicting a deep forest in her complex "Balancing Act," finally emphasizing her obvious talent in color again in the large piece, "Garden Strength." This painting seems typical of her style for the pastel purples contrast strikingly with the almost submarine yellows.

Several of her works seem to show her interest in letting color stand on its own. In "October Sky" the painting is almost entirely composed of blue unclouded sky, and in "Garden Space" the color that dominates over half the painting seems almost perfectly chosen.

Several distant landscapes seem to use color alone to identify the objects in "The Cliffs" and "The Valley." This intense use of color is carried one step further in her two most striking pieces, "Breakthrough" and "Coming Out." Almost Picasso-like the areas of color in these two are strong and complete in themselves, even eye shocking. In "Breakthrough" an impression of human forms can be seen and the brillant colors are contrasted with almost frustrating strokes of grey and black.

A native of the area, Ms. Rohrbaugh offers a "View From Reservoir Hill" depicting a most realistic view of Huntingdon, but again in her own colorful style. The most effective use of color is found in "Red Tree At the Little Juniata River," with a stark, almost ominous view of the world portrayed in this single tree.

Out & About

Did you ever have the urge to get dressed up and go out to a really nice restaurant, and have a delicious dinner and a lovely evening? Well, the next time the mood strikes you but you don't feel like making a major excursion, go out to "Yesterdays" at the Raystown Country Inn, which is conveniently located on Route 22, right off Fourth Street.

"Yesterdays" is a small, quiet restaurant with a pleasant, friendly atmosphere and delicious food. It offers dining on two levels and is rarely crowded. Service is excellent; the waitresses are courteous and friendly, prompt and dependable. No hassles here: you won't have to put up with hovering waitresses and rushed service, but on the other hand, you won't wait forever to order or be served either.

We began our meal with stuffed mushrooms and French Onion Soup au gratin, both of which were hot and tasty. Our entrees, the Seafood Platter and Veal prepared with wine and mushrooms, were accompanied by old favorites such as the baked potato and vegetable of the day, as well as more unusual ones such as wild rice and a side dish of baked zucchini. The food was excellent and we enjoyed it immensely. Although the evening we were there they were unable to offer their usual desserts, the dessert list is limited but appealing. They also offer some unusual mixed drinks, in addition to the popular ones, and of course, there's wine if you're so inclined.

The bill, even though larger than you'd want to pay on a regular basis, is reasonable enough for an occasional night out with someone special. If you're looking for a great dinner in a relaxed, comfortable setting, "Yesterdays" is the place to go.

Series Begun with Dickens

Reviving for the sixth time a popular area yuletide tradition, Dr. Richard E. Hunter, professor of English at Juniata College, read Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" Tuesday evening, Dec. 9, in the college's Shoemaker Galleries.

The hour-long program, designed for area residents of every age, began at 8:15 p.m. It launched the 1980-81 Masks and Mirrors Series, which is sponsored by Juniata's English Department.

Dr. Hunter, who also read the Dickens tale in 1978, developed an appreciative audience with his "true-to-the-author" style.

"I grew up," he says, "hearing Lionel Barrymore doing this story on radio every year. Since the advent of TV, however, most presentations use puppets, animation (as with Mr. Magoo), or live actors who must leave out two-thirds of the story to throw in songs and dances.

"Without the twentieth-century schlock, 'A Christmas Carol' is a good story, a fun story, and I think it should be done as Dickens intended. Dickens was a pretty fair amateur actor himself, and he wrote stories tailored for performance."

A Juniata faculty member since 1966, Dr. Hunter plans now to read "A Christmas Carol" every other year. With degrees from Ursinus College, Princeton Theological Seminary and the University of Pennsylvania, his acting credits include the Major General in the college's 1973 production of "The Pirates of Penzance," Murray in Huntingdon Community Theatre's "The Odd Couple," and numerous Readers Theatre appearances.

The second Masks and Mirrors program, set for January 20, will feature Dr. Howard F. Long, associate professor of education, reading from the memoirs of George Lichtenberg.

Dr. Esther M. Doyle, professor of English emerita, and Richard F. Iacovoni, instructor in English, will conclude the series March 11-12, offering two performances of "Guests in Our Lives."

Grading

give them the number of points to achieve the 2.0 necessary to get off academic probation. According to Dennehy, who based his answer on figures received from the registrar, the new grading system did not negatively effect the number of students getting off academic probation. According to Dennehy, "the number of people on academic probation decreased from spring term to now," and (CGPA) were better this term."

A related question brought up was why it was universally instituted to all classes when it was conceivable that it could harm upperclassmen who may receive a minus grade now and could have had a chance in the past to compensate that minus with a plus. In answer Dennehy stated that it would be too difficult for professors to have to use different grading scales for different classes and again that no other school using the system used it selectively among different classes.

A final concern was why students were not adequately informed about the system before it was put into practice. Dennehy placed the responsibility primarily on the administration stating that they "assumed too much" when they assumed that students would find out via traditional college media sources (i.e. newsletters and student government minutes). He also suggested that the faculty should have been more responsible in explaining it to students.

Dennehy ended by saying that the system was open to review and possible revision if there was enough negative student sentiment generated via letters-to-the-editor in the JUNIATIAN, student petitions or merely voicing concern to himself or Karen Snyder, both student representatives of the Curriculum Committee.

college and how they were — or were not — met. Also, questions will be taken from the floor.

At 10:50, a 50-minute "Department Fair" will allow visitors to talk in small groups or individually with members of most Juniata academic departments. In addition, four special tables will allow discussion with administrative personnel of financial aid, career planning, admissions and athletics.

A complimentary lunch in the Baker Refectory, the main college dining hall, will allow further discussion, and will precede the final programming of the day, 12:15 campus tours conducted by current students.

The latter will conduct residence halls, classrooms, laboratories and other campus facilities.

The December program, Mrs. Kreider notes, is Juniata's last for the current high school graduating class. A Visitor's Day for high school juniors is scheduled for the spring.

Public Administration Internship Begun

by Ruth Batik

Are you a junior or senior who is interested in government? Would you like an opportunity to work in the State House in Harrisburg for a term? Would you enjoy living "on your own?" If you answered yes to the above questions, you're probably a good candidate for a new internship being offered by Juniata in the spring term, beginning this year.

The internship was arranged by President Binder and Representative Sam Hayes, who is now majority leader in the Pennsylvania House. According to President Binder, this internship is significant because it will provide an opportunity for interested students to gain experience in public administration and to observe government operation on the state level. The student who is chosen for the internship position will be placed on the research staff of one of the standing committees of the General Assembly and will be assigned meaningful projects related to the activities of, and pending legislation before, the committee. The committee which the intern is assigned to (e.g., business, transportation, liquor control board, etc.) will be determined with due consideration of his/her particular interests.

As was previously mentioned, applicants must be of junior or senior standing. Grades will be considered in the selection process, but other factors will also be taken into account. Tom Baldino, Instructor in Political Science, emphasized that the nature of the internship position requires that the student exhibit qualities of responsibility, cooperation and maturity. Therefore, interviews with the selection committee will play an important part in the selection process itself.

This internship is a part of the public administration program, which mainly places students in local offices during the fall term. In this particular internship, a small stipend is provided to aid the student financially. Although the student is responsible for finding his/her own housing, Representative Hayes' office is quite willing to assist in the search if the intern so desires.

So if you feel that this would be a good experience and you would like to apply, contact Tom Baldino at ext. 651 or stop by his office in Good Hall, room 319. Don't put it off, however, for selection will probably begin in January and will be concluded before registration.

Alumni Funds Matched by Koppers Company

by Linda Sevick

A young alumni project called the "Five Times Fund," involving a challenge grant from the Koppers Company in Pittsburgh, is expected to gross $50,000 for Juniata in the next five years, according to Kathryn Miller of Public Relations. This is in contrast to an estimated $16,500 which would be expected without the proposal, a difference of $33,500.

Under this five year plan, the Koppers Company will match each year from 1980 to 1984 the graduating seniors' gifts of $10 each 100 percent, up to $3000. In the following four years, Koppers will match increases of $10 per year from each alumnus, including matching the graduating class' gifts of $10, 100 percent. In the graduating class of 1980, 52 percent pledged gifts, which is 32 percent over the national average for young alumni participation, according to Miller.

Alumni from the graduating classes of 1980 through 1984 are asked to pledge $10 the first year, $20 the second year, $30 the third year, and so on for five years, eventually totally $150 per person. Assuming a 50 percent alumni participation, $35,000 will be received from alumni gifts which will be matched by $15,000 from the Koppers Company.

One objective of this program is to increase the number of alumni who contribute to Juniata immediately after graduation. That objective was realized as the class of 1980 had 52 percent participation. In the previous five years, only 29.7 percent of young alumni contributed according to Miller.

Most colleges wait a number of years before asking alumni for gifts during which time they become out of touch. "Juniata does better with younger alumni than most schools," Miller said.

Other objectives of the program are to maintain these alumni as regular donors over a five year period, and encourage this alumni group to form a pattern of increased giving.

The "Five Times Fund" was established as part of the kick-off in 1980 for the Century II campaign, the first phase of which is the new sports complex. However, gifts can also be contributed to other phases such as scholarships and endowments, Miller said.

Miller emphasized that a "pledge" is in no way a final commitment; it merely means that an alumnus will try to the best of his or her ability to follow through. Miller also said that gifts from the class of 1980 have begun coming in, some of which are more than what was originally pledged.

Fire Hazards Make Dorm Life Dangerous

In the early morning hours of December 13, 1977, the festive anticipation of Christmas vacation and post-finals celebration at Providence College, Rhode Island, was abrubtly dashed. Fire suddenly raced through the fourth floor corridor of Aquinas Hall dormitory and in the heat and smoke-filled confusion ten young women died.

Though usually less catastrophic, dormitory fires are not uncommon. Life styles of college students are in some ways especially susceptible to fire hazards. Over-loading electrical circuits with heating appliances, typewriters and lamps and improper usage of guaged extension cords are common contributors.

As with most residential fires, the leading cause is the cigarette. Smoking materials most often light upholstery or bedding when the smoker falls asleep. Candles, a favorite atmospheric light source, commonly cause fires when they burn near papers or draperies.

But the completely innocent and well-intentioned activities of dorm residents are dangerous, too. "According to an investigation by the National Fire Protection Association, an independent, non-profit fire safety group, the cause of Providence College fire was a hair dryer being used in a closet," said Jack Linetty, Director of Housing.

"The dorm had conducted a contest for the best Christmas decorations, Mr. Linetty continued, so the walls were thickly covered with combustible materials — posters, wreaths, crepe paper and Christmas trees. Combustible decorations, especially Christmas trees, are very dangerous in campus residence. At Providence the fire just raced along these decorations."

Students are urged to keep these fire safety thoughts in mind:

* * * Remember that fire-fighting equipment, such as wall-mounted extinquishers, are there for everyone's protection. Also, pulling false alarms is a prank that can lead to loss and injury for many students as well as fire fighters.

* * * Extinquish smoking materials before going to sleep. Check the room after smokers leave.

* * * Use only one plug or electrical cord per socket. Run extension cords around the perimeter of the room, carpets and rugs. Use cords of appropriate guage.

* * * Become familiar with college buildings. Learn all means of escape.

CPR Training Offered

by Maureen Morrisey

Do you remember last term when your roommate got the results from that big chemistry test and had a heart attack and stopped breathing? You didn't know what to do, right? Thanks to Kevin Hurley and Dave O'Conner this term you will know exactly what to do.

They're offering Cardiopulminary Resuscitation-Basic Life Support instruction (CPR-BLS). It is a Red Cross course that will add up to nine to eleven hours of training. Included in the course will be: mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, the aid of choking persons, etc. It will cover adult, youth as well as infant victims. Both Dave and Kevin are qualified instructors, having taken several of these courses themselves.

A class is being offered December 13, 14, and 15 but it is filled. However, another class will be organized after Christmas break. Kevin and Dave encourage all students to take some sort of life saving course at some time. You'll be glad you did if an opportunity to use this skill should ever arise.

Tuition

As determined from the surveys, the significant reason for people not returning or considering not returning is inability to afford it or feeling that Juniata is not worth the increase. People on financial aid are particularly concerned that financial aid will not be enough to compensate for the increase.

According to Director of Financial aid Ken Grugel, there are several models under consideration but nothing definite has been decided by the college. He mentioned that the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG) has recently instituted a new parent loan program, similar to the national direct student loan program, which will offer low interest loans to parents as well as students. Grugel believes this will help those "middle income" people who are hard hit, according to surveys, by the increase.

"for the kind of education Juniata offers we're still the best buy on the market." Contrary to many survey comments he does not believe that Juniata is pricing itself out of the market. He explained that he does not believe that there will be a high rate of attrition but remarked that "no one has a crystal ball." He also believes that Juniata will not have to lower its "high academic standards" in order to recruit freshmen. Director of Admissions, Gale Kreider, says it is too early to tell how the tuition increase will effect admissions.

Dr. Tilden also remarked on the nature of the survey itself, with a note of caution. He stated that since it was a self-report inventory its "validity is suspect." Because, according to Tilden, the survey was of the nature seeming to place pressure on Juniata to change the increase, students answered in such a way as to benefit themselves.

Grades Discussed

by Eric Prutsman

Juniata's Student Government met for the first time of the second term on December 3rd. A major portion of the meeting was taken up by a discussion of the present plus-minus grading system. Mike Dennehy, student representative to the Curriculum Committee, explained why Juniata changed systems.

Student Government also approved the charters for three clubs: The Social Service Club; the Neuman Club and the J-Club.

An ad hoc committee is being formed to look into the issue of switching to semesters. Any student interested in being on this committee should contact Sue Telmanik, Box 175.

Office hours have been set up for the winter term. If anyone has any questions or needs a S.G. loan someone should be in the office between 1:00 and 3:00 p.m. every day. The next meeting will be Wed., Dec. 17th at 8:00 p.m. in the faculty lounge. Anyone wishing to attend should stop by at that time.

Rails Supported by Jubelirer

Senator Robert C. Jubelirer, R-30, called for "a commitment to provide a level of passenger rail service far superior to anything we currently have," in a speech given before a seminar on "Northeast Corridor Station Area Development." The seminar was conducted in Philadelphia by the Coalition of Northeastern Governors.

Development of high speed rail service and the resultant benefits will only be realized if citizen support for these efforts is earned by government, Jubelirer continued.

National News: New Feature of WKVR

by David Heisterkamp

Another new term has begun at Juniata College and with that, WKVR radio has started another new programming phase. If you haven't heard it over the airwaves yet, five minutes before the hour, Mutual Life Style Reports are broadcasted. Life Style Reports are 60 second intervals of feature stories currently making national news headlines.

WKVR felt that students at Juniata were in a vacuum when it came to knowing about national news. Now, with 50% of the funds coming from Center Board, Juniata students will be able to get the national news in headline form. WKVR will be seeking sponsorships from local businesses to help finance the news program.

The Life Style Reports, geared to the college-age audience, are featured at five minutes before the hour with an explanation from Brian Check, WKVR's Chief Engineer, calling the time slot "counter-programming." When other stations broadcast their news on the hour WKVR will be playing music.

Mark Cassel, WKVR's Traffic Manager, expresses that the Mutual News is strictly experimental. "We don't want it to be a turn-off," says Cassel. Hopefully, listeners will produce enough feedback, whether positive or negative, to let the WKVR board know how successful the new program is.

Other changes at WKVR include the new Disc Jockey schedule. Most of the old DJs are back with a few new names added to the list. Also, the Album for Lunch has been moved up into the 6 o'clock time slot. Called 12 Inch, the album hour Monday through Thursday will consist of new albums whereas the Friday through Sunday program will air older, classic albums. WKVR has also begun to start the day with mellow rock at noon, gradually getting more progressive into the evening and ending with the music specials from 9 to 12 o'clock.

Concerning the frequency search for WKVR, Brian Check announced that WKVR 91.7 will become WKVR 103.5 next fall, pending FCC approval. Check spent his Thanksgiving vacation at the FCC in Washington, D.C. looking for a new program frequency. The FCC had requested that all 10 watt stations move out of the bands between 88 and 92 FM.

and a Brass Ensemble. The event will be highlighted by a sing-a-long and passing of the light ceremony, led by Andy Murray.

Sign-ups for the dinner were held last Tuesday on a first come, first serve basis for table groups of four and eight. Dress for the occasion is semi-formal, and the dinner will be followed by the Madrigal Dance in Memorial Gymnasium.

For those not attending the Madrigal Dinner, the regular meal will be held starting at five o'clock in the Ballroom and will consist of the same menu being served at the Madrigal Dinner.

Comments Nancy Young, dinner committee chairperson, "We hope everyone enjoys the dinner, and we'd like to thank all those who helped us, particularly the Madrigal Dinner committee." Nancy pointed out that there was an excellent turnout of about 25 students that volunteered to help on the committee compared to about eight people last year.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

It was just a few years ago that an illiterate meat packer from South Philly captured the hearts and enthusiasm of a nation. For the two fabulous hours that was Rocky we believed. But in the real world, professional boxing is more like Requim for a Heavyweight than Sylvester's Stalone's famous script.

Let's face it, after this year, boxing is little more than a side show; and the actors are better paid than Marlon Brando.

What Ruburto Duran did in his fight with Sugar Ray Leonard was shocking, but the way the authorities reacted was disgraceful. Maybe Duran did have cramps, but if it came from eating the amount of food he described, it's no excuse. I can't believe that a professional athlete with as much experience as Duran would be that foolish.

Apparently the Boxing Commission believed him, because fining him $7,500.00 out of ten million is a joke. In fact it made the whole sport, not just the individual, look crooked. Of course, Ruburto was the humble looser; for at least two days he claimed he was retiring. I wonder if he will get fifteen million next time?

This isn't intended to be an attack on Ruburto Duran, after all he isn't the only showman in professional sports. His opponent put on an equally disheartening display. Instead of fighting with dignity, Leonard laid back, taunting and clowning ala Ali.

For the past ten years Mohamed Ali has been the most controversial figure in sports. His achievements are unparalleled in boxing history. It boggles the imagination to consider that a man with that much talent would resort to the humiliating stunts, and mindless boasts that have haunted his career, and tarnished the reputation of the sport.

Boxing isn't the only sport that has clowns, but it does provide the perfect stage for them. Baseball has Reggie Jackson, Football has "Hollywood Henderson;" every sport has at least one, but boxing seems to have more than it's share. If you don't agree, just look what "Too Tall Jones" did when he wanted a little publicity.

All Stars Named

Four Juniata College field hockey players — sophomore center halfback Barb Pearson, freshman wing Liz Abel, junior goalie Nanci Young and sophomore halfback Claire Warmerdam — have been named to the Coaches' All-Star Team in the Middle Atlantic Conference Southern Division.

Pearson, Abel, and Young were first-team selections, while Warmerdam received an honorable mention.

They had led Juniata to a 4-4-3 record this fall and a second-place finish in the MAC Southwest Section. Pearson had been a second-team pick in 1979, while the others received their first nods.

The Indians placed more first-team players than any other school in the highly competitive Southern Division. Their overall total tied the four placed by national semifinalist (Division III) Elizabethtown and national quarterfinalist F&M.

National champion Gettysburg had two players named to the squad.

"It's a special tribute to the abilities of our players that they were named to the all-star squard, considering that three of eight teams in the Southern Divison ended up in the top six nationally," says head coach Nancy Latimore. "Needless to say, I'm very optimistic about our chances next season, since all four performers will be back."

Lach Honored

Juniata College senior Steve Lach has been named to the ECAC Division III All-East Southern Football Team, the conference announced Thursday.

The 5-10, 165 pound Lach, a 1977 Altoona High School graduate, received honorable mention from the ECAC coaches as a defensive back. He played free safety for the 4-5 Indians this season, recording 35 tackles, two interceptions and four pass deflections and recovering three fumbles.

"I can't think of any young man who deserves this honor more," said Indian head coach Rob Ash. "Steve was the undisputed leader of our defense this season and he came up with the big play when we needed it.

"Many of Steve's attributes don't show up in the statistics, like being in exactly the right place at the right time and providing a calming influence in hectic situations, so I'm glad the Eastern coaches recognized his abilities."

Lach, an Indian co-captian this fall, was recently named first-team All-Middle Atlantic Conference Northern Division for the third consecutive year. He recorded 13 interceptions in his career, leading the Indians in that department the last two seasons.

Cagers Cold

by Paul Miller

The girl's basketball team started off with a couple cold days on the road.

They lost their opening game at Frostburg 58-47 while shooting 22% from the field.

Julie George led the team in scoring with 14 points, and Nancy Roach was also double in figures with 11. The leading rebounder was freshman Karen Campbell, with 12. Amy Brua led in assists with four.

They went on to lose at Shippensburg, a division II school 73-50. Again they were cold from the field shooting 26%. Julie George was again the high scorer with eleven points, and also the leading rebounder, with 14. She was followed closely in scoring by Terry Eckenrode who had 10, and in rebounding by Meg Stover who snagged thirteen. Amy Brua added five assists.

Terry Eckenrode is shooting an awesome 57% from the field, after two games. As a whole the team is shooting a very respectable 70% from the foul line.

Since the game depends heavily on making free throws this could be a very significant statistic as the season progresses. Field goal shooting always seems to be the last thing to come together, and once the squaws get their radar down, watch out MAC's.

The girls play their first home game on Wednesday, December 10, against St. Francis College. On the weekend of the 12-13 the girls will participate in the Bridgewater Tournament. They continue their pre-holiday schedule on Wednesday, December 17th in a home game against Susquehanna.

B-Ball Opens

by Doug Wallace

After 3 games this year the Juniata College Men's Basketball team, coached by Mat Frazier, is 1-2. The Indians are also 1-2 in the MAC Northern Division.

In the opening game of the year the Indians dropped a 60-48 decision to Lycoming at home. The leading scorers for the Cagers were Chet Sowel and Lee Hudzicki with 8 points each, while Bobby Bruzga led in rebounding with 13. The Indians shot a paltry .352 from the field for the game. In their next contest the tribe defeated Elizabethtown 53-49 before a home crowd. Chet Sowal again led the Indians in scoring with 16 markers, while Lou Chuba had 11 carmons.

The Indians traveled to FDU-Madison for their next game and lost 74-61. Once again Juniata was led in scoring by Chet Sowal who had 20 points, while freshman John Boller had 10 rebounds.

The Indians have a young squad with no seniors, 4 sophomores, 5 juniors, and 3 freshman. Junior Joe Chuba is captaining the Indians this year.

So far the tribe is averaging 54 points/game on .410 shooting, while their opponents are averaging 61 points/game.

The next game for the Indians is tonight at home against Gettysburg.

Wrestlers Look Strong

Hoping to match last year's record success, the 1980-81 Juniata College wrestling team opened its season Friday and Saturday, Dec. 5-6, competing in the Lebanon Valley Invitational Tournament and placing 3rd of 18 teams.

The Indians return seven starters from last winter's 11-4-1 outfit, which established a new school victory mark. The loss of three veteran performers, however, concerns head coach Bill Berrier.

"We lost All-American Joe Paskill, who was 70-15-3 in his career; Todd Roadman, who was 19-7 last season, and three-year starter Bruce Amig," says Berrier. "In addition, our schedule is our toughest in my 19 years here."

The Indians appear to have a balanced line-up with solid competitors at each weight. Senior Kevin Rhoad, who wrestled as a freshman but sat out the past two years, will start at 118. Senior Bob Gay, 19-7 last season, will go at 126, while senior Jim Kiely will compete at 134.

Senior Rob Funk, who finished 19-7 last year, placed second in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships, and competed in the NCAA Division III Nationals, will again go at 142. Berrier has yet to decide on the starter at 150, with freshman Dave Sloan and junior letterman Jim Klein battling for the spot.

Junior Tom Swavely gets the nod at 158 after lettering at 167-177 last year. Sophomore Chris Young will take the mat at 167, having lettered at one class higher, and classmates, Joel Beach and Rick Schuck are battling for the start at 177. Beach is a letterman.

The Tribe's strongest one-two punch comes in the top two weights. Sophomore 190-pounder Keith Sherbine was 6-5 last season, while heavyweight Dan Jendrzejewski was 11-9 a year ago. A late-season hand injury prevented Jendrzejewski from improving on his fourth-place finish in the 1978-79 MAC meet.

The field for the Lebanon Valley tournament has been enlarged to 22 teams this season. The Tribe finished eight in last year's 18-team field. Messiah, Allegheny and Swarthmore, the top three squads last season, are rated as favorites again.

716 Seats at Madrigal

by Linda Sevick

For the first time ever the Madrigal Dinner committee was able to accommodate seating for all students who chose to attend the event held last Friday, December 12 in Ellis Hall, according to committee co-chairperson Nancy Young.

This was accomplished by opening Tote up for seating which held from 80 to 88 people. The faculty lounge was also included which held 32. Those students who sat upstairs and in the lounge were able to eat dinner and be served by professors the same as those that were downstairs in the main dining hall, and could go downstairs afterwards to hear the choir and Andy Murray. There were also speakers throughout Ellis Hall so everyone could hear the dinner music.

"Everyone who wanted a table got one," table chairperson Anne Dubosky said. All but two groups on the waiting list, which contained approximately 96 names, were able to get tables.

Overall, most students were satisfied with the seating arrangements. "The only difference was that you couldn't see," Nancy Gonlin said, "It was nice that they didn't have to exclude anybody."

Kelly Benish, a sophomore that sat in Tote, said that she would rather have been downstairs, but was glad that she had the opportunity to go.

Suggestions on other ways of organizing the dinner were discussed by the committee, but the way it was done this year seemed "the only way to do it," according to Anne Dubosky. One suggestion was seniority, which "did not go over at all," Nancy Young said.

Using the gym was another suggestion offered, but the committee decided against that because of the set-up involved and because of conflict with the basketball team's practice.

Another suggestion, which will be discussed more in depth next year, was having the dinner on two separate nights, so everyone could have the chance to sit in the main dining area.

The major source of complaint was the ticket line which began about 10:45 a.m.

Students get 10% Discount At Stores

by Leslie Klinefelter

During the past two months the Executive Club, formerly the Student Business Organization, worked with the Retail Merchants Association to get a 10 percent discount for Juniata students at retail stores in Huntingdon.

Chairman Tim Blankenstein of the Executive Club and Tom Hanks of the Retail Merchants Association, with the help of their staffs, coordinated the discount program. The program is designed to create more business for the retailers by supplying incentive for the students to shop in Huntingdon.

The two committees also hoped that the increased business would enhance the relationship between Huntingdon and Juniata.

"Hopefully it will bring good will towards the college." explained Joyce Lacey, a member of the Executive Club. As the students contribute more to Huntingdon's business it is hoped "it will create an incentive for merchants downtown to get involved in the college." added Lacey.

The Retail Merchants Association hoped to benefit from the added business and the advertisement the Executive Club offered. The discount will be advertised on WKVR and a list of retailers participating will be circulated by flyer. To make the 10% discount possible the Executive Committee members contacted each business in Huntingdon individually and compiled a list of participants.

Those stores offering a discount are:
Coaches Corner, Denim Shop, Dollinger's Men's Shop, Kennedy's Green Houses, Miller's, Nier's Family Shoes, Original Italian Pizza, Pendleton Shop, Pizza Hut, Raystown Sports Center, Village Dress Shop, Wendy's and Westbrook Shoe Store.

To be eligible for the discount the Juniata student must present an I.D. at a store that offers a discount. There is a possibility of the Merchants Association designing a decal for the windows of discount stores.

Sherwood Struck by Arson

by Ruth Batik

Sherwood residents awoke to the ringing of a fire alarm again this weekend, and it wasn't a false alarm or a drill. It was real, and although no one was injured and relatively little structural damage was sustained, it left residents shaken and apprehensive.

At approximately 5:00 Sunday morning a student smelled smoke in his room and got Resident Director Bob Smith. They found the drapes in Catharsis Lounge ablaze, and while another student joined the effort to put out the flames, Smith notified Housing Director Jack Linetty and the proper authorities. The fire alarms were sounded and the building evacuated. The fire company arrived promptly and the blaze was extinguished, leaving approximately a 4' x 24' section of the Catharsis ceiling either burned or scorched and two windows cracked by the heat. Roughly one half hour later Jack Linetty was notified of another fire, this one in the small lounge on Sherwood's first floor. Damage to Catharsis Lounge was estimated to be $400. On Sunday, State Police Fire Marshal Trooper Thomas Jones conducted an initial examination, and an investigation is now underway. When contacted Monday, Trooper Jones stated that, while he is not at liberty to discuss details, "The fires were of an incendary nature, which is to say they were not accidental." No suspects have been named as of this writing.

Obviously, everyone is concerned with preventing the recurrence and consequences of such acts. Preventive measures include increased attention by Campus Security and student patrols, and the installation of smoke detectors, which was completed on Monday. If anyone has any information concerning these incidents, contact the authorities at once. All information will be dealt with confidentially.

Lounge Renovated

by Ron Renzini

Since the lounges in other dorms were fixed up with comfortable furniture and a television, the residents of Tussey-Terrace decided to take action to get the same for their lounge.

Two weeks ago, Tussey-Terrace dorm began to renovate its lounge. It started last spring term when the students of Tussey-Terrace approached the administration and asked that something be done for their lounge. During the summer the schools' budget was reviewed and the residence of Tussey-Terrace received $4,000 to renovate it.

During the first dorm meeting of the fall term, the students were asked their opinions on what should be done and how the money should be allocated,. A plan was made up by the students, and their work schedule to complete the lounge was approved by the college board.

Most of the labor in the lounge was done by the students. They put up the paneling and fitted the new rug. The ceiling was contracted to be lowered by an outside group, but the cost will be absorbed by the saving of heat and extra lighting.

A television was purchased to replace the one that did not work, new drapes were looked for in storage somewhere on campus, and the furniture was reupholstered by the Huntingdon Developmental Center. If there is any extra money from the budget, it will be considered for a game table.

The lounge turned out to be such a successful dorm project that other dorms are now looking into the possibilities of doing similar projects.

Editorial:

Arson a Serious Offense

Arson, the malicious burning of a building or property; is a felony, a crime punishable by more than a year in prison. If persons are injured or killed in a fire resulting from such malicious action, a charge of manslaughter, at the very least, could be levied. Setting fires is no game! A person setting fires in a building housing more than 150 people is not funny. Such person(s) are seriously endangering the lives of all those people, not to mention property damage suffered by the school and the individuals.

Many people find it necessary to entertain themselves on weekends by destroying property (breaking windows, damaging furniture and so on). But setting fires to curtains and placing wastepaper baskets under a Christmas tree and igniting it is not entertainment, it is insane!

Students should do all they can to ensure they are not the victims of a senseless fire. If someone is spotted playing with fire, no matter innocent it may seem, stop that person or report it to the Resident Assistants. Do not pull fire alarms just for the fun of it, it is not fun any more. Be aware of where fire extinguishers are and know how to use them. Lives may depend on it. Above all, if a fire alarm goes off respond promptly.

Students should be aware that the person caught performing these acts of arson will be prosecuted under the law and, if a student, will be promptly expelled "without due process" according to Dean Tilden. Anyone endangering the lives of so many individuals must be dealt with severely. Anyone considering such action, just for the fun of it, better think twice!

It is Christmas day. He wears a tan sweater with the initials JC printed on the left shoulder. He wears thick white slacks but no coat, for he is obviously in good health. A few light snowflakes rest on his brown beard, and he catches some on his tongue as he strolls along. It is his birthday, He is old but happy. His name is Jesus.

He sits under a tree in front of Founders Hall with his legs crossed. A large man approaches him, wearing a red and white sweater with the initials SC on the right shoulder. The man spreads out his empty burlap sack and lays down on it at Jesus's side.

"Jesus Christ, here." said the brown-bearded gentleman, introducing himself with a nod.

The white-bearded man blinked with momentary surprise, then said "Santa Claus here, or Saint Nick if you prefer."

"You know Santa," Jesus winked, "a lot of people claim that you don't exist."

"I've heard the same about you." Santa winked back with a comrade's understanding.

They both laughed, then were silent for a minute.

"Come here often?" Santa asked.

"Always." Jesus answered matter-of-factly. "But at certain times I don't feel welcome."

"Same here." said Santa. "I get so lonely sometimes. It's a shame people don't. . . ."

Jesus silenced him with a gentle wave of his hand, then said "Oh, let's not complain Santa. After all, it's Christmas."

The two were again silent for a minute, then Santa said carefully:

"Have all the students gone home for Christmas?"

"All but a few." Jesus said.

"And what about you?" Santa asked.

"I am at home." Jesus assured him.

Again they were silent for a minute, then Jesus carefully pushed a neatly wrapped package toward Santa. In it was a welcome mat. Santa humbly bowed his head and blessed Jesus in thanks.

"Merry Christmas." said Jesus Christ.

"Happy Birthday." said Santa Claus.

Q: Do you approve of the current system of selecting tables for the Madrigal Dinner?

Sue Dalrymple — No, but I can't think of a better alternative.

Bob McDonald — No, drawings should be held.

Chris Gaber — No, I do not approve. This system is unfair to those who wait, but do not get a table. However, I cannot come up with a better way.

Mindy Truesdale — It would be more fair if people got their tables together and then there was a drawing.

Wassail Tops Dinner Menu

The annual Madrigal Dinner was held last Friday night in Baker Refectory. It began at 6:00 p.m. with the Juniata Brass Ensemble playing while students found their seats. This took a little longer than usual as more tables had been set up this year in the alcoves and Tote.

Once the table had been filled, George Bojalad gave the traditional welcome. This was followed by grace, said by Andy Murray.

Doreen Yatko explained the tradition of wassail and gave the wassail toast. Everyone then sat down and started dinner. The main entre this year was prime rib of beef. As usual faculty and administration members served dinner and beverages.

During dinner songs were performed by various individuals and groups, including Kelly Walasik and the J.C. Four. While this created a nice atmosphere it was hard to have conversation at the table and still listen to the performers.

The full choir did not perform at the dinner this year due to their work on the Messiah. There was, however, a Madrigal Choir, composed of approximately twenty choir members. After dinner they sang several songs. Two students, Anita Mock and Craig Greusal, directed the choir.

Andy Murray came back with a sing-along Christmas Carole Medley. Everyone joined in to sing favorites like "Winter Wonderland," "What Child is This?" and "The Twelve Days of Christmas." The evening was then concluded with passing the light and the singing of Silent Night.

Kirsten Hauer highlights the Choral Union's performance of Handel's "Messiah", accompanied by the Nittany Valley Symphony. Kelly Walasik, David Molchany, Miguel Esteban, Scott Klinger and Mrs. Hirsch also made solo performances.

"Messiah" Packs Oller Hall

Once again the Christmas season has arrived, and with it the traditional spirit of goodwill and hope. This spirit prevailed Saturday evening in Oller Hall, as the Juniata College Choral Union and the Nittany Valley Symphony presented the Christmas portion of Handel's "Messiah".

Performing before a standing-room-only crowd, the Choral Union and Symphony exhibited the sensitivity and excellence which has come to be expected of Juniata productions. Under the direction of Professor Bruce Hirsch, both groups spent approximately 1½ months preparing for the performance. The Choral Union, composed of 80 students and 60 choir alumni, concentrated on the intricate choruses, and spent many hours achieving the technical and artistic levels of excellence necessary to express the "Messiah's" many facets. The Choral Union and the Symphony rehearsed separately, only coming together for a three hour rehearsal the afternoon of the performance. This is a tribute to the superior musicianship of everyone involved, for it required a good knowledge of the material, concentration, and dedication.

Professor Hirsch commented, "I was thrilled with the performance of the Choir and the Symphony — very pleased with the whole production." The audience stood during the entire final chorus and gave the performers a lengthy and enthusiastic round of applause.

Christmas Spirit Livens Campus Party

It's a rarity to see the majority of your fellow students all dressed up in three-piece suits and evening gowns but that's exactly what you would have seen if you went to South Dorm's Christmas party last Saturday night. Although the party was scheduled to begin at 10 o'clock, party goers were arriving as early as 9:20. The music started at about 9:45 and there was nothing anyone could do to stop the steady inflow of anxious Juniata students filled with both the Christmas and State Store spirit.

To the surprise of some, the Christmas party was B.Y.O.B. (Bring Your Own Booze). A system had been set up for those students who wished to have drinks at the party. They would deposit their bottle behind the bar with a colored letter identification sticker on it. When it came time to get a drink, all that had to be done was wait in line for about 15 minutes, produce a personal colored letter card and get the requested drink. Mixers were provided, along with tasty egg nog at the hors d'oeuvre table. The hors d'oeuvres included egg salad and tuna fish canapes, raw carrot and celery sticks with dip.

Music was provided by WKVR's own substitute DJ, Matt Finnegan. Finnegan's musical selections ranged from Christmas Carols to Punk Rock music. Finnegan had the party moving from it's beginning. Although it seemed hard enough to find a place to stand, most of those entertained found it quite easy to dance. Said one dancer, "The worst thing about dancing is holding on to your drink."

The party lasted well into the AM with most partiers finally leaving by four o'clock Sunday morning. After talking to several that attended South's Christmas party, it would be fair to say that it was a huge success. Said Dave Thornton, "It was great. I'd like to think Cloister's Champaign party warmed everyone up." Keven Brown, resident of the first floor South said the party was the party and those who were involved in organizing it should be congratulated, "Although, and I'm sure others will agree, I think the men of first South all made personal sacrifices," Brown said referring to the mess and vandalism that occurred to their bathroom and hallways.

Alcohol Education . . . Purpose of J.C. Spirit Fair

We've all had to deal with the problem of alcoholism at one time or another whether it was while hosting a party, helping an intoxicated friend or having too much to drink ourselves. To help counter these problems Juniata held a "Spirit Fair" on December 9, in Memorial Gymnasium. It was sponsored by the Committee on Alcohol Study and Education (CASE).

Many groups who deal in the treatment of alcoholism participated and distributed literature. Present were: Alcoholics Anonymous, Alanon, The Tri-County Drug and Alcohol Commission, and The Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board. Representatives from Huntingdon Police Department were also there demonstrating a breathalyzer test.

Robert Smith, fair coordinator, stated that the main purpose of the fair was for the "education of alcohol and to encourage its proper use." He also felt that it "had been helpful" and that "attendance was good." He was also pleased with the many inquiries students had concerning the use and abuse of alcohol. A representative from the Alcohol Control Board said that alcoholism was not a serious problem in Huntingdon due to the competence of the Huntingdon Police Department.

Students seemed to enjoy talking with the members of the organizations that were there. They also examined the beer bottle collection and tried to guess the brand names of beer at the beer tasting table. One of the most popular attractions was the "J.C. Spirit Bar," which was organized by Susan Twombly. Students were served such non-alcoholic beverages as: Topsy Tonic, Citrus Apple Car, Lili, and Citrus Collins. The main ingredients in these drinks is fruit juice and they proved to be quite tasty. It was also at the bar that students received pamphlets on drinking etiquette and recipes on other non-alcoholic beverages. Responsible party hosts would offer these drinks.

To encourage student attendance, Andrew Murray did a great deal of promotion. There were raffles and an auction. Doctor Mitchel helped auction off such things as a dinner with President Binder, a water skiing trip with Jack Linetty, and a private concert performed by Andy and Terry Murray.

The fair was a huge success thanks to the generous funding of the Tri-County Drug and Alcohol Commission, the many patrons, organizations, and volunteers who helped out.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

There was a woman I couldn't help noticing; she stood out in a room full of standouts. Maybe it was her smile, or the smoldering red hair, and evergreen eyes, but in all probability it was her coat. She wore a full length Leopard skin, or perhaps the skin of several Leopards.

I couldn't control the resentment, I never can. Every time I see someone wearing an "exotic" fur, or other animal garmet I feel sick. Not necessarily because an animal has been killed to make it, but because a wild, most often scarce creature was hunted or trapped for the sole purpose of procuring its hide. The people who provide these skins have no regard for game laws, or the animals they hunt, and they are the enemies of all true sportsmen.

When hunting or trapping becomes a business, it also becomes slaughter. I love to hunt, and consider trapping one of the most demanding of all outdoor sports, but I disdain slaughter.

History is an all too grim reminder of what happens when wild animal products become popular with the public. There was a time when every gentleman in the world wore a beaver hat, and every fashionable woman had a pair of alligator shoes to match per purse. Literally millions of pounds of Buffalo meat rotted while the hides were shipped back east to make robes.

In some cases the animal is able to escape extinction, and with proper management we might someday see the return of the buffalo and the beaver, but we might not be so lucky with the cheetah, leopard, and elephant. Already the vast herds of African game have been so reduced by our lust that many countries have entirely outlawed hunting of any sort.

In Japan exotic furs are the current fashion rage, afluent Japanese citizens will pay nearly any price for a "unique" fur garmet. It is simply absurd to believe that the African herds can withstand commercial hunting pressure. In some cases government officials are guilty of allowing the game laws to be violated. Corruption is rampant.

If it isn't already too late, we must act quickly, and decisively. Only through international cooperation can we hope to turn the tide. Like their infamous whalers, the Japanese refuse to stop the importation of endangered species pelts to their furriers.

The Japanese are far from the only guilty ones. Check out what the "Urban Cowboy" over there in the corner is wearing. If he has the funds, chances are those boots are made out of some exotic creatures hide, the skin of an Andaconda perhaps? Take a close look at his belt, is that, (or was it) a rattlesnake skin? Wow, aren't those feathers in his hat sharp, black with white tips, nice contrast. I wonder where he found an eagle?

Joe Chuba goes to the Hoop, as John Voler gets position against Gettysburg.

Men Split

This past week the Juniata College Men's Basketball team split a pair of home games. On Thursday night the Indians were soundly defeated by the Bullets of Gettysburg by a score of 82-61. The high scorer for the Indians was freshman forward Tim Nagle who netted 16 points. Captain Joe Chuba was high rebounder with 7.

On Saturday night it was a different story at Memorial Gym. The Indians trounced a school called Alvernia by a 97-82 score. This was the most points scored by the tribe in two years. Juniata shot an incredible 56% from the floor going 40 for 71. Tim Nagle again led in points with 21 on 9 of 17 shooting. There were also 4 other Indians in double figures: Dan Feruck had 17, Chet Sowal 14, Danny Frasier 11, and John Voler with 10. Scott Lehigh had an outstanding game leading the Indians with 8 boards, 5 assists, and 5 steals. In the Alvernia game the Indians had three freshman starting (Feruck, Voler, Nagle) along with Joe Chuba and Scott Lehigh.

As a team the Indians are shooting a respectable 46% from the field. They have also outrebounded their opponents by 8 rebounds a game. The leading scorer for the Indians over the first 5 games is Chet Sowal with a 13 point average. Joe Chuba is the top board man pulling down 3 caroms a game. The top shooter for Juniata is Daniel Feruck who is hitting at a 63% clip.

The next opponent for Juniata is Susquehanna, away.

Andre Tops

Freshman Carolyn Andre out of Montrose, Pa., has run away with top scoring honors for the 1980 Juniata College women's cross country team, according to final statistics.

The Indians, who finished 4-4 overall in their first year of varsity competition, were co-champions (with Delaware Valley) of the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Andre paced the Indians in all six of their outings, placing ninth in the MAC meet. She captured one overall first, leading all runners against York.

Andre holds the Tribe record for a home-team runner on Juniata's 3.25-mile course. Her 22:42 mark is 1:32 off the all-comers mark, set by Gettysburg's Sue Fetherolf this season.

"Carolyn did a super job for a freshman," says coach Bill Latimore. "She totally dedicates herself during the season and it certainly pays off. Carolyn gained invaluable experience this fall, and should be among the top runners in the conference next year."

Girls Win First

The women's basketball team raised their record to 3-2. They beat Saint Francis last Wednesday 65-44. They spent the weekend playing in the Bridgewater Tournament, where they took third place.

The Indians played very aggressive defense and had a lot of steals when they beat St. Francis. Nancy Roach was the high scorer with 11 points and Meg Stover was leading rebounder with 12. Judy Pepoy sparked the team with some great passes.

One of the highlights of the game was a play by Bev Supanick. She grabbed a rebound from a taller St. Francis player and tossed in a hook shot with the girl all over her. Kareem Abdul Jabbar would have been proud.

Over the weekend they lost in the first round of the Bridgewater Tournament to Bridgewater 74-57. Judy Pepoy had 21 points and Julie George had 17 rebounds. In the consolation game the Indians defeated Eastern Mennonite 76-59. Julie George led in scoring with 16 and Meg Stover led in rebounds with 12. Elizabethtown, an MAC rival won the tournament.

C.C. Finishes Strong

For the third consecutive year, senior Bill Shuler out of Dover, N.J., has run away with top scoring honors for the Juniata College men's cross county team.

With Shuler pacing his Indian teammates in five of their seven outings, Juniata finished 6-1, its best mark since 1962's identical record. The Tribe also moved up four places at the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships, finishing ninth in the 19-team field.

The Indians' lone loss was to powerful Gettysburg, 15-45, which was the only outing besides the MACs and Easterns in which Shuler didn't pace the Tribe. In addition, Shuler bettered his own mark for a home-team runner on Juniata's 5.65-mile course. His 31:17 is 1:24 off the all-comers mark set in 1977.

Two other Indians scored or displaced in every meet they ran in this fall. Sophomore Tom Wise (Delta, Kennard-Dale) paced the Indians twice, was second and third twice each, and fourth on another occasion.

Huntingdon sophomore Tom Hoffman paced the Indians in the MAC meet, placing 25th in a field of 125. Among his teammates Hoffman also was second, third, fourth and sixth once each, and fifth twice.

Other top performers for the Tribe were: freshman Tim Swartz (Hillside, N.J.), who was second and third twice each and sixth once; senior Roy Castor (Huntingdon Valley, Lower Moreland), who was fourth twice, fifth three times and seventh twice; and junior George Peterson (Cherry Hill, N.J., East), who was third once, fourth twice, fifth once and seventh on three occasions.

"The loss of Shuler and Castor will be difficult to overcome," admits coach Don Mitchell. "But we had consistently excellent results from a number of underclassmen, so I'm looking forward to next season already."

Student Laundry Service Opens

Small Business Management Class Starts Business

by Leslie Klinefelter

Laundry Unlimited, a new service operated by the Small Business Management class, is now available to Juniata students. The hated chore of doing laundry, usually postponed until the last pair of socks are unwearable, can now be postponed permanently. Laundry Unlimited will pick up and deliver laundry for 35 cents a pound.

The 400-level Small Business Management class was constructed by Professor Boling to provide practical experience by setting up and managing a small, short term business. The class is composed of thirteen business majors who are seniors. "The class is like an internship in business management," Brandon Gambee said.

Laundry Unlimited collects the laundry from the dorms and brings it ot their office in the old communications lab in Good Hall. Bucks Laundry picks it up from there, launders it, and delivers it back to Good Hall.

Initially the costs for running the business were high. The costs of a business phone, insurance, and office space produced a problem, but costs were cut by the use of Professor Boling's extension and the availability of free office space.

The members of the business each invested $10 to cover initial costs for supplies and expenses, such as gas for deliveries. Each member of the class has a facet of the business which they are responsible for. Stan Custer and Bill Wagner are the financial managers, responsible for the accounting side of the business. Larry Rosage is the president, elected by the members of the business. Brandon Gambee is in charge of public relations and arranges the business between Buck's Laundry and Laundry Unlimited; John Cook is process control manager; and Diana Hamilton is personnel manager. The personnel manager coordinates the pick up and delivery of the laundry, along with sorting and assigning people to answer the phone.

Before Christmas the class surveyed approximately 100 students to determine the demand for a laundry service and ran a trial run of the business for five days to check for flaws in the system that might occur. The business did about 160 pounds of laundry from friends of the members of the business. The first week of official business has not been profitable, but Laundry Unlimited expects business to pick up around the end of the second week.

Employment Hours Cut

By Lisa Fusco

During the month of September, employed students were working ten hours or less a week at a subminimum wage. In November, Ken Grugel, Director of Financial Aid, received a letter telling him that as of October 1, 1980, the Higher Education Amendment stated that no student should receive less than the minimum wage.

Juniata's budget for the 1980-81 school year was already established. In order to make this change of salary to the students some new arrangements had to be made. One way of handling this was to give students less work hours. "Students are working less hours and still receiving more money." Ken Grugel said.

To keep the budget working, and to lessen students work time, Ellis College Center and the Library now close earlier in the evenings. Even though these alterations have been made, Ken Grugel says that exceptions will be made during important study periods like finals week.

Sherwood Resident Director Bob Smith has resigned from that position, citing personal reasons. He has been replaced by Steve Hurlburt.

Backgammon players struggle through the final hours of the M.S. Marathon held January 9-10 in Memorial Gym.

Circle-K Sponsors M.S. Marathon

by Patty Rauschenberger

On January 9 and 10 Circle-K sponsored the M.S. Marathon. This year it started at 7:30 p.m. Friday and continued until 7:30 p.m. Saturday. The purpose of the marathon was to raise money for multiple sclerosis. This year approximately $2000 was raised.

Thanks to the tremendous effort by Chairman Becky Smiley, the marathon ran smoothly so that everyone had a good time. Out of the 69 participants, 63 went the full 24 hours. The 63 marathon survivors were made up of seven volleyball teams, two card-playing teams, two boardgame teams, and one dancing couple.

Keeping everyone awake for the 24 hours was DJ Michael Riling from Rilco Disco. Helping him were WKVR's DJs Mark Cassel, Brian Frey and Michael Grasso.

Volleyball players rested every hour and a half for 30 minutes, games people got 15 minutes, and dancers had 20 minutes every two hours. During these break times everyone headed for the food and drink table.

Donations of food like sandwiches, brownies, fruit, and cookies as well as fruit punch were provided by Kiwanis, the downtown churches, and McDonald's.

Although everyone slowed down considerably, the last hour was open to do what you wanted, so many joined the dancers. The marathon ended to Donna Summer's "The Last Dance."

Calendar May Change

by Tricia Abbott

A proposition calling for a change in the spring term final exam schedule is being reviewed by several representative committees on campus, according to Dr. Arnie Tilden, Dean of Students, and Susan Telmanik, representative to the Executive Committee of the faculty.

One suggestion up for review is that the Easter break be extended from Thursday the 23rd to Monday the 27th and that spring term final exams be extended to start on Monday or Tuesday (as opposed to Sunday) and end on Friday the 22nd of May, two days before graduation. According to Dean Tilden, this particular suggestion has received favorable reactions from the senior class officers and the Student Affairs Council (SAC) but was met with disfavor by representative faculty committees, in particular the Executive Committee, the Curriculum Committee and the President's special "Committee of Ten."

The reason for the proposal being initiated is twofold. The primary reason, according to Dean Tilden, is that the final schedule, as it stands, allows an "excessive amount of dead time" and seniors will tend to get "bored and destructive." In general, according to Sue Telmanik, the administration's concern is that there will be "too much partying between finals and graduation."

A secondary reason is that it will be economically more efficient because it will reduce the number of "feeding days" by extending the spring break.

Several problems with this proposal have been voiced. A major concern centers around the senior class and important decisions concerning graduation status of some seniors. With final exams ending on Friday faculty members will have to immediately compute grades, which must be ready for review at a faculty meeting Saturday to discuss graduation status of each senior. The problem is that seniors who may have failed a course which would prohibit them from graduation would not know until Sunday morning.

EDITORIAL:
New and Improved SG

The Juniatian has often been critical of Student Government. Two years ago there was a chronic problem of dorm senators not attending their meetings. From the vantage point of two additional years it seems that Student Government was at a low point then. Not only did the students not take Student Government seriously but the members of Student Government did not take themselves seriously.

When running for the office of S.G. president, Doug Klepfer said he would try to rebuild S.G. by making it more active and responsive to student needs. For having turned S.G. around and having achieved this objective Klepfer should be commended. At the opening of the meeting on December 3, Klepfer praised the Senate on its near perfect attendance record. Klepfer has made senators more aware of their responsibilities to both S.G. and the student body. He has also made the student body more aware of S.G.

Student Government is trying to keep from falling back into bad habits. There is a secret person who goes around and periodically checks up on the Senators. New S.G. minutes must be placed on the Bulletin boards in the dorms. Residents of a dorm are asked if their dorm senators are doing a good job. To make sure everyone can identify a S.G. senator their pictures have been placed above the mail boxes. S.G. is working harder to coordinate itself with Center Board. At every S.G. meeting the minutes of the last Center Board meeting are read. As with any organization, however, there are some flaws within the S.G.

Student Government has organized committees to make themselves more responsive and efficient. Probably the most important of these committees to students is the Student Concerns Committee. Student Concerns has started upon several projects including the S.G. course evaluations, campus lighting, the possibility of offering new meal plans, the tuition increase, and the problem with broken washers and dryers. While this sounds impressive, little has been done in these areas yet. Yes, S.G. course evaluations were handed out. Yes, a survey on the tuition increase was sent out. Yes the washers and dryers in most areas are being fixed more promptly. But the materials for the S.G. course evaluation were compiled last year. And the survey on tuition increased has been discarded as being useful or implementing a decrease in next year's tuition. The main accomplishment of this committee then is in getting washers and dryers repaired. What about lighting on campus — students have been told they would get better lighting months ago. And what about alternate meal plans? Was this rejected by Food Service? The Student Concerns Committee needs to make progress. It should work toward accomplishing more. Too often the Student Concerns Committee has nothing to report at S.G. meetings.

This does not signify that Student Government has not improved. It just seems that S.G. should make itself more aware of obtaining actual goals for the students. It is fine to have ideas but they should be carried through. S.G. has come a long way improving itself greatly. This makes it optimistic to hope that S.G. can keep improving itself and not stop just because they have come this far.

D.C. Internship: An Alternative

Would you like to spend the fall or spring months of your junior or senior year away from classes, working in Washington D.C.? Through Juniata's link with the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives, internships are available in a wide spectrum of placements including government, quasi-government and non-government positions.

The application process begins in early April for the fall term, mid-November for the spring. Following acceptance to the program, placements are made by WCLA using student preference. Requirements during the internship are as follows: for WCLA, weekly attendance to an intern chosen seminar related to his/her placement, a series of goal statements explaining the internship experience and occasional meetings with WCLA supervisors; for Juniata, a major research paper related to the internship, a daily log of D.C. activities and three meetings with Juniata's WCLA liason (Prof. Wm. Vocke).

Speaking with last fall's interns, Joan Gosnell (National Archives), Nancy Baxter (Social Security Administration) and Bill Fester (Department of Commerce), all commended the program. Said one, "It is a maturing experience as well as a learning opportunity. I think we all came away with a much better idea of what we want to do when we graduate from Juniata, and not necessarily working for the government. It forced us to reckon with the real world in a responsible manner and chased me at least, out of the ivory tower of naive college life." Advised Nancy Baxter to future interns, "Utilize all of the many opportunities which Washington offers."

Housing for the internship is set up by WCLA which rents space at an apartment house on 16th Street near Rock Creek Park. While not the best of neighborhoods, it is very accessible to the center city with its wide variety of things to see and do from the Smithsonian to the Kennedy Center.

The Washington internship program is not limited to political science students, but is open to all juniors and seniors of acceptable standing. So, if you are feeling trapped by academics, bogged down in classes without knowing what you really want to do, apply for the internship program and see Washington while getting credit for it.

He was a king. Dead, but I'd like to crown him.

When he was a kid he probably played with matches—or gas. But so did I. He has a dream, to build, to change, to order, to kill. I think of him when I see children set cats on fire, when students stare at soaps or smash glass, when a president takes as oath. If only I could have cornered him when he was 21 and . . . but no, I couldn't have influenced him, and he has influenced me. And you.

His name was Hitler. A face only a mother could love; a mouth that forced many to kiss. When his situation was nearly hopeless, he ordered his own bridges burnt so the enemy couldn't use them. He wanted to kill his own country so no one else could. He said, "those who remain after the battle are of little value, for the good have fallen." I won't honor him with a footnote, but I must grudgingly admit he did have great "value." He had influence. And still does.

He had one thing stronger than tyranny or power. He had disillusion. And so do I. Once I believed I had power to understand him, to explain him, to justify him. But I can't.

Unfortunately I can see him. I've seen him in Iran, in my neighbor, in my little brother. He's lectured to me, pushed me out of the way at the meat counter, sneered at me from the mirror, offended me, interested me. It's frightening. It's logical.

1984 isn't far away. I hope George Orwell was wrong.

Q: What is your opinion of the shortened library hours?

Joan Barrett — The shortened library hours are o.k. as long as they lengthen them for finals.

Patrick Madden — I'm going to have a hard time finishing my computer programs if the building is closed.

Peter Roetzel — If the budget is lacking and employees of the library are in question, I think that this is not an appropriate measure. We in this college community need more study time, certainly not a reduction. I think that the adjustment to satisfy the payroll should be made somewhere else.

Barbara Huber — Shortened library hours will hurt the students because many students depend on the library to have a quiet place to study. I really don't think this is fair without somehow getting students' approval. Now students will have to find somewhere else to study.

Mike Grasso — They don't bother me for studying but the access to the computer terminals will hurt.

"Profit is not our main concern; understanding how a small business works and operates is the main objective," Bill Wagner said. (The profit will probably be split among the investors but this has not been officially decided yet.)

Although the business provides practical experience for business majors, Brandon Gambee felt that the ten week term is too short for full development of the business which will actually only have six weeks of production. After this term ends the business will probably end, but there is the possibility of it becoming a club.

Issues at Luncheon

The World Issues Luncheon series is underway.

Sponsored by the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee, the luncheons are a forum for grappling with issues and problems of today's world.

The speakers, many of whom are Juniata faculty or staff, draw on their own expertise to provide an in-depth look at a pertinent topic. In the past, luncheon-goers have examined such issues as energy, women's rights, Iran, and Ghandi. Talks are followed up by a question-and-answer session.

Always, the goal of the luncheon series is to challenge the listeners and to give insight into complex issues.

Luncheons are held on successive Wednesdays (but watch for announcements) at noon in the Faculty Lounge of Ellis Hall. Bring your lunch tray. Everyone is welcome — faculty, students, staff, townspeople.

The speaker for Wednesday, Jan. 21, is Prof. Ronald Cherry, speaking on "Political Economy."

Sugarbush Outing Climaxes Ski Season

For all you ski bums and bunnies, winter is here and the Ski Club has once again put into motion its season of activities. Trips to Blue Knob, coordinated by Chairman Gus Creedon, started last week and will run every Tuesday until January 28. This is the third year that these trips have been offered at special rates to members.

Through the Ski Club, students can receive special rates for lift tickets, lessons and equipment rentals. There are no longer package deals being offered, but space is still available on the buses, and for a $3 fee, transportation is available to those who wish to ski at the regular prices.

A trip to Sugarbush, Vermont will also take place on the weekend of February 25 to 29. Those who plan to go are looking forward to the usually excellent conditions which are found there.

In the near future, the Ski Club will be holding a raffle, with the prize being the winner's choice of a pair of skis. That's right — the winner's choice. Additional activities include a party with the proceeds benefitting the club. So if you're into snow and good times, the Ski Club seems the place to be this winter.

What do you do with your hands at a party?

Many of us do what's simplest — reach for a drink.

We're nervous. Handling a drink, sipping, pausing, sipping again. It's something to do with our hands during the tense excitement of meeting strangers or in that anxious silence between conversations. So, we often wind up drinking more than we ever intended.

But you can choose practical ways to hold a drink and not have more than you want. Drink slowly. Nibble on snacks while drinking. Hold onto the first drink a little longer. At certain points, switch to soft drinks.

You have choices. Make them at the next party, instead of thinking about them the next morning. Otherwise, you're letting your hands tell you what to do.

Out & About

by Heather MacCrindle

Located on Route 26 South near the Huntingdon Motor Lodge is Kelly's Korner — just a bar you say? Well, you're wrong! For a very impressive night out and excellent food for three for under twenty dollars, Kelly's can't be beat. Adjacent to the well-known bar is a decent sized dining room done in a semi-western atmosphere. Rich paneled walls, table cloths, centerpieces, and full table settings vanquish the myth immediately that Kelly's is "just a bar." Although the relatively loud jukebox music from the bar area did put a damper on the meal, it was more than compensated for by the food.

Every Friday and Saturday nights Kelly's puts out a Salad Bar spread beyond belief. "You could be full even before you begin," was my one companion's opinion of the huge selection. Salad with all the fixings, a carrot, celery, and radish tray, pickled red beets, macaroni salad, potato salad, and cole slaw were offered as at most salad bars; but among the other items we gluttonously sampled was a very "excellent" fruit salad, bread pudding, "just as good as grandmother's," and fluffed tapioca and coconut pudding that melted in your mouth. All of us had never seen many of the salad bar items offered at any other restaurants we'd ever been to.

The service, friendly and relatively fast for the small staff employed, began with individual cheese spread and crackers for each, and a complementary glass of rose or white wine served with every meal. The bread was served in a huge bread basket — warm and homemade.

I chose the Kelley's House Special — an 8 oz. steak broiled in onions, lemon, and butter that really brought out the taste. It was done exactly as I requested, and I can honestly say that I've never tasted better. The shrimp expert along ordered Jumbo Shrimp and rated it "slightly above average," but thought it a lot of shrimp for the price. "Very above average" was the rating given to the Seafood Special, ordered by my other very hungry companion; who, however, could not even finish it all — the portion was so big. It's consistancy was like that of freshly baked fish, not the usual processed, breaded, and frozen fish patties served at most restaurants.

We did not even sample what seems to be Kelly's specialty — Italian Food. Everything from veal parmigiano, manicotti, and stuffed conchigline (shells) to pizza with various toppings was listed in the menu, all exceptionally reasonable in price. Hot sandwiches, chicken, ham and three more varieties of steak rounded out the selection.

The food was great, the prices even better, and the atmosphere a definite improvement over Baker Refectory. Open from 11 a.m. to 1 a.m. Friday night, until 12:30 a.m. Saturday nights; and until 12:00 a.m. Monday through Thursday, Kelly's Korner should be recommended to all. Thursday nights are also "Date & Steak Night": Two steaks for $12.50; Monday nights are "Ladies Nights": all drinks half price; and Wednesday features "Genny Cream Ale Night."

Cold Showers Freeze South

South Dorm is again experiencing problems with the showers. Last time it was lack of water pressure — this time it is lack of hot water. On these cold, winter mornings the residents do not appreciate freezing showers. Complaints and comments concerning the situation are voiced every morning in the washrooms. Mel Davis and Beth Topel both agreed, "We at least deserve hot water for the amount of tuition we are paying." They are also concerned for their health.

James Quinlan, Director of Physical Plant, explained that a "pop-off valve" needs to be replaced and the part has not yet come in. "We're working all day on it and other problems around campus." Jack Linetty, Director of Housing is also aware of the problem and said that the contractor responsible is "working on it."

However, residents have yet to see a repairman or any sign of improvement since returning from break. They will put up with the discomfort until something is done. Meanwhile, students are devoting their college education to discovering new ways to shorten showers.

Casino Night Set for 16th

by Nancy Gonlin

Casino gambling in Huntingdon? You bet! Las Vegas night is here. On Friday January 16th, the J Club will convert the gymnasium into a high class gambling casino. Live entertainment is on the agenda with room to dance or sit and sip. Refreshments will be served. On the mezzanine, various gambling games will be set up with students and profs working tables. Horseracing will take place in the racquetball courts. Everyone will receive a token amount of "money" upon entering the casino which will enable them to partake in the gambling activities. All the action starts at 9:30, so head for Las Vegas on Friday night.

Juniata Joins Fire Safety Effort

The Housing Office at Juniata College is participating in a national effort to remind college students that they are very susceptible to the dangers of fire. The project is being conducted by the Association of College and University Housing Officers (ACUHO) and the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA), a non-profit advocate for fire safety.

"As with most fires, campus fires occur because people aren't aware of a hazard," said Jack Linetty, Housing Director. "College students are no different than anyone else in that regard, but there are some hazards that the on-campus resident may be especially susceptible to."

"The fire causes we frequently encounter are: leaving cigarettes burning near upholstery or bedding; overloading electrical circuits with heating devices and appliances; using improperly gauged extension cords; using combustible decorations," Linetty said "and, Unfortunately, many fires are maliciously or mischievously set."

Over the course of the next few years ACUHO and NFPA will produce materials that will both identify and communicate fire safety practices that are most appropriate for the campus setting. Linetty will work with individual students, as well as student government and dorm representatives to alert them to the fires hazards most prevalent in their situations.

NFPA and ACUHO have been at work on the project for some time. NFPA has led the nation in advocating fire safety for more than 80 years, and recently has produced a curriculum for use in grade schools that identifies 25 key fire safety behaviors. The curriculum, which uses positive, affirming approaches to emphasize these behaviors to young children, has been evaluated as quite effective. The planned activities of ACUHO and NFPA will draw extensively on this expertise.

Mr. Stephen T. Miller, Housing Officer at Princeton University and Chairperson of the Fire and Life Safety Program Sub-Committee of ACUHO underscored the interest of this group in the project. "Students may not be aware of the fire dangers inherent in their lifestyles," he said. "Furthermore, since college students are in the prime of physical and mental powers they are very capable of getting out of the way should a fire occur."

"Many students thus think harm from fire can't happen to them," he continued. "That, of course, is just not true. All we need do to explode that myth is remember the 10 college students who were killed in a dormitory fire at Providence College, Rhode Island a couple of years ago."

The two groups urge college students to keep these fire safety thoughts in mind:

* * * Remember that fire-fighting equipment, such as wall-mounted extinguishers, are there for everyone's protection. Also, pulling false alarms is a prank that can lead to loss and injury for many students as well as fire fighters.

* * * Extinguish smoking materials before going to sleep. Check the room after smokers leave.

Commentary:

P.E. Classes a Necessary Part of the J.C. Experience

People come to Juniata College for a variety of reasons. Some come for the small classes, while others come because they believe the flexibility of a Program of Emphasis best suits their variety of interests. In any event, the students come for a well-rounded education that will develop their many potentials.

While Juniata College adequately provides intellectual education, it does little to further develop the athletic knowledge and abilities of its students. In this respect, the student is not receiving a well-rounded education because he is not developing important physical skills and an appreciation of exercise that could enhance his quality of life for years to come.

By not requiring Physical Education classes, the student has little opportunity to try a variety of new sports that may enable him to lead a more satisfying life while in school and after graduation. He is losing the chance to improve his self-image through mastery of certain physical skills. This is important because the student may not be achieving enough satisfaction through academics and, thus, have a poor self-image. Physical education classes offer an excellent opportunity to correct this situation by increasing self-esteem. The student is also losing an opportunity to meet people and make friends. By playing sports, the participants often reveal a great deal about themselves and their outlook on life. They display how they handle frustration, victory, and defeat. From this sharing of feelings and experiences arises a good opportunity to make friends.

Juniata College has never required physical education classes because the school considers its students adults: mentally and physically. The college believes its students have had enough exposure to sports and athletics to enable them to make a sound decision when deciding the priority to give athletics in their lives. The student is old enough to know if he can benefit from athletics. He should know what is best for him and through his own initiative seek it; if running four miles a day reduces stress, a favorable result, then the student should do it. If he enjoys drinking beer and watching the game with friends then he should do it.

Unfortunately, this philosophy assumes the necessary conditions that render it effectively exist. These conditions are based on the idea that all students have several common characteristics: they are mature adults, they are fully aware of the beneficial effects of exercising, they are uninhibited and, therefore, willing to try a variety of sports, and through their maturity, which disciplines them to behaving properly, they have enough initiative to start on an exercise program and enough tenaciousness to maintain it. If any one of these characteristics is lacking the student runs a greater chance of losing out on the benefits of athletics.

I feel this philosophy assumes too much, thus, leaving it ineffective. Most college students are not, despite what the administration says, mature adults. (One only has to experience the petty strifes that occur in the dorms and East Houses to realize this.) The incoming Freshman is only eighteen-years old and will do a lot of growing and developing before graduating at the age of twenty-two. After graduation, the ex-student continues growing, although now the growth is more emotional than physical. Many students are not aware of the importance and benefits of exercise due to poor instruction in high school gym and health classes. Given this sometimes lacking background can we really expect the student to have made an informed decision when he chooses not to participate in any athletics while in college? The student's choice is merely an extrapolation of his past.

I believe Juniata College has a great need for required physical education and health classes. Each student should be required to take two units of gym class and one unit of health. The health unit would cover: how the body works; and the effects of exercise, nutritution and proper diet, and activities and substances that are detrimental to good health; the effects of alcohol, marijuana, and other drugs, as well as cancer; and its various forms, causes, and possible prevention. The other two units would involve instruction and practice of different sports. Two sports would be covered per unit to give the student an exposure to more sports. Each sport covered would instruct the student on: 1)how to perform 2)what warm-up and warm-down exercises should be performed in conjunction with the sport 3)the most common source of injuries and how to prevent them. After the basics are covered the remaining class periods would be spent on practice.

Adoption of my proposal will derive many benefits for the students. The student will truly receive a well-rounded education because he has improved his mind in conjunction with his body. This will enable the student to now make mature, better-informed decisions concerning the importance of athletics in his life. He will now be aware of the benefits and dangers associated with different lifestyles. For example, if he chooses a sedentary lifestyle that includes a large consumption of fatty, cholesterol ladden foods, he will be aware that he is also choosing to be overweight and possibly run the risk of an early death.

One problem with the college's current philosophy on physical education is that it assumes all students are capable of doing what they want to do. It assumes, for example, if a student wants to learn to play golf badly enough he will do it, and that a fat person will lose weight if the desire is great enough. These assumptions are simply not true. Students, like many people, often lack the ambition to try new things. In fact, studying sometimes becomes a barrier or at least a crutch to avoid new experiences because the student will say "I can't do it, . . . because I have to study." Physical education classes will alleviate this by forcing physical activity into the same high priority level as academics, thus, forcing the student to participate in sports for at least two terms in his life.

Not only will this proposal enable the students to make more informed decisions concerning their future, but it will improve their quality of life while still in school. Physical activity makes one relaxed and feeling good. It creates positive attitudes, improves morale, and increases self-confidence. Students who are taking gym classes will exhibit these feelings. (It is a goal of this proposal to have students who have already completed these requirements still engaging in regular physical activity, and therefore still experiencing these same benefits). These improved feelings and attitudes should result in the student feeling better towards school. This means he will study harder and learn more. As a result, test scores are likely to improve, which tends to reinforce positive feelings towards school. This process, once set in motion, perpetuates itself. Thus the benefits are two-fold: the student feels better about himself, and enjoys and, therefore, learns more in school.

This proposal also benefits the college itself by increasing its prestige. Adoption of this proposal shows that the administration is open and responsive to new ideas; they are not content to leave policies in effect forever, but only when a specific need is being met. It also shows the college is constantly evaluating the worth of its old policies and programs, and when a new need arises, the college is ready to meet it.

Juniata College has enough space to make this proposal feasible, particularly with the new sports complex. At the present time, however, the college does not have a physical education department. One could be easily created by putting the intramural and varsity coaches together and possibly hiring another part-time instructor. This would produce enough staff to teach four separate gym classes with the average class of twenty-two students. The health classes could be taught by a biology professor and could be larger than the gym classes. The exact classes taught, for the physical education, would be determined by surveying the students interests and matching them with the abilities of the staff facilities available.

Some people may feel these changes are too costly. They will cost something. The only expenses associated with this program will be start-up costs, the part-time instructor's salary, and possibly some new equipment. But one has to look at the advantages before deciding. One benefit is that students will now be able to fully utilize the new eight million dollar sport complex because they will know how to play more sports. Thus, this is a small price to pay when one considers that the student will be using and enjoying the new sports complex to its fullest capacity.

People, who do not believe that one benefit of physical education is lower tension, may argue students today face no more pressure in school, or in life, than the student in the class of 1878 who made it through school and life without gym classes and health education. They, therefore, believe students today can too. Their argument is true, students could live without these classes, but the question is not if we can cope without gym classes, but how much can we benefit by them. These classes have the potential to enhance our lives forever. These classes could enable us to feel good about ourselves and get the confidence to take risks and reach new heights.

Another problem is that the weekend of commencements is also Alumni Reunion weekend where many alumni, as well as parents of graduating seniors, are housed in dorms on campus. Ending finals on Friday will not leave any time for regular students to depart from the dorm in time to accommodate the parents and alumni.

Other suggestions are to keep the Easter break the same and not start spring finals until Monday, which will extend them till Thursday, leaving only three days between finals and graduation.

Sociology Careers Topic of Conference

The 14th annual undergraduate careers conference of the District of Columbia Sociological Society will be held at Mount Saint Mary's College on Thursday, February 19, 1981, from 10:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. in the College Academic Center and the Cogan Student Union.

Over 400 students from colleges and universities in ten states are expected to attend the conference, which is held to assist upperclassmen making post-graduate decisions in the field of sociology.

Representatives from private industry, local government, federal government, specialized fields, and graduate schools will offer over 30 presentations to help students identify careers in sociology and to become aware of the qualifications needed. Two seminars on preparing a resume will also be held.

Richard R. Muller, assistant professor of sociology at Mount Saint Mary's, will serve as the conference coordinator. The president of the D.C. Sociological Society is Dr. Karen Peterson of American University.

All college students, regardless of whether they are affiliated with the D.C. Sociological Society, are invited to attend.

Summer Internships Open for Journalists

The Pennsylvania Legislative Correspondents' Association, an organization of state government reporters based in Harrisburg, will have a summer intern program again in 1981.

Two students, who currently are Sophomores, Juniors, or Seniors, will be picked for the 12-week program which begins in late Spring. The stipend for each student will be $1,440 for the summer. The program is open to students attending Pennsylvania colleges and to Pennsylvania residents who go to out-of-state schools.

We are interested only in persons who plan to make journalism a career and who have demonstrated a commitment to journalism in their course work and extracurricular activities.

The deadline for applications is MARCH 9. Entries postmarked after this date will not be accepted. The PLCA Scholarship Committee will pick the interns by MARCH 23 after personal interviews with the finalists. We also have one $500 scholarship available to finalists who can prove financial need. Please indicate on your application if you are interested in the scholarship.

Students who want to apply for the internships should provide the following information:

- A resume that includes information on all previous work experience.
- A copy of your latest transcript.
- Samples of your work (either clips or class assignments).
- Three references, preferably from journalism teachers or employers. Please include the telephone numbers of your references.
- 300 to 500 words on why you want this internship. It must be typed.

Students with questions about the program can contact Marcia Coyle at 717-787-4040 (days) or 717-652-8262 (nights). The applications should be sent to:

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

Rodney Dangerfield and the Philadelphia Eagles have spent the last twenty years making a living by getting no respect. Even when they win, people laugh at them; but for some reason they keep on performing.

Being a professional athlete, is really a lot like being a professional entertainer. You get attention by either making people happy, or by making them angry. The Eagles are truly the Lenny Bruce of professional football.

No matter how well they perform outsiders always seen to put them down. Critics quickly attribute victories to luck; and emphasize the opponents shortcomings, rather than the Eagles' accomplishments.

I didn't intend this column to be a defense of the Eagles, their accomplishments speak for themselves. There are several teams whose merits are equally, or more impressive than the Birds. Their opponents in the Sugar Bowl, Oakland, for example, or Mr. Knox's "rebuilding" Buffalo Bills, or the Chargers, and the Lions.

One of the announcers in Sundays game stated that it is the unexpected victories which are the sweetest. I can't speak for the players, but as a fan that seems especially true. When the Phillies stoled the World Series in 1980 it satisfied an eighty-five year hunger in the hearts of their fans.

To maintain a franchise in a city that never had a winner is a tribute to the fans in itself. After all professional sports is a business, and good businessmen don't stay around unless there is a profit to be made.

There is no mystery in why people flock to see the Steelers, or the Flyers, or UCLA. But why on earth would seventy thousand people consistently show up to see the Saints, or two million people risk their lives at Connie Mack Stadium to see if the Phils would win fifty games in 1968.

The pysche of a sports fan is one of the truly great mysteries left to man. What could possibly motivate someone to pay up to fifty dollars a ticket to suffer through sub zero temperatures and sub par beers, just to see his team get creamed?

It is easy to understand why the player does it; if you pay someone enough money they will virtually do anything, but what does the fan get out of it. Perhaps we are all masochists at heart. Maybe we need to be symbolically beaten to satisfy a latent desire. Could be, but I prefer to think the opposite, that it is the glimmer of hope, the hope that maybe someday, with enough work, and faith their team can be a winner.

After years of frustration, the Philadelphia fans faith has been rewarded, maybe next year it will be another city. Saint Louis hasn't had a winner in a while.

Grapplers Fall

by Mark Infanti

The Indian grapplers dropped their first match of the season to a tough Washington & Jefferson squad last Saturday.

Led by the traditionally strong middle and upper weights coach Berrier's wrestlers staged a dramatic comeback only to fall one point short, 22-21.

The Presidents jumped out to a damanding lead in the first two bouts when Ralph Cardella scored a major decision over Kevin Rhoads and Karl Thurman pinned Bob Gay at 126.

Jim Kiely got the Indians on the board with a hard fought 6-5 decision over the Presidents 134 pounder. Dave Sloan dropped one, then Rob Funk (7-2) tore into Eric Lundgren, and posted a 12-2 major decision.

Tom Swavely was decisioned and then the fireworks started. Unbeaten 167 pounder Chris Young scored a superior decision (17-5). Rick Schuck was pinned then 190 pounder Keith Sherbine turned in a tremendous effort to beat Division III All American Jesse Caravaggio 10-6.

Danny Jendrjewski pushed his record to 8-2 at Heavyweight with a pin over Tim Noble in 2:33 seconds.

Revenge

It's a shame that the squaw's last game was so close to Christmas Break because Julie George sure had good reason to write home. As Juniata defeated Susquehanna 76-63, Julie scored 30 points, which ties Juniata's single game scoring record that she set two years ago against Lycoming. She also had 20 rebounds which is no small feat either.

Meg Stover also had a great game, scoring 19 points and grabbing 13 rebounds. Judy Pepoy was in double figures with 14 points.

They have not played any games since Christmas but play archrival Scranton at home on Saturday. Last year the Indian's final record was 24-4. Scranton accounted for all four losses!

REVENGE!

In upcoming games for the squaws they will be facing Susquehanna away on Jan. 20. They will be going against Elizabethtown College on Jan. 22 at home. They will be hosting Frostburg State College on Jan. 24. They will travel to Pitt-Johnstown on the 27th of Jan., and they will play King's College on Jan. 29th at home.

Lions Maul Indians

by Doug Wallace

Last Saturday the Juniata College Men's basketball team traveled to Reading where they dropped a 42-34 decision to Albright. The Indians moved out to an 18-11 lead in the first half and went cold. They gave up 10 straight unanswered points to the Lions, and did not score themselves for 11 minutes. At the end of the first half Albright held a 25-22 lead, and the Indians were still in the game. In the second half Albright maintained their lead and went on to win the game 42-34, with the Indians only scoring 12 points in the second half. The leading scorer for the tribe was Dan "SS" Feruck who had 10 points on 50 of 8 shooting from the field, Feruck also led in assists with 3. Joe Chuba was the leading rebounder once again with 7. As a team Juniata shot 17 for 41 from the field for a percentage of .413. The next games for the Indians are tonight against Susquehanna, and Saturday afternoon versus Scranton.

In Junior Varsity action the Indians are 3-0 this year and are coming off a 85-56 win at Albright. The tribe was led in scoring by Lee Hudzicki who poured through 30 points, 2 of which came on a slam. Also scoring in double figures was Andy "Kangaroo Kid" Witmer who had 20 points to go along with his game high 15 rebounds. Paul Kardish had 10 points for the tribe, and so did Kevin Showvaker playing in his first game of the year. Jeff "Man Mountain" Ostrowski chipped in with 12 rebounds to make up for his highly uncharacteristic 1 for 15 shooting performance. The next game for the JV's is tonight against Susquehanna.

Spring Schedule Will Not Change

by Chris Corry

The proposed Spring term schedule change has been dropped. Dr. Binder met with a group of students on Wednesday January 14 at which time he informed them that the proposal had been decided against. The term schedule will remain the same except Spring finals will begin Monday morning, May 18, instead of Sunday night and will end Thursday morning instead of Wednesday night. It was originally suggested that finals be extended until Friday and that Easter break would continue until Monday, April 27.

The originally proposed change had upset several faculty members and they voiced their opinions at the faculty meeting Wednesday afternoon. Professors felt that the change would put finals too close to graduation for "scrupulous grading of senior finals." Even with finals as they are now, professors will only have 24 hours, until Friday morning, to grade the tests and decide final grades.

One of the reasons cited for the proposed change is the prevention of excessive partying and vandalism that would presumably occur if seniors were allowed three free days. One professor explained the administration's view by saying, "The implications seem to be that students couldn't fill that time without resorting to behavior dysfunctional to the institution." According to this same professor, students tend to live up to the expectations people have for them, but those free days could still include good times and memories. The planning of activities in which students could get together with faculty members and other students was suggested.

A concern was voiced that the faculty had no opportunity to help in the making of the schedule when it was first devised last year.

Student Concerns Survey Tallied

by David Heisterkamp

The Student Concerns Committee recently concluded a survey which sought to find students' opinions on the new plus-minus grading system. Installed last fall, professors arbitrarily use the system in giving their students grades although the plan requires all professors to use the plus-minus system.

The pluses and minuses added to grades help the graduate schools in determining the differences in their applicants; whether a student's average is basically high B's or low B's for instance.

The Student Concerns Committee attempted to find the opinion of the students and not to change the decision of the Board to use the system.

The survey asked five questions: Class; Major; Did you receive a plus or minus last term; Were you aware the system was operating; and, Are you in favor of the new grading system. The survey then left room for comments.

About 25 percent of the student body who received the survey answered. Out of those 302 students, 22 percent were in favor of the new grading system; 78 percent were against it. The freshman class was the class most in favor of the system with 37 percent while the sophomore class least liked the new system with 85 percent against the grading system. The senior and junior classes followed closely with 38 percent and 80 percent against, respectfully.

Natural science majors and humanity majors almost tied in their opinions of the system with 78 percent and 76 percent against. Social science majors disliked the system most with 83 percent against.

A little over two-thirds (68 percent) of the student body received a plus or minus during their first term. Of those who knew about the new grading system, only 50 percent of those who answered the survey knew they might receive pluses or minuses at the end of their term.

Some of the comments included: "The new grading system should be limited to incoming students." "I believe the system is fair. It provides a more specific grade to determine one's average by." "Some of the profs use it, others don't. It should be all or nothing to be fair." "There should be A-pluses." "A Juniata student with a 92 percent average or an A-minus, would lose out to a student from another school even if that student had a 90 percent (or A)." "I think it is hard enough for professors to determine between a B and C on Libraries Closing Concerns S.G.

by Leslie Klinefelter

The student government meeting on January 14 began with Diane Sonntag's announcement that the Speaker Committee is having Craig Karqes, a mentalist, come in February to do his show, "Magic of the Mind." The Speaker Committee is also discussing the possibility of getting a comedian for later in the term.

The libraries and Science Center's reduced hours were brought up by Dwayne Dilling who presented a list of courses that require the use of the Science Center after class. A total of 300 students have courses that entail work in the Science Center in connection with lab work, experiments and computers.

Dr. Eyman, Director of Libraries said that the library was closed due to the raise in the minimum wage and has nothing to do with the Science Center closing. It is already costing $6000 to keep the libraries open from now until the end of the school year at the new hours, he said. Members of S.G. suggested that the library be opened later in the morning so that it can be kept open later at night. There was a suggestion that students volunteer to sit at the desk in the library. There was difficulty concerning volunteers and how much they could be made responsible for.

Also concerning the Science Center, it was suggested that the security guards were assuming it was closed when the science library was closed. "I think something can be worked out," said Dean Tilden. Exactly why the Science Center is being closed early is not known yet.

Seminar Held For Women

by Nancy Gonlin

The Women's Business Seminar took place last week on Tuesday and Wednesday. Dr. Lakso served as advisor to the junior and senior female business majors who set up the program. Three professional women were invited to give insights on the business world. They dealt with problems as well as opportunities and skills.

All three women hold high ranking jobs. Ms. Beverly Coller is the current Vice President of Commercial Lending for Pennsylvania National Bank. She is a graduate of Muhlenberg College and Stonier Graduate School of Banking, Rutgers University. Ms. Coller joined PNB in 1964. Ms. Jane Klein serves as the Northeast Area Marketing Manager of Telemarketing, Computer Supplies Sales for International Business Machines (IBM). She has been with IBM for 15 years. Ms. Klein attended the Business College in Scranton. She is married and has three children. Mrs. Vivian Ross is currently the Assistant to the Senior Vice President

U.S. Accused of "Underhanded Manuevers"

The Iranian Government accused The United States of "underhanded manuevers" during the financial transactions involved in the hostage exchange scheduled to take place last Monday. The United States claimed that Iran failed to submit the papers needed to set up the Escrow account.

Chief hostage negotiator for Iran, Nabavi, said Monday that the hostage accord, signed only hours before his announcement, was in jeopardy already as a result of the financial "snags" encountered between the two nations.

A government board approved $400 million in additional loan guarantees for the Chrysler Corporation last Monday.

Editorial:

Cutting Hours Detrimental to Academics

With the premature closing of every suitable studying area on campus on weekends and weekdays alike, Juniata's administration has effectively and dramatically limited student study hours. Poor forecasting and insufficient planning of the budget are what appears to have resulted in damage to the primary goal for which the college exists: higher education.

Anyone residing in a college dorm can testify to the fact that constructive studying is impossible on weekdays, but especially on weekends. Parties, stereos, and people staggering about are simply not conducive to studying. Previously, when the excess of noise began on a weekend (or day), a person could safely escape to either of the libraries when a test, paper, computer program, etc., was due Monday and be assured of a quiet place to work. No more. The libraries close at 5:00 p.m. on weekends. Ellis, the second best choice, is definitely not a prime studying area due to tvs and pinball machines. And it also closes early now. There is simply nowhere on campus to go.

The Juniatian feels that it is unfair for individuals paying in excess of $6000 a year to attend this school, for the purpose of gaining a higher education, to suffer because of an unexpected change in the budget. The administration should have been aware of the coming increase in minimum wage. If this was impossible, adjustments in some other area should have been made. Any area would be less detrimental to the primary goal of a college.

Even if there is only one person who needs a quiet place to study, this place should be available. Some colleges, such as Amherst College in Massachusetts, keep their facilities open 24 hours a day for students. A suitable place to do work is, or should be, a top priority of any school. People do not go to college just to party.

Suggestions such as having student volunteers work at the libraries on weekends were offered at last week's Student Government meeting. Granted, suggestions as to a solution to the unexpected minimum wage increase would be hard to come by, and some area would probably be injured in any case. But not at the expense of the students. They are not here for a 9 to 5 education.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

TWO CAMPUS PHRASES:
Phrase Number 1: "how are you?"

The most common campus question. Traditional response is "fine, how are you?" Usually the person asking the question, unless he is a doctor, does not really care how you are. Most who return the traditional response don't really care either. Thus a circle of meaningless questions and responses spreads around campus, with no one really caring how anyone else is.
Suggestion: instead of "how are you?" just say "hi," or when someone asks "how are you?" say "terrible and I wish you'd leave me alone." They probably won't ask you again.

Phrase Number 2: "sup."

A watered down version of "how are you." Is rumored to have originated from the words "what is up." It is not meant to be answered. Should always be said in the dullest monotone possible. When using this phrase properly one should not look at the other person — the common practice is to look at someone, then stare at the ground, then say "sup." The head can also be bobbed slightly when this is said, but never enough to show interest.
Suggestion: if someone says "sup" to you either look into the sky with a puzzled face, say "none of your business," or tell them what is up — talk all about your family, your grades, your dog, etc. However, any of these might fail, because often one who says "sup" does not realize he spoke at all, and he may be confused at your talking to him. Perhaps the most appropriate technique is to ignore the "sup" completely, since it doesn't mean anything anyhow.

TWO CAMPUS PERSONALITIES:
Personality Number 1: "jock"

Not an athletic supporter. Refers to those who usually say "sup." Often sweaty, the "jock" is easy to point out because he wears sweatsuits to classes. Can be male or female, Shuffles halfheartedly rather than walks, and never looks in a hurry outside of the gym. Burps loudly at meals and leaves food tray on table. Brags at parties about weightlifting, and has intellectual discussions on weekly weight loss. Occasionally slips out of parties to toss cookies, assuring himself that the weight loss will do him good. Suggestion: don't be a jock.

Personality Number 2: "space-cadet"

Hates jocks. Knows that pot is better for his head than cigarettes. Often red eyed from either too much smoking or not enough sleep. Eats green brownies. Falls asleep in chairs. Drops tray in the cafeteria. Accidentally puts ketchup on salad. Drinks 10 cups of coffee at dinner. Says "bummed out" to refer to any non-high

Letter to the Editor

"The Juniatian" welcomes letters from our readers. Letters should not exceed 350 words and must be received the Monday before the date of publication. All letters are subject to consideration by "The Juniatian" for space reasons. Anonymous letters will not be considered for publication.

Dear Editor,

In response to the recent editorial regarding the Student Concerns Committee of Student Government, we feel clarifications must be made because it lacked sufficient facts.

As for the Course and Professor Evaluation, over 30 hours this year were spent in binding all 750 copies. In addition we initiated the idea of the Dorm Senators distributing the course evaluations to students in order to familiarize them with their senators. The issue concerning the lighting on campus is still being worked on. There will be no meal plans because they are not feasible for two major reasons. With students paying for only 15 meals per week, the cafeteria could not properly plan for meals. There would be a lot more waste involved and because of this waste costs would rise for everyone. It remains simpler and less expensive in the long run to keep the situation as it now stands.

Students Speak

Q —Do you think that the United States should pay the money to get the hostages back?

Dan Jendrzejewski — Condidering how long the hostages have been in Iran and all the other attempts to get out that failed, I think that they should give them the money to get the hostages back.

Jeff Ellena — Yes, indeed. If we took the Shah's wealth that was rightfully Iran's, why shouldn't we give it back for what is rightfully ours, meaning the hostages.

Jeanne McLaughlin — No!! If the U.S. pays money in this case, it will leave the door wide open for other groups to use similar tactics. It would show that the U.S. is very weak.

Puff Bennardo — I would like to see the hostages get home safely, however, I don't think a ransom should be paid. If it is paid, it could set off a chain of kidnapping by other militant countries.

Casino Night Worth a Million

by Ron Renzini

Last Friday, January sixteenth, the Juniata J club held Casino Night at Memorial Gym. For the cover charge of $2.00 each person received $20,000 in play money, heard the Juniata Jazz band orchestra and were treated to refreshments.

The games that were available to test luck and skill involved cards, dice, and spinning wheels. The major attraction of the games revolved around the blackjack tables. No less than five dealers were working most of the night. The dice games included higher/lower than 7, beat the roll of the dealer, and a game which involved placing your money on the right number which was going to be rolled.

The casino also held gerbil races for those who felt they were riding a hot streak that night. Every ten minutes five gerbils would race to the finish line to the cheers and cries of those who had made wagers just minutes before the race. Odds were set five minutes before the race and any amount from $1,000-on could bring back a return from even money to 20-1 depending on who won. The track conditions were set at unpredictable most of the night.

This three hour adventure into the world of chance ended with an auctioning of prizes. Sealed boxes were put in front of the main platform with no one knowing the contents. A box was then randomly selected and auctioned off by Freshman auctioner Henry Coyne. Amoung the prizes were an album, a t-shirt, and even a racquetball racket. For those who had just been deserted by Lady Luck, their millions bought them such prizes as a shoestring and a jockstrap.

Everyone involved had a good time with the "house" reporting that they enjoyed success. Now that everyone is still feeling a little Lady Luck, next years Casino Night is already being anticipated. This especially holds true for those who want to hold on to her, and those who hope to find the Lady who eluded them that particular night.

An enjoyable performance of "Les Sylphides" was given by the Central Pennsylvania Youth Ballet to a full auditorium on Sunday Afternoon.

Youth Ballet Wins Fans at Matinee

by Maureen Morrisey

About all I know about ballet is that Mikhail Baryshnikov is a fox, despite that, this novice ballet enthusiast thoroughly enjoyed The Central Pennsylvania Youth Ballet's performance in Oller Auditorium on January 18.

The company performed three dances. The first was "Les Sylphides," which is the first abstract ballet to recreate the Romantic style in the 20th Century. It was followed by "The Skaters." This is a delightful dance in which the dancers simulate ice skaters of days past. It even includes a few slips and spills on the ice that I thought were well done. The colorful costumes were beautiful.

The last performance was "Con Amore." I liked this one the most because it had a story to tell that wasn't too deep or earth shattering to follow. It was also humorous and light. In the first of the three episodes a thief invades an Amazon camp headed by women. The women capture him but fall in love with him as he is very handsome. They force him to dance with the captain by threatening him with their weapons.

In the next scene, a lovely lady says "goodbye" to her husband for the day. Soon after, her three secret lovers arrive simultaneously. To complicate matters further, the husband returns and finds them all. In the very last episode Cupid arrives and all problems of the previous scenes are magically solved with a shot of her bow. Yes, love is the answer to everything.

The Central Pennsylvania Youth Ballet was started by its present artistic director, Marcia Dale Weary. Company alumni have danced with, or become company members with: The New York City Ballet, The Stuttgart Ballet, Russia's Kirov and Bolshoi Ballets, The American Ballet Theatre and The Pennsylvania Ballet among many others. Students also are admitted to or receive scholarships to other prestigious groups.

I was very much impressed with the Youth Ballet. I thought that they were excellent and I am pleasently surprised that I enjoyed a ballet that much. I hope to attend more. The Youth Ballet's other popular performances include: "Giselle", "Coppelia," "Sleeping Beauty", "Swan Lake", and "The Nutcracker".

Talent on Display

by Nancy Gonlin

On Saturday, January 24th, Campus Women's Organization is sponsoring an art show, exhibiting campus female talent. The display will be in the upstairs lobby of Ellis, across from the information desk. Participants include Heidi Ross, Laura Nissel, Lucy Breslin, Sandy Schultz, Eugenia Siemens, Hatti Braun, Sheri Matheson, Lynanne Schaeffer, Suzie Brown, Linda Geiss, Dee Ann Nokovich, Gail Loughin, and Susan Lytle. The art exhibit consists of a variety of talents. Calligraphy, glass blowing, ceramics, and photography are just some of the items to be seen. Nancy Bauer is featured from 1 — 2 o'clock. She will demonstrate macrame techniques. A kick-off reception for the artists, faculty, and CWO members will be held Friday the 23rd. The artwork will be on exhibit from 10 a.m. through 7 p.m. on Saturday.

Trends Discussed

by Ruth Batik

On Tuesday evening, Jan. 13, Professor Mark Blitz presented this year's G. Graybill Diehm Lecture, which he entitled "Varieties of Conservatism." Having received his PhD in political science from Harvard, Professor Blitz is currently teaching at the University of Pennsylvania.

Although the lecture dealt specifically with the varieties of conservatism, Professor Blitz also discussed the current upswing of conservative trends. He attributes this revival to the increasing political strength of the South and West, traditional bastions of conservatism; to the fact that political parties are now much more closely identified with poles of political thought (e.g., Republican — Conservative, Democrat — Liberal); and particularly, to society's reaction to the fast-paced social and cultural changes of the past two decades. Today, after the country has tasted the anit-establishment apple, after we've tried liberal and radical trends, and after most people have forgotten the impact of the McCarthy era, Americans want strength and stability; hence, a growing interest in conservatism.

Since conservatism is rising to new levels of attention growth, it's different strains are more easily recognized. Professor Blitz described six strong varieties which are evident. One of the strong varieties is the business-oriented one, which examines issues from a pro-corporate capitalism standpoint. Another variety, the historical-traditional, was described as traditional, family-centered, and "looking out for American interests." Other varieties ranged from the moral majority, very traditional, to the Libertarian, which almost ap-

Income Tax Shortcuts Suggested

"Which form should I use to file my Federal income tax return this year?" According to Thomas L. Davis, District Director of Internal Revenue for Western Pennsylvania, this is one of the questions most frequently asked IRS during each filing season.

There are two basic forms, the Form 1040 and the simpler Form 1040A. "Depending upon your personal situation and needs," says Davis, "one of them is best designed for you."

The following information can help taxpayers decide which form best fits their personal situation.

You may be able to use a form 1040A if you earned $20,000 or less ($40,000 or less if married and filing a joint return) during 1980, and all of your income is from wages, salaries, tips or unemployment compensation. In addition, you cannot have earned more than $400 in interest or $400 in dividends unless you are filing only to get a refund of the earned income credit. In that case interest or dividends can exceed $400. You may also be able to use a Form 1040A if you do not claim credits other than the earned income credit or the political contributions credit.

Filing the Form 1040A has benefits for you because it's short, easy to complete, saves time, and makes errors less likely.

However, you must file the regular Form 1040 if you itemize deductions or if you claim more exemptions than are shown in the tax table for your filing status. You also need to file the Form 1040 if your spouse files a separate return and itemizes deductions, unless your spouse lives apart from you for the whole year and you have a dependent child, in which case you may be able to use the Form 1040A.

You should file a Form 1040 if you decide to income average or if

Adventures Abroad Available

Vacationers in 1981 will be looking for bargains in travel as well as new and unique adventures in near and far away places.

The "1981 Highroad to Adventure," a new brochure available free from American Youth Hostels, describes a wide variety of creative, low-cost organized trips and tours through Europe, North America, and for the first-time, Africa and China.

These organized trips and travel programs are open to vacationers of all ages and range in length from five to 44 days. Not only are the trips inexpensive but they offer adventure, not just in what the traveler sees, but in the experience of living.

The opportunities are endless, from bus trips through Aztec ruins in the Mexican highlands and remnants of the Mayan culture in the Yucatan to bicycle tours of the California coastline and raft and canoe trips down powerful rivers of the mid-Atlantic states.

Of special interest this year are several unique new trips, including an exotic bicycle tour of China. There will be nine, sixteen-day trips, co-sponsored with the Metropolitan New York Council of AYH, through Southern China and Hong Kong. This is an opportunity to see a part of the world that has only recently been opened to the West.

AYH is also offering a "Kenya Safari," a three-week 4-wheel drive trek through the high plains of Kenya where wildlife abounds and African culture is still exciting and unspoiled.

The American Youth Hostel's travel program also offers less exotic but no less interesting and exciting trips such as the one in conjunction with The Infinite Odyssey, a 28-day youth group bicycling and sailing program in Maine. The trip includes a short stay on a farm in Maine learning basics in ecological camping, first aid, bike repair and carpentry. Bicycle touring along the Maine coast and sailing trips on the 35-foot open sailing vessel, Tancook Whaler add to the adventure.

For the cycling enthusiast who would like to tour Europe there are 11 trips listed in "Highroad to

An unexpected heavy turnout at the blood drive leaves Circle K Club elated and Second Floor South richer by $25.

188 Pints of Blood Donated by Campus

On Wednesday, January 14, the Johnstown Unit of the American Red Cross Bloodmobile was here at Juniata. They were stationed in Ellis Ballroom from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Giving blood is actually very simple and practically painless. It only takes from 5-10 minutes for the actual donation of one pint, that you don't need. Before they take your donation, though, they make sure you'll be able to give blood safely and that the recipient will get acceptable blood.

To insure this, a group of qualified nurses go through some simple tests. First, they take your temperature and ask you about your medical history. Then, they take a drop of blood to test for iron deficiency. After they test your blood (it takes only seconds), they check your blood pressure. If everything is okay, you are ready to give blood.

As soon as you're finished donating, they take you to the snackbar and give you a sandwich and something to drink to rebuild your energy.

Very few people have any negative side effects from giving blood. It only takes a few hours for the liquid part of your blood to be replaced, and it only takes two weeks for your blood cells to be replaced. However, the Red Cross recommends that everyone wait two months between donations.

The Red Cross people were pleasantly surprised when they received 188 pints of blood, almost twice their goal of 100, from JC students and faculty members. One of the reasons for the fantastic turnout is believed to be a $25 award to the floor with the most donors. The winner of the award was second floor South.

The Bloodmobile will be returning some time in March and they are hopeful that they will have another great turnout.

you wish to claim certain tax credits such as the child credit, residential energy credit, credit for the elderly, investment credit, foreign tax credit, or work incentive credit. Filing a Form 1040 is also required if you are a qualifying widow or widower with a dependent child or if you made estimated tax payments.

If you are claimed as a dependent by your parents and had interest, dividends, or other unearned income of $1,000 or more, and you had earned income of less than $2,300 if single, or less than $1,700 if married filing a separate return, you must file a Form 1040.

Additional guidelines for use of the Forms 1040 and 1040A can be found in the instructions in your 1980 Federal Income Tax Forms package. Taxpayers can also call the IRS toll-free telephone number. In Pittsburgh call 281-0112; in all other areas call 800-242-0250.

proaches liberalism in certain aspects.

Professor Blitz noted that with the public spotlight now focused on conservatism, the differences in views held by different types of conservatives are likely to create friction. However, conservatism has maintained its strength in the past, and it will be interesting to see how it does so in the future.

"Illusion of Knowing" Tested at Wisconsin

Madison, Wis. —(I.P.) — Three psychologists at the University of Wisconsin are exploring not only our inability to recall information that we were certain we understood totally but how we can avoid being trapped by it. "As teachers we see it all the time," said Arthur Glenberg who, along with psychologists Alex Cherry Wilkinson and William Epstein, have tagged the phenomenon "the illusion of knowing."

Drawing on two basic experiments, the researchers have been able to induce the illusion and measure it with introductory psychology students serving as subjects.

In the first test, subjects were asked to rate how well they understood a straightforward text containing several paragraphs of information, one which contained a fairly blatant contradiction of the material that ran before it.

Around 90 percent of the participants failed to catch the contradiction yet indicated that they fully comprehended the material. Totally understanding the text would have been impossible without catching the contradiction.

The researchers were so surprised at the high percentage of those who fell victim to the illusion of knowing, that they ran the experiment again. The participants were under no time pressure. Nevertheless, between 80 and 90 percent believed they completely understood the material, when, in fact, they did not.

essay tests for example, then to make it even tougher by adding pluses and minuses." "The students' GPA's are going to suffer in the end."

Dave Thornton, tallier of the results, said, "I was glad to see enough people cared about their opinions to let us know. Since 302 students answered the survey, I believe that we can consider the findings valid of the campus opinion."

for Pennsylvania Power & Light Company. Mrs. Ross has been with PP&L since 1972. She holds degrees from Syracuse University and Lehigh University. Mrs. Ross is married and has two children.

The Seminar began with an introduction on Tuesday evening entitled "Careers — Challenges & Goals." Each woman introduced herself and gave a brief account of career experiences and achievements. The reception held afterwards was sponsored by Campus Women's Organization. The Seminar continued on Wednesday morning at 9:00 a.m. Long range goals, interview techniques, and the working mother were just a few of the topics discussed. A question and answer session followed.

Overall, the seminar was a success. It gave business students an opportunity for direct interaction with the working world. Male and female students who attended came to a better understanding of the problems and rewards of the business world.

The Seminar, in part, was made possible through a grant by the Household Finance Corporation.

Former Sec. of Defense to Speak at P.S.U.

"National Security and the International Crisis: the World in the 1980s" is the title of an address to be given at The Pennslyvania State University by Harold Brown, his first after leaving his post as secretary of defense. He will speak Tuesday, Jan. 27, at 8:15 p.m. in Eisenhower Auditorium on the campus of The Pennsylvania State University.

University President John W. Oswald will introduce Dr. Brown, whose appearance is being sponsored by the Office of International Student Affairs and Colloquy.

Prior to becoming President Jimmy Carter's secretary of defense in 1977, Brown held a succession of important posts in government and education.

A physicist who earned his doctorate at Columbia University, Brown was named director of the E.O. Lawrence Radiation Laboratory at Livermore, Calif., in 1960 after serving as a research scientist and in various intermediate management positions there.

He was a member of the Polaris Steering Committee from 1956 to 1968, a member of the Air Force Scientific Advisory Board from 1956 to 1961, and a consultant to and then member of the President's Science Advisory Committee from 1958 to 1961. He was senior advisor at the Conference on Discontinuance of Nuclear Tests in 1958-59 and a delegate to the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks in Helsinki, Vienna and Geneva, beginning in 1969.

In 1961, Dr. Brown became Director of Defense Research and Engineering, a post he held until 1965 when he was named Secretary of the Air Force. After four years in the position, he returned to California to serve for eight years as president of the California Institute of Technology.

He has received honorary degrees (D Eng., LL.D., and Sc.D) from Stevens Institute of Technology, Long Island University, Gettysburg College, Occidental College, the University of California, the University of Rochester, Brown University, the University of the Pacific, and the University of South Carolina.

Results of the plus/minus grading system survey showed 25% were against it. The results are to be reviewed by Dr. Rockwell.

A survey is being planned concerning trimester and semesters. Dean Tilden stated that students like what they are used to and that the issues in these two term plans should be presented in the survey in order to get past student bias.

The Resident Life Committee announced its intention of improvements around campus to be ratified by the president. Such improvements entail East House lounges, showers, hall improvements, lighting on campus, Hess apartments, and Brass name plates for each dorm. Marking the dorms is especially important for identification by fire and ambulance crews.

The problem of non-college people using the gym was reported. There is supposed to be someone there to check for student IDs and if non-college students are in the gym they should be reported to Bill Berrier or security. For emergencies Cloister's phone or the nurses' phone in Lesher can be used.

SG's next meeting is January 28. Items for the agenda must be put on the board by Monday. A reminder that all students talk to their senator about anything they want brought up at SG meetings.

Women Fall Short

by Paul Miller

The Indians gave it their best shot on Saturday but came up short against Scranton, 59-47. There was a large crowd on hand and the game was more exciting than the score indicates. At halftime the score was 32-29. Both teams shot well in the first half. Then, despite Juniata's tough defense, the very talented Scranton Royals continued to shoot well. The Indians hit a cold streak and the ball just wouldn't go in the hoop.

Nancy Roach and Julie George led in scoring with 10 and 15 points. Aimee Brua had a great game, hitting long jump shots and having 7 steals. Meg Stover had 7 rebounds and Judy Pepoy played well but had a bad shooting day.

Michelle Wingryn came into the game and displayed instant offense, hitting some clutch jumpers. Marie Glendenning played well and chipped in with 6 rebounds. Ellen Fasnacht came into the game with four minutes and sparked a Juniata rally, with 2 steals and 4 points. that brought the Indians within 4 points. They were unable to get any closer and the game ended with the score 59-47 but the Indians gave it their best shot.

Indians Tumble Royals

by Doug Wallace

Last Saturday in Memorial Gym the Juniata Indians defeated the Nationally ranked Scranton Royals by a score of 51-49. The teams traded baskets until the score was 8-8, and then Scranton broke out on top and went into halftime with a 31-26 lead. The Indians came out in the second half and played aggressive hustling basketball to pull even with the Royals. Then when Dan "Ice" Feruck hit 2 foul shots to put the Tribe up by 4 with 4 seconds left the Indians had pulled off their biggest upset in a long time. Andy "Allah" Witmer was the Tribes top scorer with 14 markers, while Dan Feruck chipped in with 12. Joe Chuba was the team's high rebounder for the fifth game in a row as he ripped down 13 boards. Juniata outscored the Royals from the floor 46-34 as they held Scranton to 18 points in the second half.

In other games from last week the Indians lost to Lebanon Valley by a score of 62-53, and they lost to Susquehanna 88-76. In the Lebanon Valley game the big difference came at the foul line as the Indians shot only 5 foul shots, while the Flying Dutchmen went to the line 25 times. Juniata outscored them from the field 48-44. Individually for the Indians freshman Dan Feruck poured in 18 points, while junior captain Joe Chuba and Feruck each had 5 rebounds.

The Indians lost to the Susquehanna Crusaders for the second time this year, in a home game, by a 88-76 score. Once again the story was at the foul line as the Indians made 8-15 for 53%, while the Crusaders made 32-41 for 78%. Juniata outscored them from the field 68-56, and the Tribe also outrebounded them by a 42-30 count. Joe Chuba was outstanding this game as he led with 16 points and 14 rebounds. Tom Deep also had a good game with 16 points.

After 10 games this year the Indians record is 3-7, with a 2-5 record in division play. Some of the individual leaders for the Indians are Tim Nagle, Joe Chuba, and Dan Feruck in scoring with 9.1, 9.0, and 8.0 averages respectively. The leading rebounder is Joe Chuba at 9.1 a game, with John Voler grabbing 5 caroms a game. The leading field goal shooter is "Ice" Feruck who is shooting a blistering 56% from the floor. Our leading four shooter is Andy Witmer who is hitting 82% from the line. The next game for the Indians is Saturday evening versus Delaware Valley.

Shep Speaks

by Mark Infanti

It's been said that history repeats itself, and it has happened yet again. There has been another sports betting scandal. According to an AP story released Saturday several former Boston College players have been implicated in a Justice Department probe of score fixing in College Basketball.

Very few knowledgeable sports fans would be surprised if the allegations are true. Most of us know that over the past hundred years there have been countless betting scandals. Sports betting is a big business, and where there is money there is a chance for corruption.

Contrary to popular belief, most of the athletes involved are not marginal players; they are in fact the stars. Common sense tells us that they almost have to be to have a significant effect on the outcome of the game.

In the past twenty years several prominent professional players have also been connected with betting scandals. Mickey Lolich in baseball, and Alex Karas and Paul Horning in football have all been accused of betting on games they played in (although no official proof of guilt was ever found). Some of the fixes have been far more spectacular, and easily proved, like the famous World Series scandals of the early 1900's.

In 1951 perhaps the most famous of all betting scandals involving college sports took place. Thirty-one college basketball players, from seven different colleges were implicated. These included a pair of All-Americans from Kentucky, Alex Groza and Ralph Beard, who were caught manipulating the point spread of games they played in.

For me it is difficult to imagine why people with so much going for them would risk it all just for some extra cash. Perhaps the answer can be found in Adam Smiths' theory of economics which traces all our actions to self-interest. In effect Greed.

Greed on the part of the Bookie, or the Better who fixes the game or fight so he can make a killing by cheating his counterpart. Chance is not a very reliable oddsmaker, so by spreading a little money around they are improving the odds.

Don't misunderstand me, I don't blame the fixer, he's only doing what any smart business man would do; putting the odds in his favor. The real greed is on the part of the player who can be bought. He is the one who desregards integrity, sells out his teammates and school, and disgraces his name. So now, it is exactly thirty years since the last major scandal to rock college basketball. I guess in this case the old cliche does hold true.

Wrestlers Victorious

by Mark Infanti

Coach Bill Berrier's Juniata wrestling team rebounded from last week's disheartening loss by capturing two of their three matches last Saturday.

The Indian Grapplers easily handled host Gettsyburg 30-10, and MAC rival Lebanon Valley 37-15, but dropped one to powerful Upsula.

Two Indians managed a pair of victories each. Rob Funk upped his record to 9-2 with a hardfought 7-6 win over Upsula's John Butto, and a 7-2 trouncing of Ralph Meade of Gettsyburg. Joel Beach picked up a pair of wins with a pin over Gene Reilly of Gettysburg at 1:11 and a forfeit.

One sixty-seven pounder Chris Young remained undefeated by winning one and tying a second. Young is the only remaining wrestler on the squad with no losses.

Bob Gay also regained winning form with a pair of victories before dropping his final match of the afternoon. The upper weights once again proved to be tough, with Dan Jendrzejewski picking up a pair of victories, and Keith Sherbine scoring a pin in his match against Scott Wagner of Lebanon Valley.

Overall the tribe upped their record to a respectable 5-2-1 mark, and seem to be on their way to another outstanding season, with several impressive individual efforts.

The wrestlers will host a quadrangular meet on Saturday with Kings, Messiah, and IUP traveling to Memorial Gym.

Mentalist to Visit Campus

S.G. Forms New Committee

by Leslie Klinefelter

Juniata students will soon get the opportunity to see Craig Karges, (a reknown mentalist) a comedian, and speakers on subjects ranging from science fiction to the CIA. All this is made possible by the Speaker Committee, a new organization formed by the Student Government and the Center Board committee.

The S.G. and Center Board committee formed the Speaker Committee to pool their budgets they each have for speakers and to unite their manpower. "In the past the two committees have been disjointed, this year we are much more unified," said Diane Sonntag, the committee chairperson.

The committee consists of fourteen people. The chairperson Diane Sonntag was appointed by Doug Klepfer, president of S.G. Rus Cameron, chairperson of the Center Board, was also appointed due to his enthusiastic participation.

The Speaker Committee is planning Craig Karges, a mentalist, for February 14 at 9:00 p.m. Craig Karges' act entails visual mystification, mind reading, levitation and, as a finale for his act, he risks his fee by placing the check in an envelope and mixing it with four identical envelopes. Members of the audience choose four of the five envelopes and burn them, after they are reduced to ashes Karges then opens the last envelope which somehow has his check in it.

Karges offers $1000 payable to any charity if anyone can prove he is using confederates in the audience to accomplish his amazing feats.

The Speaker Committee recently surveyed the students on what comedian they would like to see. The comedians considered by the committee were: Gary Trudeau of the Doonesbury comic strip, Henny Youngman, Mark Russel, a political comedian, Jimmy Walker from the situation comedy Good Times, David Frye a frequent guest host of The Tonight Show, Steve Landesberg from Barney Miller, and Erma Bombeck.

Gary Trudeau and Erma Bombeck are not doing college tours. Steve Landesberg was the most popular among students.

Also considered for later on this year are: Issac Asimov, a famous science fiction writer, former CIA agent Colby and U.N. ambassador Donald McHenry.

The Speaker Committee is hoping to arrange for a speaker each month next year, but this depends on the budget they are allotted.

Because of the new hours, many students on campus have been worried about the science building closing early along with the library on weekends.

There is no longer a need to worry because there was a mix-up one weekend which resulted in the building closing early. Now everything is settled and the Science Center will keep its regular hours, despite the earlier closing hours of the library.

L.U. Adds New Service

by Patty Rauschenberger

"Business is picking up," said Laundry Unlimited's president, Larry Rosage. The new laundry service provides pick-up, cleaning, and delivery of campus residents' clothes.

The business has been in operation for five weeks, and word is slowly getting around that students no longer have to do their laundry. A Small Business Management class project, aimed at teaching the student how a small business operates, has been very successful. Although class members had reservations at the start, Laundry Unlimited is now in full swing.

Like any business, serving the customer is the prime objective. One new service which has been added to the business is dry cleaning. The dry cleaning service seems to be popular because many Robert Howden, former press secretary to U.S. Representative Andrew Maguire, has recently been named assistant director of Public Relations.

New Member Joins P.R. Staff

by Alyson Pfister

Robert Howden has recently been named Juniata's assistant director of Public Relations, to replace Thomas Ressler.

Howden previously worked in Washington, D.C. as press secretary to U.S. Representative Andrew Maguire. He graduated from Lycoming College and was a graduate student of journalism at Penn State.

Howden will be responsible for the media relations program and will serve as advisor to the Juniatian. Howden, was the editor of the Lycoming College newspaper during his senior year there.

Howden came to Juniata because he enjoys an academic environment and saw the position here as an opportunity to get away from the hectic pace of Washington. He is looking forward to becoming involved in campus activities and getting to know the students, faculty, and administration. He also wants to become involved in civic activities in Huntingdon. Howden believes that since Juniata and Lycoming are so much alike, he will have no problem adjusting.

WKVR Needs New Board

by David Heisterkamp

At the beginning of programming on December 13, the master control board at WKVR shorted out and the station went off the air. Immediately, the WKVR engineering staff went to work and constructed a temporary set-up in the production room from where the morning DJ could broadcast.

A former Juniata College student had built the board at a cost of about $300. Said Brian Check, WKVR Chief Engineer, "We tried to save some money by making our own board. Unfortunately, the board couldn't handle the day-to-day abuse of normal operations."

The DJs are now broadcasting from the regular broadcast room, but with the equipment from the production room. "The temporary set-up is doing fine," said Check, "but it can't go on forever,"

The WKVR managerial staff is in the market for a new control board. "We've already got the board we want picked out," said Check, "Money is being sought from Student Government to help us finance the project." The new board will cost about $2,600.

A new control board will noticeably improve the quality of sound and will enable DJs to produce more professional

News Briefs

Hostage Delay Caused by Opposition

The three-hour delay in the departure of the hostages from Iran last Tuesday was caused by opposition to their release, not to humiliate former President Carter, according to Warren Christopher, the former deputy Secretary of State.

Christopher, former Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, and Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Charles Percy said they expect the U.S. to fulfill its obligations under the release agreement. A still-secret third part will be disclosed this week, Christopher said.

In Other News . . .

The Islamic Summit Conference meeting in Mecca is dispatching Algeria to Tehran to attempt to settle the Iraq-Iran War, much as they helped free the American hostages.

Jim Plunkett led the Oakland Raiders to a Super Bowl victory last Sunday over the Philadelphia Eagles 27-10. Plunkett was named MVP, throwing three touchdown passes with a total of 261 yards.

Editorial

"And that's the way it is . . ."

And that's the way it is . . .

The hostages are free; no longer will we hear Walter say "And that's the way it is, day 4-- of the hostage crisis. . . ." No longer will the press be criticized for exploiting the situation. Everyone thought too big a deal was made. Now we know that it was a big deal, bigger than we ever imagined. And those 52 Americans deserve the respect of each and every citizen of this country.

How would you have felt as a hostage? Being held by a foreign government? But why? Because they hated their former leader? So why hold Americans hostage? Because the American government supported that leader? The American government supports many leaders, and like the Shah not all are humanitarian individuals. Can we expect other countries to hold Americans hostage because we supported their former leaders? What should the government do if this situation occurs again? Did Carter act wrong while dealing with Iran?

Carter did what he had to do and all he could to get the hostages released. He realized the danger of military action and used political measures to pressure Iran to release the hostages. Iran was a wealthy nation; it could and did hold out a long time. Military action would not only have risked the lives of the hostages but others as well. A major problem Carter had was an extreme lack of ally support. Where are the countries to whom America so often lends assistance when the favor needs returning?

The rescue mission was inexcusable. But let us place blame where blame belongs. What kind of military does America have if three out of eight helicopters fail before they even reach their destination? What would happen to this country if someone waged an aggressive act against it? So much of the Federal money is poured into defense with the results being inadequate and faulty equipment that who knows how bad things really are?

But this week all thoughts are turned to the hostages and their families. Each person should remember those 52 Americans who apparently suffered so much simply because they were at the wrong place at the wrong time. They are not heroes because they acted for no self motivating reason. But they are worthy American patriots and despite their treatment for simply being Americans they maintained a sense of loyalty to the country for which they suffered so long. For this reason they deserve to be called patriotic Americans and worthy of the gala affair thrown by President Regan which was quoted to be "worthy of any head of state."

Things used to be differerent
Unfortunately
Once I wrote a poem that was really romantic and from the heart and flowing and all that nonsense at the crack of dusk all alone with the sun and the sean and the sentiment and the alliteration and too many ands
I wrote for hours and then lay back Cramped.

So I waited
At least two days
And tried again to write a poem but this time while on the phone or in class or during a party without emotion or mystery or impulse or metaphor or meaning or any ors
But all the same
It was all the same.

And so I pen it in

Impulsively
Hoping I won't lose the thread I spin the spool that never ends
Except in words
Or magic.

Registration Blues

Dear Editor:

So once again the entire Juniata student body had barely survived the grueling process of choosing and obtaining their courses. This process includes many steps. First, you sit down by yourself with a copy of the Proposed Schedule of Offerings, stolen from Founders (There are about a dozen copies on campus) and decide on two courses you definitely want, maybe two others that sound interesting, and two more courses you would take if you had to. Secondly, you make appointments with your advisors, once you remember who they are. (But that's okay, cause they don't know who you are either). Thirdly, you attend your appointment. Unfortunately, you were early and he was late (or visa versa) and no one

Kvasir to Hold Contest

The literary magazine on campus, called KVASIR, is having a contest. Winners will be chosen from the five categories normally represented in the magazine, Poetry, Short Story, Essay, Drawing, and Photograph.

The magazine is working with a very tight budget so there will be no cash prizes awarded, but the winners will receive recognition in three ways; the winners' names will be printed in the Spring issue of the magazine, all winning pieces will be printed with a special note designating that the piece won the contest, and all winners will receive a congratulatory letter signed by the editors and Prof. Ralph Church.

The contest will be judged by the KVASIR staff members. If you want to enter, send your work to Box 916 or hand deliver to Jan Carr, Jill Windwer, Joe Schall, or Prof. Ralph Church. The final date for submissions is March 11. Decisions will be made by March 25. If you want to submit material for the magazine but do not want to enter the contest please attach a note to your work.

If you are submitting drawings and photographs be careful to check your work for contrast. The only work that will be considered for the contest is work with clear black and white definition. Only these drawings and photographs will reproduce clearly in the magazine. If you have any questions regarding contrast contact Jan Carr at 643-4727 or Jill Windwer at 643-0913.

Remember the final date for entries is March 11.

Three typical Juniata "punks" bop to the B-52's in Catharsis Lounge.

Sherwood Goes Punk

Donning their very best safety pins and pogo-ing shoes, Punks trekked into Sherwood last Saturday night. They all wanted to be ready for the Punk Party that was held in Catharsis Lounge.

The speakers blared the ultimate in Punk/New-Wave music: The Ramones, Joe Jackson, The Clash, Jiltin John, The Cars, The Romantics, The Vapors, Elvis Costello, The Sex Pistols, Pat Benatar, and The Police among many other favorites.

The Beach Boys, Frank Sinatra and even a cut off of Saturday Night Fever were played at different speeds so everyone could mock them which proved to be quite humorous. This was all a welcome change for the dull, commercial, top-forty stuff usually heard at other parties.

A strobe light added to the mood of delightful weirdness as groups of ecstatic people bopped about from 9:00 pm to 2:00 am. Pins, ripped tee-shirts, pumps, multicolored hair, ties, strange make-up and laughter were the norm. The party was an obvious success and other dorms should take note of this. The concensus from that evening is: Go punk or don't go at all!

Art Through The Ages In Shoemaker

by Heather MacCrindle

Printmaking, described as the "more immediate medium to an artist" will cause not only an immediate reaction in viewers of From Durer to Picasso, but may also stimulate your historical and artistic interests to bring about a life-long appreciation for this little known art form.

Exhibited in Shoemaker Gallery for the entire month of February, this collection of prints encompasses five centuries of European masters. It shows not only the evolution of printmaking itself but also reflects the development of distinctive artistic styles and their reverberations throughout Europe.

The exhibition begins on the north side of the east wing of the gallery with prints as early as the sixteenth century and should be followed in historical order to its conclusion with representatives of modern and contemporary art. At least an hour should be set aside to fully appreciate such a fine exhibit donated by anonymous Pennsylvania collectors. Printed pamphlets and cards typed up for each print with the layman in mind offer insights to the artists themselves, the topics of the prints, and the various printmaking techniques.

Today, printmaking is used mainly by artists as yet another medium in which they can express themselves. Up until this time, however, prints served another purpose, as the means to reproduce great works of art that people otherwise would have no way of seeing. This duel function of prints is also represented in the exhibit; some being artistic expressions in themselves, others commissioned for reproduction by great masters such as Rembrandt, Rubens and Durer.

"Illustrations of the culture at that time period," the first wall shows the evolution of the Renaissance style through the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries with its religious and mythological emphasis. Used mainly to depict a story then, Durer's The Martyrdom of St. Catherine is a typical example. This print also shows the oldest printmaking technique — woodblock. Famous mainly for their paintings, Rosa and Testa are shown here too in etchings, often considered points of departure for their paintings which they worked on for years. Etchings are done on a wax coated metal plate which is then placed in an acid bath to more clearly define the lines for ink prints.

The second wall contrasts these first prints with the seventeenth century emphasis on the common man, depicted by Dutch and Flemish artists. Rembrandt's Adoration of the Shepherds particularly stands out as a simplified treatment of the religious theme. Engravings, in which the design is cut into metal plates and the ink remaining in these depressions actually prints the image, of the masters Rubens and Jordaens also are exhibited.

Diana at Rest After the Hunt is included as an example of another printmaking technique — mezzotint. This technique involves just the reverse of engraving or etching, for the artist starts on a dark background and scrapes the

Political Economy Micro & Macro Views

Walking on campus, one often hears that there is never anything to do on weekdays to break up the studying schedule. Well, the next time someone tells you that, tell them of one event that happens every Wednesday at 12:00 in the Faculty Lounge. The event is the World Issues Luncheon which every week invites a guest speaker to speak on a topic or event currently making news. It is informal with all who attend bringing their lunch in with them and just sitting back and listening to the speaker.

The most recent speaker to address the luncheon was Dr. Ronald Cherry. His talk evolved around Politics and the Economy. Dr. Cherry wanted to explain the present U.S. economic situation.

The talk started off with a brief background on the two basic ways of thinking in the business world. The micro view coming out of the 1800's with emphasis placed on incentives, productivity, and getting just rewards for your work. Government policy was at a minimum and the most important aspect of their view was when the economy was looked upon as a living organism bringing in new cells (new companies) and casting out the dead (bankruptcy).

The other view of the business world is the newer, macro perspective. In the macro world, employment was a key to success and the society was to be made riskless for workers. Central planning was conceived as essential.

After the brief background, Dr. Cherry went ahead and applied those concepts to today's problems. Just what are the symptoms of today's problems? Included are inflation, stable or falling levels of productivity, a government deficit, unemployment, and all types of international trade problems.

Three industries taken as an example of failing and in need of help were those of steel, housing, and automobile. It was stated that we have protected these industries from risk and now imports are coming in. We keep pumping money into failing industries and it is Dr. Cherry's opinion that a corporation that has bad managerial operation should be left to die.

It was also brought to light that all industries are not dying. Such industries as computers, farm

CIA Adds Culture To Campus Events

by Leslie Klinefelter

A new cultural alternative to regular campus parties is offered by the Council for International Affairs, better known as the CIA.

The CIA is a revitalized version of the International Club. Robin Borthwick and Barbara Hiem are the coordinators of the new council and hope to promote international awareness and broaden perspectives through different activities the club sponsors.

Their first event will be a wine and cheese party in South's carpeted lounge. A variety of wines and cheese will be served, hopefully accompanied by live entertainment provided by college talent, admission is $1.50. February 12, Margret Ash is playing Japanese instruments and will speak about Japanese music, in Shoemaker Gallery, admission is free.

The CIA hopes to provide alternatives to campus parties "Not just a couple of kegs of beer and a stereo system," described Robin Borthwick. The council also intends to have a St. Patricks Day party March 17, with Irish food and drink.

Events are also planned just for the club members. They would like to visit the art exhibit in Shoemaker and invite Professor Klaus Kipphan to inform them about the prints.

In the spring the club hopes to finance a trip to New York for two nights to see the U.N. They would also like to make a trip to Washington. "We'd like to provide a channel through which people can share their cultural experiences," said Robin Borthwick when describing discussions on international topics they hope to provide.

Barbara Hiem spent a year in Sweden and Robin Borthwick has traveled extensively, each of them intends to provide discussions on their experiences and also hope that some of the exchange students will contribute. During the third meeting Robin Borthwick showed slides of his trip to Afganastan, they would like to continue showing slides of different countries at the meetings.

"We plan to go to Penn State for the international films and go to foreign restaurants there too," said Barbara Hiem. Currently the club has approximately twenty members. "We are a growing club," said Borthwick. Anyone who is interested in the CIA is encouraged to join.

products, chemicals, and heavy equipment are large exporters and economically healthy. I felt Dr. Cherry noted an important fact in that these industries, unlike the three failing industries mentioned above (steel, housing, auto), are not unionized and do not have powerful lobbyists in Washington, D.C.

The answer is not one which can occur over night. Productivity and savings are important and must be emphasized more than they have been the past 40 years. A good example on savings was brought up which showed our decline as compared to Japan. Over the past 15 years, Japan has put aside 35 percent of their GNP for capital reinvestment as compared to the United States' 17 percent. Government and business will have to continue adapting to each other.

The speech was over and questions were raised by some members of the audience. Questions brought up included his feelings on unions, unemployment compensation, and even Richard Nixon as our president again.

Within the hour the talk and questions were over. I personally felt I had learned more about an important issue and was joined by the other students there in giving Dr. Cherry a warm applause. Considering the good atmosphere and interesting talk, I invite all to attend the next World Issues Luncheon. I'm sure you will be glad you did — I am.

metal plate to achieve lighter areas. The rotunda is dedicated to the great architectural printmakers Piranesi and Rossini who creatively idolize Roman architecture.

The South wall of the west wing of Shoemaker brings the viewer into the eighteenth and nineteenth century. The French rococo style is typified by the reproduction of Boucher, but Romantic realism dominates this wall with Lorraine's Landscape, Legro's Protrait of G.F. Watts and Cadmus Fighting the Dragon by Alaux which all capture the viewer's heart.

During the time of these prints, the latest form of printmaking, called lithography was developed. Lithography is done on polished limestone with greasy "crayons" and remains one of the most popular printing techniques because color can often be added.

The final wall of the exhibit begins with the classicism of Maillol and moves through the more abstract prints of the twentieth century. Most impressive of these prints includes Maserell's Images From the Passion of a Man and the expressionism of Beckmann and Picasso. The prevalent theme is one of loneliness and intoxication with the self-apparent in modern society; this is expertly seen in Nacissus by Rabl. Today's emphasis on symbolism seen in Daphnis and Chloe and the Warrior concludes the exhibit in which the viewer must derive the meaning of the print himself, a far cry artistically from the sixteenth century prints.

Off Colored Humor Enjoyed by Many

by Chris Corry

Georg Lichtenberg, an 18th century German physics professor always enjoyed his vists to England and he wanted to take some of that good English common sense and satiric humor back to his staid colleagues. The witty commentaries read by Professor Howard Long on Tuesday, January 20 in the second event of the Masks and Mirrors series, were written by Lichtenberg for that purpose.

Engravings of Hogarth, an English artist and the "ash can painter" of his day were the subject of the commentaries. Professor Long, of the education department, chose two engravings from a set called "A Rakes Progress" to bring to life. For those that aren't sure quite what a rake is, Lichtenberg offers a brief description. "The true Rake (of the male sex, of course) drinks, gambles, whores . . . turns night into day and day into night . . . he ruins innocent creatures who have fallen in love with him . . . (and) he squanders money everywhere."

In the first engraving the Rake's "old, wealthy, stinking miser" of a father has just died, in fact, the corpse can be seen half-hidden in the closet. Proof of his stinginess lies on the floor: a shoe sole apparently cut out of the cover of the Holy Bible.

Young Thomas Rakewell, the Rake, appearing far from bereaved, is holding a few coins out to a formerly innocent, sobbing and pregnant creature as if to say, in Lichtenberg's words, "Here is something for your trouble and kindness." "She is crying in the proper sense of the word" the author notes, "for as one knows, that sex can produce quite another type of tears which seems not so much to give relief from pain as to bring in the pain itself, if it is not readily forthcoming."

Thomas wastes no time putting his father's long-idle money to good use, as the next Plate, entitled "The Finishing Touches" shows. Tom stands, in much improved surroundings (no Bibles on the floor or cadavers in the closet) being waited on by Masters of dancing, boxing, fencing, piano, and french horn. A trophy just won by Toms racehorse, Silly Tom, whose similarity to his master Lichtenberg makes abundantly clear, is being displayed.

Lichtenberg's keen eye misses very little. He picks up every detail and gives it a dry and ribald twist that is apt to fly by unappreciated if one isn't alert.

He comments on the horn players stance, " . . . his hand in his trousers, and having the lower part of his coat buttoned up to hide this." Lichtenberg himself once saw a musician with that same posture, "The position of his hand was unmistakable, for if he altered it when playing piano, he would always return to it at the next forte."

A painting is hung on the wall behind Tom's head. The god Paris sits naked before beautiful goddesses " . . . to think that this Prince, young and vigorous, would have remained like that without giving some sign that he was a man before three naked goddesses who were all intent on pleasing him."

The reading of Lichtenberg's commentaries drew a fair crowd, over fifty people, to Shoemaker Gallery. The next and last Masks and Mirrors evening will be "When a Stranger Calls" to be performed March 11 and 12 in Oller Hall at 8:15.

Art Show A Success

by Nancy Gonlin

The first annual Women's Art Show held on Saturday, January 24, was a great success. The fourteen artists who participated displayed their work in the upstairs lobby of Ellis. Hatti Braun, Lucy Breslin, and Sandy Schultz showed their unique clay work. The portrait sketches were done by Eugenia Siemens and Suzie Brown. Kathy Murphy, Sheri Matheson, and Heidi Ross contributed to the show with their photography. Nancy Bauer's macrame demonstration which began at 1 o'clock lasted well into the afternoon. Another big attraction was Laura Nissel's extraordinary glassblowing pieces. Gail Laughin contributed pen and pencil sketches and Lynanne Schaeffer her oil painting. Dee Ann Nokovich and Lynda Geiss had water color paintings in the show. Dee Ann also displayed her calligraphy talent. A large number of students viewed the art work and were quite impressed with campus talent. Campus Women's Organization sponsored the art show. It was so successful, plans have been made to make it an annual event. Chairpersons were Lynn Goodale and Linda Buchholz.

is too thrilled to discuss your course possibilities. The fourth step, which is optional, is to go to the professor whose class you hope to attend and let him know who you are.

Now that you know what courses you'll be taking, you wait for step five: Registration Day. This involves standing in line for an hour or two until you reach the Ellis Ballroom where you stand in more lines. You run here, you run there and to your dismay and disappointment, you discover that one or even two of your classes have been closed out. Drat! You have no time to repeat steps one to four, you're on your own.

Well, no hassle right? You're in college, you don't need your advisor's signature or professor's okay. But then you find that your other course selections have been closed out. Even the course that you told your roommate you'd never take was, to your astonishment, closed out to you. You've wasted your afternoon already and you're tired so you grab the nearest prof with an open course and sign his little computer card. You leave Ellis, passing the unsuspecting Freshmen who are discussing courses they are planning to take when you know they've already been closed out to juniors.

You go back to your profs about the "useless" courses you've gotten but "there's nothing I can do," he tells you. You're stuck. Sure, you might think yours is a special case, but there are fifty other special cases floating around campus. There is nothing for you to do but complain. Unfortunately, what is needed is some suggestions on how to better the process but you have none. Yes, you are stuck with the courses you've picked and you better enjoy them for the price you're paying . . .

Have a nice term.

Energy Use Questioned

Dear Editor:

In view of next year's tuition hike which, due to rising energy costs will surely partly be going to the campus energy bill and as concerned students we would like to call attention to a number of disturbing factors we have observed on campus.

First of all, we believe that much fuel and money is being wasted in a number of dorms due to antiquated heating systems. Some of these dorms include South, Cloister and Mission House. Would it not perhaps be more efficient in the long run to replace these systems? Comments from the administration would be welcomed in this matter.

A second question we would like to raise concerns the temperature of the hot water heaters on campus. In some dorms (South for example) the hot water is scalding. Would it be possible to lower the temperature, even a decrease of a few degrees would make a remarkable savings of energy.

And thirdly we would like to address the campus community regarding their personal consumption of energy. We can demonstrate our own awareness of the energy problem by simple things like turning off lights which frequently blare all day regardless of the degree of sunshine and by walking to Sheetz's (the fresh air is wonderful). These may seem small measures with respect to the tremendous energy crisis but the aggregate of these small steps is significant. Thank you for listening to us.

Fan in Uproar

Dear Editor:

Last night while attending the Juniata vs. Delaware Valley basketball game, I noticed quite a few professors attending also. When the cheerleaders were introduced, one of the professors stuck her tongue out at them. Obscene hand gestures were also observed.

Why should professors, whom we are supposed to respect, display such poor spirit for the team? In my opinion the cheerleaders are as much a part of the team as the players themselves. By displaying such gestures, this professor has shown no support for our college. Should we respect such actions performed by our elders?

ing each week.

Everyone is welcome to attend these meetings to ask questions about the draft in general, conscientious objection, the Selective Service Law, and anything else of interest about the topic. The most updated information is kept on hand.

The Student Counselors received training from the draft counseling workshop which was presented on campus by the Central Committee on Conscientious Objection (CCCO) earlier this year.

If the meetings on Wednesdays are not convenient, one can talk with any of the trained students on campus. A person can contact Lucy Breslin, Resident Director at Terrace, to ask questions or to get names of students involved who can be contacted for help.

Volunteers Needed to Help Children

Over the last 5 years, a total of 500 walkers, including over 200 university students, have trudged 250 miles from Santa Barbara, California, to Tijuana, Mexico, on the Tortilla Marathon. The annual foot-bruising 10 day Marathon is a fund and consciousness-raising venture held in late June that supports Los Ninos (The Children), a non-profit, international program that works among poor children who live on the U.S.-Mexican Border.

On June 19, 1981, the sixth annual Marathon will leave Santa Barbara with 250 walkers, but this time there will be a major difference — 50 walkers will not be returning. 50 of the walkers will remain at the border — for 2 years — to participate in a project aimed at alleviating the misery suffered by an estimated 200,000 ninos who live along the 2,000 mile border. The project is called the Border Development Project and its initial goal is the establishment of 10 operation centers, called Justice Houses, along the entire border.

The houses are needed to respond to a crisis, according to Los Ninos director Paul Weiss. Weiss states that, "In Tijuana alone, hundreds of children die of starvation every year less than 5 miles from the city limits of San Diego. These children suffer from a severe lack of food, they are sheltered in miserable shacks infested with rodents and parasites, and they have absolutely no access to medical care. Individuals selected for the Project will make a 2 year commitment, and provide or raise support of at least $100 monthly (for room and board).

Shep Speaks

There's a new program to promote creativity here at Juniata. It's a contest to see who can come up with the most original Intramural team name. And there have been some real winners so far. When I.M.'s first started no one thought they would do much more than give members of the college community a chance to relieve a little frustration, but now they serve all kinds of different functions.

Check out some of the names that the teams have come up with, and how they reflect the personality of the team members. What would you think of a bunch of guys who call themselves MX², or The Squintleys; what about the Space Cadets, or Spiders from Mars.

Over the years there have been some I.M. dynasties, not all of them winners, but they stick in our minds. We all remember The Zoo, and the Station. The Pack has been around in various sports since I've been here.

Coach Tom Rogish has done a fantastic job of providing something for everyone. The new sports that they seem to invariably come up with are always a hit. Everyone I talk to has enjoyed the introduction of Ultimate Frisbee, and Indoor Soccer. Both games are fast, exciting and easy to learn.

About 80% of the student body is involved in one of the various I.M. sports. Winter is a time when most of us appreciate I.M.'s more than ever. Blustery weather usually makes outdoor activity impossible, and the relief is welcome.

By scheduling a wide variety of activities the I.M. directors try to provide something for anyone who wants to get involved. Just like anything else the key to enjoying I.M.'s is that you have to get involved.

If your sole motivation for playing is to win a tee-shirt, well that's your choice. The tee-shirts are a nice idea, but sometimes I think they take the fun out of playing.

So if you like to have a good time, get some friends together and pick up a team. You don't have to be good, that's part of the fun. If you take the level of play as important, there are the intense I.M. leagues, like "A" Basketball, and mens softball, but in general most people are content to have a good time.

I think the best thing about I.M.'s is that they're flexible. If you have an idea for a new sport all you have to do is ask. If the interest is there, no problem. Just this year two new sports were added to the I.M. agenda and both are a success. So whatever you like, from volleyball to frisbee, get involved.

Over the weekend the Women's Basketball team lost to Frostburg. The Indians were trailing most of the game but kept coming back. They were down by as many as ten points but did not give up. In the last two minutes they had a chance to win. They trailed by only one point but due to some unfortunate turnovers and a couple questionable calls they lost by five, 61-56.

Michele Wingryn was the high scorer with 20 points. She made some very important shots near the end of the game and shot 60% from the field during the game. Two other Indians scored in double figures. Julie George had 13 points and Judy Pepoy had 12. This same pair led in rebounding with 8 apiece. Judy also had 8 steals and 5 assists.

The Indians are 1-2 in sectional play and 3-8 overall. Their next game is January 27 at Pitt-Johnstown and their next home game is January 29 against Kings at 7:00.

Grapplers Happy at Home

by Paul Miller

The Juniata Grapplers won two out of three matches on Saturday in Memorial Gym. They beat Messiah and Kings but lost to Indiana University of Pa.

Against Kings the Indians won five bouts, lost two and tied three. The winners were: Bob Gay, with a pin; Jim Kiely, with a pin; Jim Klein, by decision; Chris Young, with a pin; and Rich Shuck, by decision. Chris Kretschamer, Tom Swavely and Joel Beach tied. The final tally was 30-18.

Coach Berrier sacrificed the IUP match to save his more experienced wrestlers for Messiah. The Indians were smothered, 41-12.

But the strategy worked as our mat men beat Messiah 26-22. Kevin Rhoad, Kyle Kaulbach and Kieth Sherbine won by forfeit. Chris Young and Ricch won by decision and Dave Sloan tied.

Besides beating Juniata, IUP won the quadrangular meet by defeating Kings 30-16 and tying Messian 21-21.

On the season the tribe is now 7-4-1. Chris Young is still undefeated with a 13-0-1 record. Kieth Sherbine is also having an exceptional year with a 11-3 record.

Men Keep on Winning

by Doug Wallace

The Indians are on the warpath. After their win over the Scranton Royals, the tribe went on to defeat the Frostburg Bobcats 89-79, and the Delaware Valley Aggies by an 82-75 score.

In the Frostburg game Juniata broke out to a quick lead as Dan Feruck and Andy Witmer got hot. The Indians went into half-time with a 16 point lead, and then cruised to a 10 point win. Individually for the Indians Feruck had an outstanding game scoring 26 points on 9 of 11 shooting from the field and a perfect 8 of 8 from the foul line. The tribe also had four others hitting double figures with Witmer scoring 17 on 7 of 12 shooting, Tim Nagle had 16 on 6 of 12 shooting, Dan Frasier with 14 on 5 of 10 shooting, and Joe Chuba had 10 on 6 of 6 shooting from the line. As a team the Indians shot 52% from the field going 31 for 59. Also in the game Paul Kardish scored his first 2 varsity points as he hit 2 foul shots.

Last Saturday against the Delaware Valley Aggies the Indians broke out to a 12-0 lead and then breezed to an 82-75 victory. Tommy Deep had a great game for the tribe hitting 9 of 12 from the field and finishing with 22 points. Dan Frasier, Dan Feruck, and Andy Witmer also hit double figures scoring 16, 11, and 13 points respectively. Witmer also hit the boards for 15 rebounds, while Joe Chuba chipped in with 10. Deep and Scott Lehigh each had 5 assists for the Indians.

Let's hope the Indians can keep the streak going. Their next game is this Saturday night against Albright.

The team received one serious setback when high scoring forward Tim Nagle of Altoona broke his ankle. Other members of the team seem to be picking up the slack though, as Joe Chuba and Andy Witmer have both turned in outstanding performances of late.

The team has been playing consistently well since the Scranton game and coach Pat Frazier should be proud of the results. The Indians are now a respectable 5-7, and their future looks optimistic.

Tom Deep, another reclamation project, had a fantastic night against Del-Val, and we hope to see him get more playing time in the future.

Governor Visits J.C.

HB&I hold dinner

by Ron Renzini

Governor Dick Thornburgh visited the Juniata campus, Wednesday, Jan. 28 to address the 23rd annual meeting of the Huntingdon Business and Industry group. Huntingdon Business and Industry, Inc. has a membership of over 300 individuals and companies in Huntingdon county. Established in 1958, the HB&I serves as Huntingdon's official Chamber of Commerce. This meeting was the most successful ever in terms of attendance, with a capacity crowd of over 410 persons attending.

Dr. Andrew Murray, Juniata campus minister, delivered the invocation. Welcoming the guests was Dr. Frederick M. Binder, President of Juniata.

Dinner was then served and the governor granted the press some time for an interview. The questions asked by the media surrounded the topic of the day: state liquor stores being given to private owners. Earlier in the day, while in Philadelphia, the Governor announced his plans to let the states' 725 liquor stores become private.

Questions raised during the interview included why the state stores had been turned over to the public and how the state would absorb the loss of revenue from releasing the stores.

The governor stated that he wanted a competitive free enterprise system so that the people of this state could know that the government is run for the benefit of its people.

Answering a question about a loss of revenue, the Governor stated that the state store had been a failure over the past years. Revenue has been rising, but historically the profit is down (about 25%). The loss of the state's share of revenue will be $30 million per year, which is not devastating when the whole state budget of $12 billion a year is looked at. According to a report done by the Wharton School of Business, an increase of revenue and profits is likely to occur because of in-

Three Injured In Lesher

Visitor Assaults Residents

by Ron Renzini

Last Saturday, January 31, a disturbance was reported at Lesher Dormitory. Called to the scene were the Huntingdon Police, Campus Security, and two Huntingdon ambulances. Three residents of Lesher were taken to the hospital where they were treated and released. One man was taken away by the Huntingdon police, arraigned, and later released on bail.

The disturbance was the culminating point of a series of occurrences Saturday night. While at a private party, some men (visitors at Juniata College) were involved in an exchange of words with some resident Lesher girls. After a few moments, one of the men swung and hit a girl he was talking to. Another girl was hit as was the Resident Assistant on duty when she tried to intervene in the disturbance. By this time both the Huntingdon police and campus security had been notified, along with the ambulances.

The man was taken to the Huntingdon police station where he was arraigned and released on bail. As of this printing, the school reports that they are still pursuing the matter.

Beeghly Will Be Open Late

by John Kelly

The Beeghly library will be open on Friday and Saturday nights to 11 p.m., according to Dr. Eyman, director of the libraries. However, the science library will still be closed earlier on weekends. The opening of Beeghly at night was made possible through the efforts of Student Government and the office of the President. The new hours went into effect January 20th.

There were many reasons for the initial cutback of library hours. The college libraries increased the number of hours in which they were open in the fall to 95 hours a week. The additional hours on Friday and Saturday evenings were added as an experiment at the request of students who felt the campus needed a quiet place for study on weekend evenings. While the experiment showed that only about 1/3 as many students used the library on those nights, it was

R.A. Applications Now Available

by Maureen Morrissey

Susan Twombly announced that applications for Resident Assistant are now available from Resident Directors and at the Student Services office in Founders. Completed applications must be returned to the Student Services office by Friday, February 13.

According to Twombly, any student is eligible and a specific grade point average is not required. However, she did explain that R.A.'s should have certain qualities: the ability to get along and talk with people, sensitivity, and leadership. An R.A. should also be commited to the job and have enough time to fulfill his or her duties. He or she should also gain the respect of the residents of the hall and be able to organize activities and projects for them. Previous work experience is also considered.

An R.A. does not have to be an "All-American" type, said Twombly. An R.A. is "not conservative necessarily." "We are not looking for any particular stereotype," she said.

After applications are submitted, the selection procedure will begin. Evaluation forms will be sent to ten randomly selected students. There will also be two general meetings for the applicants to answer questions. They will be held on Monday, February 16 and on Tuesday, February 17 at 7:00 pm in South Lounge.

Three interviews are also contained in the selection procedure.

News Briefs:

President to turn public attention from hostages to economy

President Reagan announced last week that he does not want a long investigation into the hostage crisis because it would turn the nation's attention away from the economy, which is his number one priority.

"We think it's really important to turn the page as far as the hostages are concerned and get the focus of the public attention back on priority number one," a key Reagan adviser said.

In Other News . .

President Reagan will speak tonight to the nation on how to tame the "inflationary monster." He will outline specific information on how to do this, and predicted a "long, difficult road" before the economy returns to normal. Gas prices are increasing because of President Reagan's decision to decontrol crude oil. For instance, in Texas gas stations predict changes up to 3 cents per gallon at present. Estimates for the future range from an increase of a few cents to 15 cents per gallon.

EDITORIAL

It's that time of year again. Those monotonous months in January and February when it sometimes seems as if the only thing distinguishing this week from last, or today from yesterday is the numbers on the digital watch.

The fall term excitement of being back has long since evaporated, the holiday season is over and done, and May is still too unreal to be anything but one more addition to the pile of "Too-Good-to Come-True's, along with socialized medicine and Deans list.

This is the time when people start developing overwhelming urges to stuff a towel and shorts in a daypack and head for Florida. It's when those fortunate enough to have vehicles don't dare face the "Killer Roads", and all the would-be outdoor athletes are forced inside to share the gym with two hundred other stir-crazy students. This is when room-mate abuse doubles and blood-pressure climbs.

It's now, during the period after Christmas break and before February break that it is essential that there be an abundance of planned activities and events. A time and place when students can meet, relax, unwind, maybe even do something a little different. Just a couple of hours to forget about the six chapters that have to be read for the hourly on Monday, not to mention the paper due.

Center Board has done a good deal this year, as well they should with a 100% increase in their budget over last year. Winter term, though, is when events are most needed, and this year as usual, they seem to be lacking. The old traditional events have gone on as usual, Casino night, films, Artist series, but new programming, enough to justify a doubled budget, is absent.

Student organizations such as Center Board are composed of students who are subject to the same mid-winter apathy and work-load as everyone else. They need the encouragement and initiative of the student body. Center Board and it's committees always welcome ideas and people willing to help put them into effect.

Many factors unite to make this one of the hardest periods in the academic year; post holiday depression, cold weather that keeps many inside, and bad road conditions that keep many others campus-bound, these are not anyone's fault. An organization, though, whose goal it is to provide recreation to the student body, should try to take these foreseeable conditions into account and plan as diverse and concentrated a schedule of events as possible.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Joe Schall

Dragnet, 1964: This is the city — Juniatingdon, Pennsylvania. Population 3,000. I'm here to question the Juniata College president and a student who filed a complaint. The student is accusing Juniata of stifling his academic pursuits through a cutback on the number of hours the library is open. Should be an easy case. Student vs. college lawsuits always end the same. This is no matter for a federal authority like me. But I'm a cop, not a government. My job is to serve the people. I sigh and start my work.

10:00 AM: Interview with college president — Dr. Tilden. Nice man. He tells me to call him Arnie. He blames the cutback of library hours on the new law which raised minimum wage to $3.36 per hour. He says Juniata had to cut back on many luxuries to stay in business. Sounds reasonable. Arnie tells me to wander around campus and I'll see that it's a happy place. I ask him about the student who filed the complaint and Arnie calls him a "misplaced radical." He tells me confidentially that they've been trying to railroad the student out of school. Sounds reasonable. College is no place for a radical. Arnie tells me about his own interests. In his spare time he sells eveready batteries and subscriptions to Money Management magazine. I like him. I buy some batteries and a magazine subscription.

11:00 AM: Interview with radical student — John Do. A typical college room. Four beds and hundreds of science books. When I arrive one of Do's roommates has to leave the room — only four people allowed in one room at a time. New oxygen ration rule. Do reads me a list of complaints. I raise one eyebrow. Complaint Number 1: all electrical lights out at 10:00 PM. I ask Do if they are allowed to study after 10:00 and he says yes, but they have to use flashlights. Sounds reasonable. Complaint Number 2: Showers may only be used between 9:00 and 10:00 AM. I ask Do what's wrong with that and he claims he has class then. He does smell bad, so I assume he's telling the truth. He reads the rest of the complaints and they are all equally absurd. I hold my nose and he hands me the list. I put it in my pocket and tell him I'll study it carefully and make sure the paper ends up in the right place. I note in my logbook that Do is probably an idiot. But I'm a cop, not a psychiatrist. I'm not concerned with people's minds.

11:45 AM: South Dorm. Toilet. I have to go. I take care of my business and reach for the roll of toilet paper. There's no toilet paper. Underneath the empty dispenser I notice a small piece of paper: "This toilet should only be used between 8:00 and 10:00 AM and 8:15 and 10:00 PM." I gasp. I have broken the rule. I'm a cop, so I'll have to turn myself in to Arnie later. But right now I have to wipe. I remember John Do's list of complaints. I use it. I don't flush because I don't want anyone to catch me. I leave quickly. My fly is open.

Clarification

Dear Editor:

In this week's "Along Muddy Run" I'm trying to make a minor point through a major distortion. In many ways I'm beating a very dead horse. It's simply an experiment in exteme absurdity. My apologies to anyone who reads it as a serious attack. It isn't. Also, for some ideas in the article, I owe thanks to a special friend and the girl's basketball team. Their names have been witheld to protect the innocent.

Registration Options

Dear Editor:

The Letter to the Editor last week which raised the issue of course closing highlights a serious question with which the faculty and administration is constantly faced. Some reasons for closing courses are unavoidable, e.g., room size, laboratory stations available, and prerequisites. On the other hand, I agree that the number of course closings at registration should be kept to an absolute minimum.

There have been fewer problems in recent years in this area, but that is no help to the individual

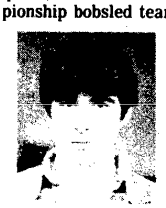
Q: Are there sufficient winter-term extracurricular activities?

Arron Abdul — No, I feel that we need a barrel jumping team.

Swanny — The present activities are adequate, but I still feel the need for a championship bobsled team.



Martman — No, I suggest forming a skin-diving club.

Dave Headly — Intramurals, yes. The movie program is adequate. There should be more social activities — i.e. dinners, parties, etc.

12:15 PM: Composure regained. I'm hungry. I go in Elli Hall to the cafeteria door but it's locked. On the door is a list of meal hours. This explains it. Lunch is only served M, W, F. Dinner is served T, Th, S. Breakfast is served every day. Sounds reasonable. Iowa breakfast studies prove that breakfast is the most important meal. But I'm a cop, and I've never been to Iowa. I'm still hungry. I see a snack bar sign and follow the arrow. I order a super-doggie and fries. Lots of ketchup. Not bad. I owe $4.50 for the meal. I ask the lady why it costs so much and she says they charge extra for the ketchup. Sounds reasonable.

12:45 PM: Walk to the library. On the way I wait five minutes to let a line of people pass. They walk in rows, barefoot, and carry a few clothes on their backs. I ask a nearby student playing racquet-ball against a tree trunk who the people are. He tells me they're the Taylor Highland refugees. They're being kicked out of town to make room for more college students. Sounds reasonable. When I make it to the library I see that it closes every day at noon. The door is locked. I peer inside a window and shrewdly observe that the entire library is empty. It is suddenly crystal clear to me. John Do really is an idiot. He's totally illogical. The shortened hours can't be hurting anyone because no one is even using the library. Sounds reasonable. Any child could figure it out. I should never have been sent on this silly mission. But I'm a cop, not a student. I do what I'm told.

A Round of One Acts Starting Tomorrow

Remember the one act plays presented last winter that inspired all to laugh and cry along with the actors? Well, the time has come again with talent and energy equal to, if not better than, those performed last year. The plays have been especially picked for their ability to be presented in the round, which means the audience will be seated on the stage. This will enable the audience to experience, in closer proximity, emotions emitted from characters who struggle and smile through life with hardships and joys familiar to all. Curtain time has been set at 8:15, on February 6 and 7. An admission cost of 50 cents will be charged to help cover the costs incurred in the production.

The first two plays of the evening were written by Corrine Sacker and received the OBIE award (Off Broadway equivalent of the Tony's) for 1975. Breakfast, Lunch and Dinner portrays in a light manner the struggle of three characters and their search for identity. In Bits and Pieces the main character searches for parts of her dead husband's body. The audience should keep in mind that the play switches between past and present scenes with the only indicator of the change being lighting differences. According to Professor Goehring, who is the director of both plays, Bits and Pieces is a follow up of Breakfast, Lunch and Dinner, adding its own message that you cannot really ever possess anything that was never yours in the first place.

The evening will be concluded with the performance of Mimosa Pochica by Cort Dempster. John Kuriyan, a student of Juniata, directs this bitter-sweet drama about two lonely people whose marriage is unravelling but who cannot reach out to each other.

This year's cast for the One Acts includes: Soraya Morgan, Richard Guisman, Dave Miller, Pat Phibbs, Allison Keller, David Merwin, Barb Erb, Diane Weaver, Tony Calderelli, Joe Schall, Gero Decker, Penny Cameron, Duane Silvertri, and Angela Dredden. The stage managers for each play are Cathy Pacca, Cindy Steele, and Cherie Winget. The plays are being produced by Professor Goehring's Play Production Class with all student crews working on set design, props, publicity, make-up and lighting.

Winter Boredom Cause of Destruction

by Leslie Klinefelter

During the first few weeks in January when the weather was sub-zero, professors noted an apathetic attitude among their students and residence halls suffered damages; abuse of more than fire extinguishers and broken windows. More damages occured in those two weeks than in September, October, November and December combined.

"January is normally slower," stated Wayne Justham director of programming. "We had very little damage during the early part of the year, suddenly in January we had one or two bad weekends, perhaps because of the fridged weather combined with no snow."

The director of programming felt that it is not a lack of programming causing the boredom and subsequent damage. He cited that there was Marathon weekend and Las Vegas night the first two weeks of school. There is less programming than fall or springs terms, but students are not always responsive to the programming available. Another factor involved are the programmers themselves. "Students do the programming, they have bad months also," Justham explained.

Dean Tilden stated, "Everyone burns out over exams and there is a need for stimulation in the winter during sub-zero weather." Tilden also expounded on today's electronic society, "Students today are raised on slick well developed entertainment and are easily bored."

Another theory about boredom today comes from Ardarey, a specialist on society and boredom, who states that man today can afford to be bored. It's a luxury that has been acquired through technology," cited Dean Tilden.

Due to these various causes students have a hard time entertaining themselves during cold winter months when the programmed events aren't to their taste. Residence halls are taking the initiative and arranging smaller parties as students are expressing boredom with large theme parties. Cloister had a Superbowl party

Threeater to Thrill With "Weird Tales"

THREEATER Brings "Weird Tales" to Juniata College.

A horrific treat is coming to Juniata College this Friday, Feb. 13th. THREEATER, a traveling acting company of three young performers from Maine, is arriving to perform "Weird Tales". The evening of horror stories is sponsored by Juniata College Theatre Dept. and will take place in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m.

Subtitled "An Evening in the Presence of the Unthinkable", THREEATER's "Weird Tales" is a readers' theater presentation of gothic, horror, humor and mystery stories selected from the works of Poe and other masters of the macabre. The evening is a homage to the spirit of the bizarre, the supernatural and the unworldly which animated the famous magazine, Weird Tales. This pulp from the 1930s and 40s published the early works of a large number of American writers of macabre fiction. Among these were Ray Bradbury, H.P. Lovecraft and Robert E. Howard.

The readings of "Weird Tales" take place in the context of a meeting of a secret society of sorcerers who gather each year to hear the stories in the dreaded Necronomicon, a tome of dark wisdom passed down through the centuries.

The performance chamber is candlelit, and the actors wear the long robes which symbolize the sorcerers' ancient order. The audience is encouraged to dress appropriately.

THREEATER is Peter Crockett, Masha Stackman and Gordon Talley — a professional acting company of three. They reside on a wind-swept farm in the White Mountains of Maine and tour from this gothic setting to perform their plays at communities, colleges and universities throughout the northeastern United States and abroad.

After seeing one of their performances in Scotland, the BCC called THREEATER "one of the most interesting groups on the Fringe of the Edinburgh International Festival". A college newspaper proclaimed, "THREEATER bewitched its audience as it presented its repertory of 'Weird Tales'."

The members of THREEATER have varied backgrounds. Peter Crockett has been a professional musician. He studied acting in London, where he was a member of Kingsley Hall, a therapeutic commune begun by British psychiatrist R.D. Laing.

Masha Stackman grew up in Panama. She has studied with Viola Spolin, originator of theater games and other improvisational acting techniques.

Gordon Talley was raised on a carnival which toured the U.S. He has acted in Paris, and he holds a degree in directing from the Yale University School of Drama.

Other plays in THREEATER's current repertory of contemporary works include "Mulla!", a story theater comedy about the Persian mystical clown, Mulla Nasrudin.

Tickets are available at the Ellis information desk, and will be sold the night of the performance. The price of admission to the Juniata College community is $1.00 and $2.00 to the general public.

And bring a friend. You may not want to walk home alone!

Blazina Named To Post

William M. Blazina Jr., owner of Blazina Communications, Mapleton Depot, has been named instrument technician at Juniata College.

A 1963 Cedar Cliff High School graduate, Blazina received a B.S. degree from the Pennsylvania State University in 1975.

He is also a graduate of the Electronics Institute in Harrisburg, the U.S. Navy Electronics Technician School at Great Lakes, Ill., and the U.S. Air Force Precision Measurement Electronics School at Lowery AFB, Denver, Colo.

In his Juniata post, Blazina will be responsible for the repair and maintenance of all equipment and instrumentation in the acclaimed Brumbaugh Science Center, of all audio-visual equipment, and of the college language laboratory, among other facilities.

He had operated Blazina Communications since September, 1979, having earlier served with Double Deuce Communications, Mount Union, and Paul L. Lenig Two-Way Radio, Dillsburg.

He has also taught at the Electronics Institute and served for two years with the U.S. Navy Mobile Technical Unit 8 out of Newport, R.I.

Blazina holds an advanced class amateur radio license and a first class FCC radiotelephone operator's license. His diverse experience also covers electronics metrology, VHF and UHF communications, radar, television, and test equipment repair and calibration.

student who is closed out of a course that he/she needs in a particular term. There is a variety of options which can be pursued to minimize, if not eliminate, this problem. The Registrar and I, with the support of President Binder, are working toward this end. In the meantime, I would like to encourage all students who have difficulty scheduling necessary courses during registration to see the Registrar or me before the beginning of the following term. Options are often available so that curricular needs can be met.

Sincerely,

Farewell Extended

TO THE: Officers of Student Government and Student Organizations

It is with mixed feelings that I have resigned my position as Accounts Payable Clerk from the Supporting Staff of Juniata College. I have served in this capacity for almost 17 years and have made many friends.

My husband has been promoted by the Pa. Game Commission to Superintendent of the Game Commission Training School located near Brockway, Pa.; we will be moving to that area in the near future.

It has been a real pleasure working with the officers of the Student Government and various student organizations. You have always been very cooperative, in every way I have tried to be of service to you.

I would like to wish all students of Juniata College success and happiness in all your endeavors after graduation from Juniata. It is not always an easy pathway of life in our working world today, but with determination and a will to go forward, success can be yours.

I will always be proud that I have been a part of the College's Supporting Staff, and especially to serve the students; our real purpose in being here.

Thank you
Jane Furry
